Well. John's got a change of heart. All because he's been abroad. And look into things. And learned. What all of us did. Who have been there. That there isn't any trouble. That is, real or serious trouble. For the industry at all. From over there. And he's man enough. To come out. And say so. Elsewhere. In the little old paper. Today. It's worth reading.

Smart men change their minds. Only idiots insist on always thinking the same way.

Thanks. DANNY.

First Charnas Dinner for Lichtman Held at Pittsburgh—Discuss Contracts
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Pittsburgh—"Watch your contracts. Be careful what you sign. Ever mind whether they are uniform contracts or any other kind of contracts."
This was the advice given by Mike Charnas of Clarietto to nearly 150 Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia exhibitors at the dinner given by Harry Charnas of the Federated Exchange to President William Penn Hotel on Saturday night, following a statement by the director of THE FILM DAILY to the gathering that a uniform contract could probably be agreed upon in New York within the next month. Everyone added that they would help in any way that he might require, and he would appreciate the "confidence and co-operation.

The slogan of the Hays organization was definitely manifested at the dinner, where the exhibitors heard Al Lichtman and also later saw rich men's wives of the first of the releases of his new organization. Lichtman spoke of independence and back to the early days of the industry to demonstrate that he always believed in independence. He told of the plans of his new organization, incidentally mentioning that before he decided to start this, that he had been offered important positions by first National, Goldwyn and Universal. Among the other speakers were W. A. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News, Robert E. Harrington, of the Motion Picture World; Harry Boynton, editor, Exhibitors Trade Review; William Breuer, Otis Photographe Co., and Fred Harrington, of the M. P. T. O., of Western Pennsylvania. Ike Silverman acted as toastmaster.

Action of Government May Force
Some Independents Out of Business

Federal Authorities Backed by Deputy Sheriffs Invade Offices of Several Concerns in Effort to Collect Back Taxes—Total Amount Involved Over $1,000,000

A number of the more independent exchanges dealing in state rights are threatened, they say, with "being put out of business" as a result of the action of the Internal Revenue Department. Treasury officials backed by deputy sheriffs have been in the offices of a number of these concerns during the past few days. They are making efforts to collect the 5 per cent tax on all sales made from May, 1919, to Jan. 1, 1922.

The amount involved is said to be over $1,000,000.

Government Action a Surprise
Although ever since the Christie case developed some time ago, many of the independent operators have been apprehensive of the action of the Government during the end of last week and yesterday came as a surprise. A very important state rights distributor walked into his office and found a deputy sheriff calmly awaiting his arrival and notifying him that unless his taxes of $50,000 were paid, the sheriff would step in and seize the business. The way that operator got busy was something well worth seeing. He sold his cutter than he has for many months.

Supreme Court Justice Lydon has dismissed for failure to prosecute a suit by Frank M. Sanford and Lorain C. McHenry against the Exclusive Features Inc., for $50,000 damages. Independents Hit

Harry G. Kosch, journey for Independent Producers and Distributors so, when asked yesterday what the organization intended to be, said that a brief would be filed with the Treasury Department but it obviously its contents could not be discussed.

It is said that Educational Films, Inc., will be taxed for a quarter of a million. Ayres is said to be in the neighborhood of $50,000. Warner others over $50,000 and others in proportion. In reference to this Harry Kosch said yesterday that if these taxes must be paid as they are assessed, a large number of independent operators will be forced out of business; that their actual profits during the period mentioned do not meet the amount of the tax, much less the $750,000 that they had to cover.

The provision of the tax contained the Revenue Act of 1918 known as section 906, is as follows:

"That on and after the 1st day of May, 1919, any person engaged in the business of renting or licensing exhibition positive motion picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise in respect to carrying on such business equal to 5 per centum of the total rentals received from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owns such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 5 per centum of the rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. If any such person, prior to December 6, 1919, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or license of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited, if any such person, prior to December 6, 1919, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or license of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which such contract is to be executed, if such a film is exhibited for profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessor or license shall, in lieu of the lessor or lessee, pay so much of such tax as it is not so remitted to be added to the contract price."

In connection the Treasury Department has made the following rulings:

This applies to contracts with a dealer, exhibitor, or exhibitor for the sale or lease of moving picture films. The term "dealer" as not refer to or include a purchaser for his own use, unless such use in the manufacture or production of another article intended for sale. A foreign government, or a state or any political subdivision thereof, buying or leasing an article for its own use is not a dealer, nor in the case of moving picture films is it deemed an exhibitor or exhibitors. This section permits an adjustment of the tax between the manufacturer and dealer, but it does not affect the liability of the manufacturer to return and pay the tax to the government. (Regulations, No. 44, Art. 37.)

Looked for The Best Smiles

Racine, Wis.—Masked men traveling around the town in an autonomous, photographing attractive smiles comprised part of the exploitation on "Smiling Through." It was done in cooperation with the muralist and the Bijou, which was playing the production profited by the 200 inches of positive prints.

Offered Scenario Prize

Tulsa, Okla.—Offering an award to the person living here with substance for a comedy to be enacted by local talent, Manager W. Smith of the Rialto around the corner, arranged the rival columns of New York." The Tribune helped in the stunts and about 25 scripts were submitted.

Offered Ticket Prizes

"Oklahoma City—When the Folly played Ruth Roland in "The Timber Queen," Manager Robert Hutchinson went after prospective patrons in the following manner:

A full-page advertisement was carried in the Oklahoma Advance and a notice was placed in the local columns. The notice told of an offer of $10 in Ticket Prizes for the best essay on Ruth Roland. After inserting this notice Hutchinson received over one thousand essays from children and there were fifteen hundred of the persons who expected the Folly the first day of the Folly serial. Manager Hutchinson also distributed the "Timber Queen" wooden whistle which was built on a truck.

"Stole" Advertising

Newburgh, N. Y.—When Gilbert Gooch played "Blood and Sand" at Cohen's Opera House, he was confronted with a problem. Local authorities are rather strict about outdoor advertising and the bus lines have pretty high rates, but Josephson got his think-tank working and hired a negro to carry a window card. He was instructed to say that he was delivering it if stopped. During his numerous rides, he held it in a manner that made it plainly visible. The cost of this was $150 in bus fares.

Short, business-like letters sent to secretaries of clubs listed in the city directory, telling that the demand for tickets was very great and offering to set aside blocks of seats resulted in 16 organizations taking advantage of the offer, while the notices placed on bulletin boards around town amounted to lost free advertising. The negro who rode the buses also paraded about in the costume of a toreador and attempted to put the car filled with little girls into a circus crowd. A carefully decorated lobster and other stunts rounded out the exploitation program.

Pathé's President Likely to Be Bernard Benson—Elmer L. Pearson, Vice President, New General Manager

The report published yesterday that Saul Brunet has resigned as President of Pathé was accepted as a distinct surprise to the industry.

Immediately there was conjecture as to his successor. While officials of Pathé refused to discuss the matter as expected that Bernard Benson, a vice-president of the corporation, will become president and that Elmer L. Pearson will be made a vice-president in addition to being general manager of the organization.

Inasmuch as Mr. Benson represents the banking firm of Merrill, Lynch & Co., it is anticipated that the work of handling the large Pathe organization will fall upon Pearson's shoulders. Mr. Benson giving his time almost exclusively to the more important executive problems.

Brunet's Future Plans? The future plans of Paul Brunet are sure to be of interest to the many who have followed his career in America for so long. Some months ago it was exclusively reported in this publication that Brunet might resign as president of Pathé in the near future. (Continued on Page 2)

Pathe Exchange after he reached France was the early part of the summer. Brunet has long been closely associated with Charles Pathe, the head of the big foreign Pathe Corporation. It would not be surprising to find Brunet made president of the French organization, nor would it be surprising to find some interesting developments on the other side following this move.

Those who know Brunet say that he is a Frenchman by nature principally from the fact that he lives on the other side. It was anticipated that Brunet would visit this country, bringing with him Charles Pathe, sometime this fall.

An Interesting Lobby

Newark, N. J.—When the Bradford played “The Storm,” Manager D. J. Stephens started by running a full page ad in the Star-Eagle and then concentrated on his lobby. In the interior was built a scenic cut-out effect reproducing snow-clad mountains. The box office was transformed into a log cabin flanked by lobby walls covered with snow effects. It made a pretty display and made them come in, for the impression of coolness in warm weather was quite inviting.

Serial Story Did It

Dallas, Tex.—One of the widest exploitation aids ever given any local showing of a picture was its recording “The Masquerader” during its run at the Hope. The Dallas Times-Herald carried a serialization of the story and had over half the space in the show, the trucks simply carrying the sign to begin reading “The Story.” No mention was made of a motion picture until the display advertising actually announced it, and that time all Dallas was so well aware of “The Story” that it was like telling a farmer that Henry Ford makes a serviceable automobile.

Artist Attracted Attention

St. Louis—Mike Vogel made them stop and take notice during the past week when he installed an artist on a scaffold at Sixth Street and Washington Avenue and had him paint signs boosting the run of “Blood and Sand” at the Skosras Bros. New Grand Central West End Lyric and Capitol. A young man attired in a bull-fighting outfit impersonated Rodolph Valentino. At times it was difficult for the first night to get the good publicity customers. It is estimated that approximately a quarter of a million passers-by viewed the stunt. Of course there were many repeaters but a goodly portion of the residents were reached.

Trombone Tunes Got Them

Lexington, Ky.—A ballyhoo artist with a sign on his back combined a vaudeville novelty with his street strolling when he appeared to exploit “Fools First.” At the Ad Aead, Manager Henry Eger, who was approached by the man saw the novelty in his act after he had rattled off the names of several dozen popular airs on his trombone. He was widely advertised. His odd make-up and costumed character identified him at once and he played any tune that was called for on his trombone. In two days he became one of the best known characters in Lexington. Inasmuch as he was constantly advertising the theatre and First National Bank, the publicity all around. This man is touring the country and will probably be heard from again.

WHY RUN ANY RISK
The production of a motion picture involves costs in the thousands of dollars. Why risk the success of that feature by putting it in the hands of poor positive prints?

No longer is there the expectation that the output for good prints is too great. Our rates for the highest grade of print are the same as for a feature that does not cost as much.

Our low rates are possible because we are experts, not because we use the most to-date, scientific laboratory equipment. We are the famous TUBE SYSTEM which insures absolutely perfect prints.

Telephone Bryant 1939 and ask how low these rates are.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Cleveland—Before a gathering of over four hundred exhibitors, their wives and members of their families the series of dinners tendered by Harry Charnas of the Standard Film Service to Al Lichtman came to an unusually satisfactory end with the dinner at the Carlton Terrace in Cleveland Wednesday night.

Addresses were made by the editors of the various trade publications who accompanied the party, by Al Lichtman and Fred Desberg of the Loew Enterprises, Desberg being the speaker of the proposed uniform contract suggested that someone inform those preparing this document that some provision be made whereby the exhibitor was protected from film companies who, after selling an exhibitor a series of productions failed to deliver them.

After dinner the Lichtman production "Rich Men's Wives" was shown at the Allen Theater to the assembled exhibitors and their friends.

Cohen on Distribution
Raps Present Method at Convention of M. P. T. O. of New Hampshire and Massachusetts
"Methods in the distribution of pictures now in vogue lead to needless waste and excessive costs" said Sydney S. Cohen, President of the Massachusetts Theaters Owners Convention of the New Hampshire and Massachusetts Theater Owners held this week at the Arlington Hotel in Boston. Continuing, Cohen said:

"The system of independent effort in picture play making by denying to the independent producer an opportunity to sell his product to the public and constitutes the greatest menace now facing the industry.

"Present distribution systems are antiquated and must be changed so that the cost of handling pictures will be reduced and independent producers given an opportunity to compete on a plane with the majors. In this relation, directed against the independent producer, must be seen and absolutley a square deal in all transactions of the processes.

Samuel E. Fink has filed a judgment by default for $4,047 against Francis X. Bushman in the Supreme Court on a note given to J. Robert Rubin on March 3, 1919.

In a suit of the Powers Film Products Co. against the Nicholas Kessel Laboratories in which a judgment for $2,784 was obtained, an execution, which is unsatisfied, has been filed in the County Clerk's office.

The litigation between Horace Goldin and Clarion Photoplays over the exhibition by the latter of a film exposing the secret of Goldin's vaudeville act, "Sawing a Woman in Half," has resulted in the filing of a new action by Goldin in which he demands $100,000 damages and wants a receiver appointed for the business of the Clarion Photoplays.

In a suit by the Film Developing Corp. against the Key Holding Corp. of 209 East 124th Street, in which a judgment for $633 was obtained, the application has been filed in the County Clerk's office unsatisfied.

An application has been filed in the Supreme Court in behalf of Hyman Wink to vacate the service of papers in the suit of Triangle Film to recover on a note by Wink. The application is made by W. E. Keating on whom the papers were served at 71 West 23rd Street, who states that he is employed by the Western Import Co. and the Leader Film Corp. but not by Wink, and that service on him was not binding on Wink, who he says is abroad and is expected back about Oct. 1. He says the notes sued on were given by Wink on June 28 under a contract by which he got the privilege of re-editing and reconstructing negatives of Triangle, and then assigned the contract to the Leader Film. He failed to pay the notes because when he attempted to act under the contract he was enjoined from doing so, Keating said.

Wrote a more stirring story of the Northwest than "CARON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED."

He never wrote a better description of the spirit of pioneers that carries the peoples of the Old World into the wilds of the New to "GOD'S CRUCIBLE."

Both of these masterpieces have been picturized with fidelity to detail that breathes the very atmosphere of Canada and Western Empire.

An entire squadron of the Northwest Mounted Police was in "CAMERON," an accomplishment due solely to the influence of Sir Charles Gordon, who is "Ralph Connor in private life. This is the first time these indomitable soldiers of the Northwest have ever appeared in an organization in motion pictures, and their participation lends a measure of action to the picture that at times moves at break-taking speed.

Book both of these RALPH Connor features. Millions of readers know his books, many more millions will be attracted to the theatres, if you show his pictures. They are big hits every test that you can apply.

“One of the objectionable phases of this close corporation distribution system is the block” selling of pictures, where forty or more pictures by a single company, all factory made product by practical people, are presented to the Theater Owners in such a way as to practically compel them to purchase the entire “block” of pictures or be denied the right to exhibit any of them. To secure a few pictures which may have merit be must buy forty pictures or more, most of which have no real exhibition value and in which the theater going public can have no special interest.

“This process of forcing upon the exhibitor and the public factory-made pictures under the guise of art and pre- served by a great corporation and of American genius amount to the manipulation picture line, must cease. It is an imposition upon the public and public alike. It eats into public rights two ways. In the first place it imposes upon the public inferior pictures having little or no appeal or entertainment or informative value. In the second instance through a control of distribution processes, the same agencies shut out independent effort and deny the public that to which they are always entitled, namely, the greatest possible expression of unharnessed art and genius in picture production. Unable or unwilling to supply that which is demanded these agencies refuse to supply. This is the greatest dan- ger of the monopolized distribution system. It defeats the highest pur- pose of motion picture production, which is resident in the freest ex- pression of art and ability, and forces the theater going public to enter- tained only by the factory-made pro- ducts of studios handled solely for the complete commercialization of this great medium of expression and of demonstrated service to the people. It is there that public interest centers and becomes a cause of the radical change must be made at once.

“The Motion Picture Theater Own- ers of America must prepare to de- velop in a definite way such distribu- tion plans as will most effectively meet this situation. The time has ar- rived for affirmative action in this re- lation. Hedged about by artificial business conditions which threaten the life of the industry, through a control which is supposed to be ent- ered upon the interests of the public, the theater owner must act on be- half of his patrons. A definite outlet must be afforded the independent picture and the means to that end can best be provided by the organized action of the, Theater Owners.”

Binderup Case

The Supreme Court—Writ Returnable Oct. 2

Washington, D. C.—A petition for writ of certiorari was filed in the Supreme Court on October 2. The petition was filed by Charles G. Binderup, seeking to have the court review the case against the Pathe Exchange. The action was instituted by the petitioner at Omaha to recover three damages in the sum of $750,000 for injuries due to an alleged illegal conspiracy in the sale of a number of series of the Sherman anti-trust acts. George Binderup was engaged in the business of exhibiting moving picture films in several theaters in Nebraska and was also engaged in selecting motion picture films from the studios and supplying them, in the form of a lease or balance of programs, to a large number of Nebraska theaters.

The action was alleged by the respondents, in the motion of destroying the petitioner’s business and securing control of the moving picture industry combined, federated and conspired, under and by a number of names, the principal act alleged being that the defendants refused to lease and deliver to the petitioner any motion picture films upon any terms whatsoever at any time. The petitioner alleged that he was unable to secure films from any other source and that by the acts of the defendants his business was totally destroyed.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals held that the business between the parties to the suit did not constitute interstate commerce.

The petitioner asserts that contracts for films were taken by the Nebraska representatives of the exchanges but were not approved by the New York office and the business therefore was interstate commerce.

It is possible that the court will announce whether or not it will grant the petition case within a few days after the hearing of the petition. If the petition is granted, however, the case would come up for trial, and the petitioner would have to take its regular place on the docket of the court.

Affidavit Filed

By Zukor in Valentino Case—Damage Cannot Be Estimated

In the suit of Famous Players against Valentino to restrain him from entering the employ of any other motion picture producer before the contract with Famous expires on Feb. 7, 1924, an affidavit was filed by Adolph Zukor yesterday in the Supreme Court. Zukor says that Famous Players has invested $400,000, or more, in the past five years has spent $7,600,000 on pictures.

Zukor says that Valentino possesses unique qualities for characters he represents. On Jan. 17 last, he contracted for a year at $1,250 per week with an option to Famous Players of extending the contract for another year at an increased salary. On Feb. 1, Famous Players notified him that the option would be exercised, which extended the contract to Feb. 1, 1924. Zukor says that up to April 15, Famous Players had paid Valentino $35,833 and in addition had advanced him money and had guaranteed certain contracts.

Zukor says that Valentino was never heard of prior to 1920 and that his sudden rise to popularity has been due to publicity given him by Zukor.

Singer Bros. Complaint Against Members of Low Organization and Distributing Companies

The District Attorney of the County of New York and the same official of Westchester County, as well as the Federal Trade Commission in a suit against the company next week to look into the complaint of Singer Bros. against Nick Schenck, David P. Jacobson, and several other organizations and others, also Nat'l Pictures and a number of other important distributing organizations.

Nathan Burkan, who represents Singer Bros., said yesterday he intended to ask for an investigation of the business by an anti-trust commission, to ascertain if the criminal code had not been violated and that the facts set forth in the case for inquiring into the facts of the Singer Bros.' film exchange in their house, the Peekskill, at Peekskill, New York.

In discussing the case Burkan declared that Schenck, Bernard, and the other owners of the Colonial, in Peekskill, had conspired with distributors and blocked the Singer Bros. from obtaining pictures for their new house.

The companies named include, besides First National, Universal, Selznick, Famous Players, and Commonwealth Films. United Artists delivered "Orphans of the Storm" as a part of the contract. The other companies have various excuses for not delivering, or for rejecting the contracts offered. The Singer house is new and cost $50,000.

At First National an official stated that the organization knew nothing of the matter, and it was impossible to obtain any information from Bernard, of the Loew house, or any other involved in the case.

Famous which has spent $20,000 on vertising for him outside of its own publication. Zukor says that Valentino was notified that he was to appear in "The Spanish Cavalier" which has begun work Sept. 4 at Hollywood. At that time he told Jesse Lasky that he was going to New York and would return. He has failed to do so and did not even report to Famous Players in New York.
Zukor says that on the other hand
a letter was received from his attor-ey, Arthur Butler Graham, claiming that Famous Players had breached
the contract through failure to feature Valentino properly. Famous Players denied this and demanded that an instance of it be pointed out. Zukor states that the acts of Valentino indicate that he intends to breach the contract, thinking he can get more money elsewhere. Famous Players have advised that he has been negotiating with others and has been threatening to appear for another producer.

Zukor says that his company has already lost $30,000 through the failure of Valentino to appear in Holly-daily. He says that the amount of damage Famous Players will sustain if Valentino breaks the contract can-

In the Courts

Issac Guryan, President and Treasurer of the Army & Navy Distributing Co., a clothing concern, have brought suit in the Supreme Court against Loew's Inc., and Daniel V. Picker, asking that the defendants take back their Elsmere Theater, motion picture house, at Crotona Parkway and Elsmere Place, the Bronx, and pay him $43,000 spent on the enterprise and return notes given in part payment.

The papers filed by Isidore Gainsburg in behalf of Guryan show that after he had bought the theater for $65,000 the building authorities inspected all places of amusement in New York City following the Knick-ebrooker Theater disaster in Washington, D. C., and closed the Elsmere on the ground that the walls were cracked and the foundation defective. M. Gainsburg alleges the condition of the building was known to Loew's Inc., and to Picker and that they not only concealed the fact but represented that the theater had made a profit of $30,000 the year before they sold it, whereas it was operated at a loss.

The buyer gave $20,000 and notes for the balance of the $65,000 purchase price, and alleges he lost $12,000 additional in operating the theater. Guryan contends the sellers are liable to him for the damage because as a clothing merchant he knew nothing about motion picture theaters, and was compelled to rely on their representations.

The Clark Cornelius Corp. has been sued in the Supreme Court by Patrick A. Powers for $15,000 on a note for ninety days made on June 3 last.

An unsatisfied execution for $37 has been filed in the County Clerk's office by the United Theater Equipment Co. against the Talking Motion Pictures, Inc.

Gladys Walton has had her manager, Allen Alexander, placed under arrest on a warrant totaling $1600, alleged to have been a portion of funds entrusted him by the actress.

Edward A. Leopoldt has sued the Alexander Film Corp in the Supreme Court for a balance due for posters printed by the Otis Lithographing Co. The defendant has filed a demurrer, but the plaintiff asks that the answer be stricken out as frivolous because the Alexander Company knows it received the posters and is merely trying to delay the case, for which reason Leopoldt asks judgment.

Reached The Ku Klux Klan

Tulsa, Okla.—A real scoop was the discovery of a secret box by which the letters could reach the Ku Klux Klan. A blind letter box was the answer. The Klan received a letter advising the members to see "One Clear Call" at the Rialto, of which W. M. Smith is manager, and it is reported that this letter was actually read in convention before more than 5,000 assembled klanmen. While it is impossible to determine the exact results of this no question that many klanmen were impressed by this intimate knowledge of their meeting place and regarded the suggestion to attend the First National as a message of real importance.

Distributed 5,000 Telegrams

Quincy, Ill.—H. E. Nelson of the Star, used the personal telegram stunt very successfully to exploit. "The Storm." He had 5,000 telegrams printed which read: Warning! The strom is coming! The phones are going to the gas works. Boys dressed as messengers delivered these to prominent business men, merchants, doctors, lawyers, and housewives of the city. He also put on a contest with the Quincy Herald awarding prizes to the girls who answered this question: "Which should she choose a city or an outdoor man?" Maurice Engle, public director for Universal in St. Louis helped Nelson put it across.

A Penny Matinee

Pittsburgh—Manager Ed Frazier is responsible for the exploitation plan by which he aroused interest in motion pictures and the new season when he initiated a one cent matinee for "Sonny" at his New Grand. The rules were that a child could buy a ticket for ten cents and bring in one companion for a penny. Adults bought tickets at the regular admission price but could bring in another adult or child for a penny. The trouble came when children tried to buy admission and then bring in an adult for a penny. Frazier had to explain the rules in person. It gave him the opportunity to become acquainted with a lot of his patrons, and innumerable ideas for a bargain matinee. They took his explanation in good nature. Daily Herald calling feature at the penny matinee because of its novelty, although the scheme has been used in other forms of business it is unusual as an exhibitor stunt.

AS A WHOLE . . . . . . A noteworthy achievement; has all the qualities to nominate it for one of the year’s best

STORY . . . . . Delightful pseudo-historic romance that is genuinely entertaining; certain to hold any audience

DIRECTION . . . . . A big task that has been remarkably well accomplished; splendid from about every angle you look at it

STAR . . . . . Far surpasses anything she has ever done

INTERIORS .................. Very good

CHARACTER OF STORY . . . . . The plight of Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII, who is forced to marry a King but eventually is happy with her soldier lover

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 10,800 feet

Cosmopolitan’s production of Charles Major’s pseudo-historic novel far exceeds anything that was anticipated. The result will undoubtedly put “When Knighthood Was in Flower” in the list of the year’s best pictures. And the picture easily bears out all the things that have been said for it. The production is gor-egous, the direction excellent, the acting often masterful and it is real entertainment.

Furthermore, the picture looks like the money that is claimed to have been spent on it. Almost the entire action required many special sets which Joseph Urban’s usual artistry has taken care of perfectly. The courtyards and street scenes are splendid and all of the interior sets are interesting reproductions of old English architecture. Added to this the marvelous array of costumes and other elaborate displays makes it easy to believe that the cost of production ran high.

Great credit is due Robert Vignola, who directed the picture. From every angle you take it his work stands out as something achieved. The story is smoothly told and it holds you all the way. The dra-cmatic climaxes carry a force that is unmistakable and even the old last minute pardon carries a thrill, although you expect it. The scene in which Princess Mary and her lover are overtaken by the King is the big moment of the first part and the flight of Mary following the death of her husband, King Louis XII, is the outstanding bit of the second part. The pursuit through the storm is really big. The tinting of the fiery torches adds a touch of realism that makes it unusually effective. Detail throughout is particularly fine. The film is still too long and will be the better of further cutting.

Marion Davies’ interpretation of Princess Mary Tudor is the most ambitious thing she has ever done and certainly indicates what perseverance will do. She portrays a wide variety of moods and is especially pleasing when she masquerades as a boy and is led into a fencing match with some ruffians at the inn.

The picture is very beautiful in some of the close-ups and there is one shot—that in which she prays for her lover’s safety—that is a wonder. The cameramen deserve their share of credit for the fine photography and lighting.

The supporting cast is one of the best ever assembled and almost any individual performance is well worth the price of admission. William Norris, who will be remembered as the gay old rascal of “Maytime,” is a play in himself as Louis XII. Just as the chorus girl in “Maytime” remarked when she married the old flirt, you expect a title to read, “I hope he lasts until I get him home,” when Princess Mary is forced to marry him. Then there is the portrayal of Henry VIII by Lyn Harding, an English actor who has played the part many times on the stage. Harding does very fine work. Forrest Stanley as Charles Brandon is an ideal hero. Even the small role of the jester stands out.
Johnny Dooley plays it. Ernest Glendenning is fine and others, all of whom deserve credit, are Pedro de Cordoba, William H. Powell, Arthur Forrest, Macey
Harlan, William Kent, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Charles Gerrard, George Nash, Arthur Donaldson, Theresa
Maxwell Conover, Flora Finch and Ruth Shepley. It is truly an all-star cast.

Story: Henry VIII arranges an alliance with France
by marrying his young sister, Princess Mary Tudor, to the aged King, Louis XII. Mary rebels and elopes with her soldier lover, Charles Brandon. They are captured, Mary kept a prisoner and Brandon thrown into the tower. Finally Mary consents to marry Louis to save Brandon’s life and with the understanding that she may choose her second husband. Louis dies shortly after the marriage and Duke Francis, heir to the throne, attacks Mary in her chamber. Brandon, who has been warned of her danger at the hands of Francis, arrives in time to save her. They escape and turn to England. Francis’ emissary is already there asking for Mary’s hand. Henry is reminded of his promise, so the marriage of Mary and Brandon takes place, with Brandon made Duke of Suffolk.

Put Your Order In and Get Ready to Have It Work for You

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

By the time you can get “When Knighthood Was in Flower” it will probably have gained sufficient reputation to pack your house, without your doing very much to convince them that it is well worth seeing. The vast exploitation that it has already received, and will receive, in the Hearst publications is building up a popularity for both the star and picture that should make it an easy matter for you to cash in on when it gets around to you.

There have been several foreign productions of stories similar to “When Knighthood Was in Flower,” so let them see what an American director can do. You can make promises and feel sure the production will bear you out. Tell them the star does the best work of her career as Princess Mary and use still showing her in the large variety of court costumes which she wears throughout the picture. Let them know about the fine work of the supporting cast and make use of the production notes given out by the producer to give them an idea of its biggest.
Rupert Hughes Exploits “Pop” Instead of “Mom” in Heart Interest Story

“REMEMBRANCE”
Rupert Hughes Prod.—Goldwyn

DIRECTOR .................... Rupert Hughes
AUTHOR ....................... Rupert Hughes
SCENARIO BY .................. Rupert Hughes
CAMERAMAN .................. Norbert Brodin

AS A WHOLE ......A very human picture that will probably prove a profitable box office attraction

STORY ...... A contrast to the recent run on “mother” pictures; this time “Dad” comes into his own

DIRECTION ...... Great on bringing out the human interest stuff; just a trifle long drawn out in one or two sequences

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Very good
LIGHTINGS ........................ Good

PLAYERS ...... Claude Gillingwater gives a mighty interesting and true-to-life performance as “Pop” and Kate Lester as “Mom”; others are well suited and include Patsy Ruth Miller, Cullen Landis and Richard Tucker

EXTERIORS ..................... Few
INTERIORS ..................... All right
DETAIL ......................... Good; some titles great

CHARACTER OF STORY ..........Father recovers from critical illness and finds that his being so near death has cured his wife and children of their selfishness

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,650 feet

As far as the story goes Rupert Hughes’ “Remembrance” is very much like Fannie Hurst's “The Good Provider,” which also tended to exploit father, following a long and successful series of “mother” pictures—successful to the extent that they satisfied the public. However, Miss Hurst's people were good old fashioned Jewish people who had risen to wealth, while Rupert Hughes has selected an American family. But the moral remains the same.

The author has written a very human story and in transferring it to the screen has succeeded in bringing out the human side of it through a deft combination of humor and pathos that brings laughs and possibly tears, in a true-to-life fashion. And the comedy sequences should go over big. A Jewish business man lends a touch of atmosphere and, as may be expected, offers some characteristic humor. One particularly good laugh is where the Jew, after turning down the youth's offer to purchase his business (thinking the boy hasn't the backing he claims to have) sees the boy conversing in friendly fashion with the president of the bank. The Jewish business man loses no time in going up to the fellow to take up the deal where they left off. This is but one of the comedy bits that are to be found throughout “Remembrance.” It has plenty of them and all carry worthwhile laughs.

Hughes has used much of his psychology in the subtitles that are very well written and interesting. The one about the man's life insurance policy being the kindest love letter, etc., and another about the old shoes buying the new shoes, stand out. The latter one follows close-ups of dad's feet, roughly shod, contrasted with the neatly clad feet of his wife and children. There are many equally effective touches. Director Hughes has given a little too much footage to the collapse of the father. While it develops the theme and brings about the reconciliation of the family, it is too long drawn out and the scenes showing the mother and then the daughter running out in the rain could come out all together.

Claude Gillingwater is admirable as “Pop” and Kate Lester splendid as “Mom,” while the children are nicely played by those mentioned above.

Story: John Grout is nearing bankruptcy when illness overtakes him and his selfish wife and children gradually realize how miserably they have treated their provider. Upon his recovery they start life over again on a more cooperative basis, founded on better understanding and appreciation.

Promise Comedy and Pathos and a Good Human Story

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is the type of entertainment that will appeal to the largest majority of American audiences. It depicts a typical American home and a situation that is recognized as an existing social condition, more or less familiar to most people. Tell them it is a drama of American home life with true-to-life characters and splendid acting on the part of the players, Claude Gillingwater particularly.

Be sure to let them know about the comedy contained in “Remembrance” and you can promise a variation in this one in which “Pop” is exploited. After the many “mother love” themes it shouldn't be difficult to interest them in a picture in which a father is the center of attraction. It looks like a good box office number if you handle it rightly and give it a good exploitation. Give Rupert Hughes’ name good prominence.
Real Atmosphere of Mystery in Sherlock Holmes Story

"THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES"
Film Booking Offices
DIRECTOR ......................... Maurice Elvey
AUTHOR ......................... Sir Arthur Conan Doyle
SCENARIO BY .................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ...................... Not credited

AS A WHOLE........... A perfectly fine number for those who like to solve riddles or favor mystery stories in their film entertainment

STORY...... A Sherlock Holmes adventure in which the great detective's ability to solve mysteries has to be taken mostly for granted

DIRECTION ...... Has concentrated upon telling the story rather than in production values; some good effects

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. All right
LIGHTINGS......... Usually good; occasionally too dark

PLAYERS........ The men do good work but the girl, Betty Campbell, is poor; Eille Norwood not given much prominence as Holmes; others Hubert Willis, Rex McDougal, Lewis Gilbert and Frederick Rayham, who makes a good deal of small role of butler

EXTERIORS ........... Particularly appropriate
INTERIORS ............... Good

DETAIL ...................... Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Mystery in deaths of members of certain family, all of which follow the strange appearance of a dog

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,382 feet

It seems rather strange that a story which exploits the remarkable ability of Sherlock Holmes to fathom mysteries should expose so little of the actual work of the detective. Or perhaps it is just the way in which it is told here that keeps Holmes' method of solving the mystery so much of a secret. At any rate you are asked to take his genius very much for granted while his assistant looks around for clues.

The picture, of English make, offers a perfectly good entertainment for those who like deep mystery stories with the plot thickening with every foot of film that is unwound, the thrills sometimes uncanny and the characters in constant danger of death. It has been carefully developed and quite coherently, despite the complex situations. But, in order to keep it continually comprehensive, many subtitles have been found necessary, plus the written report of the detective's assistant which is shown to the spectator and cleverly recounts events that have preceded it. In this way incidents, perhaps not clear at the time they occur, are fully explained, leaving no doubt in your mind. The only objection is that it keeps you busy reading. And one criticism that is appropriate right here, and applies to many American films as well, is that it is very difficult to read some of the hand written communications. A legible hand writing should be used and the script reproduced large enough to be read with ease.

Director Elvey has obviously given the best of his effort to telling the story and in that respect he has succeeded splendidly. There are a lot of individually good touches and the manner in which he handles the more uncanny bits shows good restraint. There was plenty of room for exaggeration and gruesome touches but they have been passed by. The ending is a trifle too abrupt.

The acting is not especially noteworthy, although everyone fulfills requirements and is well suited to the part. Eille Norwood looks the part of Holmes but has little to do. The performance that seems to stand out most is contributed by Frederick Rayham, as the butler, Osborne. Betty Campbell is a poor choice as leading woman.

Story: Several masters of the Baskerville estate had died suddenly of heart disease, each death following the mysterious appearance of a hound, seen at midnight on the estate. The new master puts the matter before Sherlock Holmes who conducts a secret investigation arriving at the solution that a distant relative, in hope of eventually inheriting the estate, had caused the deaths.

Use the Author's Name and Let Them Know What It's About
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You know pretty well just what a picture of this type can do for you because you also know whether or not your patrons like mystery stories. If they do, you couldn't give them one that will set them guessing any more than "The Hound of the Baskervilles" will. In case they may not know it, be sure to say it is one of Sir Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes adventures.

Because of the recent publicity which Doyle received for his theories regarding spiritualism, and because he is noted as the author of the famous detective stories, give his name plenty of prominence and in case the title may not be definite enough, play it up with explanatory catchlines relative to the dog who appeared at midnight and following each appearance a death occurred. If they want detective stories, don't miss it.
Well Sustained Interest and Action in Latest Mayo Film

Frank Mayo in “CAUGHT BLUFFING”
Universal

DIRECTOR ......................... Lambert Hillyer
AUTHOR .............................. Jack Becholdt
SCENARIO BY ...................... Charles Sarver
CAMERAMAN ....................... Charles Stumar
AS A WHOLE................. Good action story that will please a “fan” crowd particularly well

STORY............. First rate vehicle for star; moves along at good speed and holds attention all the way DIRECTION........... Satisfactory; works up to effective climax but might have kept it a bit less obvious
PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ......................... Good
STAR............. Does good work in role he can handle very well SUPPORT............. Edna Murphy capable leading lady; others Wallace MacDonald, Jack Curtis, Ruth Royce
EXTERIORS ......................... Pretty
INTERIORS ......................... Suitable
DETAIL ......................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY........... Girl accuses man who had befriended her sweetheart but later marries him when fiancé proves to be a cad
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 4,518 feet

Frank Mayo has a very suitable story in this and one that gives him a particularly appropriate role. He has a good variety of opportunities and there are enough actionful sequences to keep him busy. The atmosphere is similar to one of his recent features, “Out of the Silent North,” and the themes not greatly unlike each other. In both cases Mayo saves the life of a man for another woman only to win her for himself in the end.

Lambert Hillyer, who directed all of the recent Will Hart pictures, was behind the megaphone for “Caught Bluffing,” and he knows just how to handle a story of this type. He distributes the action evenly and there are a lot of small things that are unimportant of themselves but made to stand out as mighty effective touches just through intelligent treatment. One bit that is especially clever is where Mayo reaches the cabin to which he has rushed in order to save the heroine. He is exhausted when he gets there so instead of jumping on the villain, he merely interrupts the attack upon the girl by falling in the door, with the explanation that his horse had carried him over the cliff.

His method of sparring for time in which to regain his strength is a twist that Hillyer has brought out splendidly.

The attention is held all the way and toward the close Hillyer works up to a rather exciting climax. There is only one fault to be found, and probably that couldn’t be helped, but it does seem that the outcome could have been kept a little less obvious. There’s hardly a doubt in the spectator’s mind, from the start, that Edna Murphy will not marry Wallace MacDonald. It only remains to be seen how he will make his exit while Mayo claims the girl.

The star is given a good supporting company with Edna Murphy handling the lead capably. Wallace MacDonald is the weakling and Jack Curtis a burly villain. Others are Andrew Arbuckle, Ruth Royce, Jack Walters, Scott Turner and Martin Best.

Story: Doris Henry, upon her arrival at Katama, learns that her fiancé, Towers, has absconded with money belonging to his company. Assuming that Towers was influenced by John Oxford, a gambler, she hates Oxford, although she has never seen him. While hunting for Towers, Doris is attacked by her guide and rescued by Oxford, who happens to be in the vicinity. Oxford promises to clear Towers’ name if he will tell the girl the truth. Towers doesn’t keep his promise until confronted by Oxford. He confesses but Doris will have nothing more to do with him. Later she marries Oxford.

A Good Northern Picture if They Like Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can show them this one and feel quite sure they will be satisfied. If they like Northern stories, so much the better. In case you happened to have played Mayo’s “Out of the Silent North” and found that it pleased them, you can go to it safely on “Caught Bluffing.” Stills and the usual order of lobby display will let them know it is a Northern story.

If they like a good fight you can promise them an exciting one between Mayo and Jack Curtis, as the burly guide. It certainly looks like the real thing. There is nothing objectionable in any part of the story unless they might object to the suicide scene in the dance hall sequence, although this is not really offensive. You might interest your local card sharks by promising them some card tricks in “Caught Bluffing.”
Let us follow this strangely veiled figure through one of the most intriguing mysteries ever screened, listening the while to the strains of Will the Piper, as he roams the countryside spreading a rare philosophy of life. A picture of breath-catching suspense superbly developed by a master hand.

A shot in the dead of night, a tiny form falls across a beam of moonlight, and the fast-diverging lives of two on the brink of despair are brought together on the one plane of common understanding which all "Married People" know—the patter of little feet. CHARACTER OF STORY ...... American aids Spanish heiress to rid her castle of a "ghost" which turns out to be the girl's suitor who is seeking a hidden treasure

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,130 feet

The adaptation of Paul Dickey's and Charles Goddard's stage play offers about a fair film entertainment and will probably go better than that with Wally Reid's admirers, although it does not give him as good a vehicle as either of his last two features, "The Dictator" or "Across the Continent." It is a romantic comedy with its principal episodes laid in Spain where most of the comedy is brought out through hero's effort to solve the mystery of the haunted castle.

Director Green has taken a little too long to get into the story and the Kentucky feudal sequence is the chief delay in getting started. In the first place it switches the locale from Spain to Kentucky in abrupt fashion and has no part in the story thereafter. It seems they might have found a less roundabout way to bring the hero and heroine together, but they introduce a feud with hero finally taking refuge in the heroine's room at the hotel in his effort to elude detectives chasing him for his attack on one of the enemy.

The best of the story is the ghost episode in which hero Wally braves the terrors of the haunted castle, assisted by his negro valet, played by the good natured Walter Hiers. Hiers does good work, but a real negro comedian such as they have in Owen Moore's latest, "Love Is An Awful Thing," would have been better. Green gets the most out of the situations here and there's some genuine laughs when Hiers fights off armored ghosts with a razor and "shoots" craps with spectres, also his effort to get his master out of the trunk in which he was secreted aboard ship, unknown to the suspicious villain.

The romance is rather weak but will appeal to the star's admirers and Lila Lee fills the part of the Spanish heiress splendidly, especially in looking the part of a Senorita. The photography, as usual in Paramount pictures, is excellent and production values up to the usual standard.

STORY ...... Maria Theresa, a Spanish heiress, comes to America where she secures the plans of a castle owned by her dead father and which contain the hiding place of a great treasure. Warren Jarvis offers to help her rid the castle of ghosts and find the fortune. It develops that the "ghosts" were "planted" by D'Alva, a suitor of Maria's, who also sought her fortune. Jarvis exposes D'Alva, finds the treasure and wins Maria completes it.

Perhaps the One Good Comedy Sequence Will Send Them Out Happy

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Undoubtedly there are enough laughs in "The Ghost Breaker" to send them out satisfied even though it isn't as fast moving or as continuously funny as it might have been. The star's admirers will likely be well pleased with it unless they prefer Wally in a role that is more romantic. There's more comedy than romance in "The Ghost Breaker."

They are probably familiar with Walter Hiers as a comedian so you might let them know that he supplies most of the laughs in this. Let them know he is a negro valet whose master has him chasing ghosts. That should be sufficient to give them an idea of the comedy to expect. Use Lila Lee's name also. Tell them Reid has a new job in his latest picture. This time it is riding a haunted castle of its ghost and incidentally winning an heiress and a fortune. Title and catchlines can be played up effectively.

ONE of the sweetest stories ever told!

A homely human document with an appeal as broad as humanity itself. In its many years before the public, as a stage play and as a novel, the story has become known all over the world.

For real story value, lavishness of sets and a distinguished cast of players, "Little Church Around the Corner" will rank as one of the big box-office pictures of the season.

GREATEST novel ever written of rural America!

This splendid production will surpass the success of the fiction version and the stage play.

It serves to reveal the bitter clash of new, free ideas against the entrenched complacence of small town tradition. There's a Main Street in every town, and this is but one of the many exploitation hints on the box-office possibilities of this attraction.

Old Fashioned Melodrama In Northern Setting

Jane Novak in
"THE SNOWSHOE TRAIL"
Film Booking Offices

DIRECTOR .................. Chester Bennett
AUTHOR ..................... Edison Marshall
SCENARIO BY ................. Marion Fairfax
CAMERAMAN .................. Jack MacKenzie

AS A WHOLE...... Old school melodrama is given good production but material is too antique to make entertainment

STORY...... Belongs back in the 10-20-30 days; contains a series of near-climaxes in succession of far-fetched situations

DIRECTION ...... Ordinary with exception of fine locations selected for Northern sequence.

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Good LIGHTINGS .................. Natural STAR ............. They keep her in Northern pictures SUPPORT ............. Roy Stewart, the lead; Herbert Prior and Lloyd Whitlock equally villainous; others adequate EXTERIORS .................. Most of snow scenes pretty INTERIORS .................. Few DETAIL .................. Ample CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl seeking lover in North is double-crossed by him after she risks her life to rescue him
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,832 feet

Jane Novak's latest starring vehicle is strictly an old school melodrama and Bennett hasn't tried to make anything else out of it. So it retains all the evidence of the days of the 10-20-30's. It is the old story of a girl's happiness interrupted by first an unfaithful lover and a scheming guardian with the whole theme resolving itself into a series of plottings that consume about six reels. Hero does his best to pave the way for the heroine's happiness but the last minute rescue party is called in to save the hero in the last scene. Roy Stewart overacts as the hero.

Chester Bennett evidently realized that he couldn't change the story so he has let it remain strictly "meller" with no attempt to conceal it. "The Snowshoe Trail" has the most wicked trio of villains that have found their way to the screen for a long time, so it isn't difficult to imagine the wealth of plotting that takes place. And most of it is so terribly far-fetched that it fails to furnish a genuine thrill. The best one is the rescue in the rapids when the heroine falls from her horse and is destined to perish in the falls below. Shots of hero swimming to her rescue with intermittent shots of the falls, supplies a fair, but familiar, thrill.

The Northern sequences are attractive and there are numerous honest-to-goodness snow scenes with the players ploughing knee deep through the drifts. The photography in these bits is very good.

Jane Novak is an appealing heroine but it is doubtful if she will gain much sympathy in her love for the worthless fellow portrayed by Lloyd Whitlock. Herbert Prior also has a hand in the villainous business but his part is short lived. A Chinese cook supplies a mild humor now and then.

Story: Harold Lounsbury's father dies after confessing that years before he had left his partner to die in a mine which they had staked together. Kenly Lounsbury, guardian of Virginia, the girl Harold is going to marry, hears the story, but wants the mine for himself and sends Harold in the wrong direction. Not hearing from her lover, the next year Virginia starts in search of him. Her guide happens to be Bill Bronson, son of the man old Lounsbury had wronged. After many complications the story ends in the romance of Bill and Virginia.

A Suitable Feature For a Certain Class of Patronage

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There are plenty of audiences that will "eat up" a story of the type offered in "The Snowshoe Trail." The more villainy and plotting it contains, the better they'll like it and to these people you can go the limit on promises for its being an out and out melodrama. You probably know best what angle you should work on to obtain the biggest results. If it is the star, boost her name; if it's Northern atmosphere they like, display stills and give the title a good place.

The title is an easy one to exploit if you want to take the trouble to do it. Have the lobby decorated with snowshoes and have throwaways printed with the picture of a snowshoe and the line: "Follow the trail to the blank theater."
Dorothy Dalton in Another Northern Story and Dance Hall Girl Role

Dorothy Dalton in
"THE SIREN CALL"
Paramount

DIRECTOR .................. Irvin Willat
AUTHOR ......................... J. E. Nash
SCENARIO BY .............. J. E. Nash and Philip Hurn
CAMERAMAN ................ C. E. Schoenbaum

AS A WHOLE............Not ambitious as far as originality goes; thrills will register if they don't mind them being familiar

STORY........A tried and true Northern formula with the usual settings, situations and characters

DIRECTION........Supplies a good production and an adequate cast, but the story is still commonplace

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Very good LIGHTINGS ................. Good STAR................Especially pleasing at times and well photographed; will please her admirers

SUPPORT........David Powell, E. J. Brady and Mitchell Lewis give good performances

EXTERIORS ....................... Pretty INTERIORS .................. Customary sets

CHARACTER OF STORY............Dance hall girl is eventually freed of husband who mistreats her and marries man who saved her life

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......5,542 feet

J. E. Nash's story might have served for a first rate entertainment if there had not been so many similar ones to precede it. As it is "The Siren Call" will probably give complete satisfaction where they don't object to the very familiar formula which it contains and after seeing the way it was received by an audience that had sat through nearly three hours of vaudeville before the picture, it would seem to have a pretty good chance. They appeared well pleased with it, at least they must have been when they waited for the end.

It is the old story of the dance hall girl who wants to "keep straight." In this instance she happens to be married to the proprietor who, for business reasons, forbids her to wear her wedding ring, and since the girl loves the little gold band and longs for a home and baby, there's sufficient reason why she should gain the spectator's sympathy. Then to further indicate how good she is she is given the care of a babe whose mother and father died in the snow. Willat doesn't fail to make the most of the heart interest touches afforded by this twist.

The remainder of the story is the same old conflict between good and evil with the happy ending obvious from the start. There are two rather effective thrills, one where the reformers burn the dance hall and the battle of hero and the girl's husband on a river barge. The latter has been very well staged, although it would have been better not to have had the boat go over the falls with the hero and girl surviving the plunge. It's too implausible. The fight between E. J. Brady and David Powell on the boat is first rate, however.

Dorothy Dalton gets back to the spangles in the role of Charlotte, the dancer. Despite the familiarity of the role she makes it interesting and appears to fine advantage in most of the scenes. Schoenbaum has seen to it that she was always photographed to the best advantage. David Powell, E. J. Brady and Mitchell Lewis handle the principal male parts adequately. A minor part, that of an Irishman, is played by Lucien Littlefield, one of the best character actors on the screen.

Story: The burning of Brent's dance hall prevents him joining his sweetheart, so he lives with his wife, Charlotte, in a cabin until Beauregard, a trapper, in love with Charlotte, comes to collect a kiss that Charlotte had promised as a reward to Beauregard's saving the life of a baby. Brent leaves and Beauregard attacks Charlotte. Stevens, a prospector, saves Charlotte and chases Brent, who escapes after a fight. Charlotte is happy with Stevens and Brent is killed by wolves.

Will Satisfy if They Don't Object to an Old Plot

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The average picture audience will undoubtedly be well pleased with "The Siren Call." If, however, you know you have a critical clientele, one that demands something new in their entertainment, it may not do. It is a good Northern story of its kind and you can safely promise enough action to satisfy them. Talk about the burning of the dance hall and the fight on the river boat. Incidentally a trailer showing either of these two bits would be a good means of interesting them.

They probably know pretty well what Dorothy Dalton can do in a role such as she has here and will know what to expect. If she has a number of admirers among your patrons, you are quite safe in showing them her latest picture. The title is good and should be exploited.
Very Poor Story in Dustin Farnum's Latest

DIRECTOR ..................... Bernard J. Durning
AUTHOR ....................... Ridgwell Cullum
SCENARIO BY .................. Jack Strumwasser
CAMERAMAN ................... Don Short

AS A WHOLE ................. A pity to have wasted such gorgeous backgrounds on such a poor story; so "meller" at times it is funny

STORY ................. Very old school; typical 10-20-30 stuff; doesn't come up to what they want for present day entertainment DIRECTION ................. Doesn't try very hard to cover up the weak spots in story; production all right PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good LIGHTINGS ...................... Natural STAR ................. Could not be convincing in such a role SUPPORT ................. Adequate; includes Irene Rich, Walter McGrail, Frank Campeau, W. J. Ferguson and Charles French

EXTERIORS ................. Many very beautiful shots
INTERIORS ..................... Few

DETAIL ....................... Titles terrible

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Cousin cheats man out of woman he loves and later frames him for robberies which he himself committed

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,735 feet

If the story of "The Yosemite Trail" was intended to give Dustin Farnum a hero role it certainly missed out, for it is doubtful if many will admire the beating he takes not only when his cousin double-crosses him in his effort to win the girl he loves, but when he is later willing to be hanged for a crime committed by the same man. This is carrying the self-sacrifice theme to extremes and beyond, and such improbabilities hardly make for good entertainment.

It is a great pity that such gorgeous exteriors as those selected had to be wasted on such weak material. Undoubtedly the scenes were shot in Yosemite Valley and needless to say they are always very beautiful. The photography, also, is excellent, but scenery and photography isn't sufficient for entertainment.

For anyone who likes plot and some more plot, "The Yosemite Trail" will be a good number because Walter McGrail, as the chief double-crosser, supplies all the hard knocks and trouble that hero Dustin Farnum suffers, all for the love of Irene Rich. It wasn't enough that Farnum gave up the girl, but he was also ready to sacrifice his life, although you know all the while that he isn't very worried because there's bound to be a last minute rescue and a confession from villain McGrail. The story is so "meller" that it cannot be taken seriously and some of the sequences are probably due for laughs that aren't intended. The bit in which McGrail pushes Farnum down an embankment and then through a chute that deposits him on a track in the path of an approaching train is the wildest thing in the picture.

Farnum hasn't much chance for a favorable impression with such a stupid role and the remainder of the cast performs in mechanical fashion. The sub-titles are very poor and the sentiment very much out of place.

Story: Jim Thorpe and his cousin Ned Henderson both love Eve Marsham. They draw for the privilege of first proposal. Jim wins but Ned double-crosses him and wins Eve. Jim goes to Peru and a year later returns, only to learn that Ned is mistreating Eve and that they are not happy. Ned is suspected of robbing the stage so throws suspicion upon Jim, who is arrested. Rather than expose the man he thinks Eve still loves, Jim keeps silent, but Ned's confession saves him.

Use Good Short Reels With It If You Show It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Your folks will have to like Dustin Farnum awfully well to put up with the poor story he has in "The Yosemite Trail," so it would be well to consider the drawing power of his name before you decide to show it. Or if you know your folks are easily suited and won't kick even at the hokum meller presented, then you are equally safe.

The only promises you can make are for the locations and there are some fine ones. And it might be easy enough to interest by showing some stills or a trailer of the more exciting sequences. It would be wise to secure a strong accompanying program, a news weekly, good comedy and whatever short reels you are in the habit of using. A good comedy would help you out in case they don't like the feature.

EXTERIORS ................ Island scenes pretty
INTERIORS .................. Suitable

DETAIL .................. Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Rich husband Shanghai's wife who repulses him, and takes her to island where she finally admits her love

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5.483 feet

There have been so many pictures similar to "The Isle of Doubt" that it would have to contain unusual production values, a particularly strong cast or some strengthening feature to make it rise above the average. As it is the picture is an ordinary attraction but with the sort of appeal that may pull big in certain districts where they are not critical, don't bother about improbabilities or the like, but are satisfied with the type of atmosphere and adventure that the story offers.

The author has included mostly familiar situations with very few instances of originality in their handling. There is a rich girl with a mother whose social ambitions demand a rich husband for her daughter. Then there is the cad who persuades her to marry a rich suitor in order that she may divorce him and secure a fortune in settlement. Added to this you have the husband who loves his wife and takes her to a deserted island and through cave man treatment finally wins her love. None of this is new and it has been given the usual treatment.

Director Smith supplies a production that satisfies but does not lift the story out of the average class. There are times when he might have gotten more out of the players and particularly does he allow Dorothy Mackaule to be too theatrical. She overdoes the "haughty" stuff throughout and her personality certainly suffers for it. Wyndham Standing deserves better material if they wish to make a star of him.

It would have been a big help to the story if the role played by George Fawcett had not required that this interesting player "die" in the second reel. He is always reliable and entertaining.

Story: Through the terms of his will, Burton J. Warburton, leaves his wife and daughter, Eleanor, without the luxury they are accustomed to. Gerry Patten has persuaded Eleanor to consent to be his wife but the will causes a change of mind and he suggests that Eleanor first marry the rich Dean Deland, divorce him, secure a large settlement and then marry himself, Gerry. She agrees but her plan miscarries when Deland takes her aboard his yacht, and Gerry also, and for a year the three live on an island where Eleanor finally learns that Gerry is a cad and that Deland is the man she loves.

Entertain the Majority

Get a Good Accompanying Program Or Another Feature If You Use It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You should know whether you can satisfy your crowd with a feature like this so you will have to be the judge. If you know they are not hard to please it will do all right and if you cater to the regulation average audience it would be well to surround the feature with a good live comedy number and whatever short subject material you are in the habit of using. Or if you use the double feature day it would work in that way nicely.

Wyndham Standing probably hasn't a great following but his name should be familiar and it might interest them to know that he is starred in "The Isle of Doubt." Play up the title with catchlines, explaining that on "The Isle of Doubt" a woman found her true love and a man won the love of the woman who had married him for his money. You might mention that George Fawcett is in the cast.

STAR............ Likeable; not called upon for anything unusual SUPPORT........ James Donnelly and Victory Bateman good; others all right
EXTERIORS .................. Commendable
INTERIORS .................. Good
DETAIL .................. Nothing wrong
CHARACTER OF STORY........ Efforts of bogus British lord to marry American heiress frustrated by real nobleman
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 5,000 feet

Just why “A Girl’s Desire” was selected as the title for this comedy is not quite apparent, for it suggests a problem drama rather than a light offering. There is little in the production that justifies the use of this title and it may prove misleading.

The idea of having Americans of much wealth and little knowledge of the customs of aristocracy hunting a crest and heirlooms, with a resultant effort on the part of one of the blue-blooded gentry to secure some of the material possessions of the newly-rich via the matrimonial route is not a new one. Without anything very unusual in the way of situations, except for a surprise at the finish this just about manages to get over.

Alice Calhoun holds her end of it up well enough but no great demand upon her histrionic talents is made. In one portion the star uses burnt cork in making a debut at a girl’s club in the guise of a janitor. It is not a very effective bit, but she carries it off in good style. Her personality is pleasing and that helps.

In the sequence which shows the search for relics of aristocracy on the part of the simple old couple unused to riches, there is some of the old hokum with the woman misusing unusual words in the titles. It is fairly funny with some creditable work on the part of James Donnelly and Victory Bateman registering in good style.

Story: Girl of poor parents come into sudden wealth, and is at a finishing school where a false “lord” courts her in order to get at the family money. She finds that he is faithless, but his threat to expose her folks who have secured heirlooms and a crest not really belonging in their family causes her to elope with him. The genuine lord breaks up the elopement and weds her instead and the finish where the identity of the real owner of the title is concealed until the very end furnishes a surprise.

Avoid Wrong Impression Which Title May Convey

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

When you start your campaign on this you had better take pains to let them know that it is a comedy, for they will undoubtedly understand from the title that it is a serious play. Let them understand what is all about before you go any further and avoid incorrect impressions.

Alice Calhoun is known to many and has done some good work in the past. Give her name due prominence in the plugging for it should prove fairly potent. As for promises, don’t make them too strong.

Say that it is an entertaining humorous offering and let it go at that.

If you want to use teaser lines, the theme should provide you with some fairly effective ones. Let them run along this line: “He was faithless, but threatened the happiness of her parents with some information he could have disclosed. She eloped with him, but did not marry him. See how the situation was saved, etc.”

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Man kidnaps wife of another for revenge and returns her after making it appear that she had gone away with him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,000 feet

There’s hardly a doubt but that this one is going out on the strength of its title and that is its only saleable feature. The production, of foreign origin, is way below the standard of our own films and so obviously continental that it won’t fool anyone. The story is a highly improbable one but does contain situations that might have been made interesting if they had been skilfully handled. The idea in the main is a fairly new angle on the revenge theme but it suffers from poor treatment generally.

Title Will Bring Them In If You Don’t Mind Disappointing Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You won’t be able to satisfy your folks with this one because they will immediately see that it is a poorly made foreign picture and there are enough poor home-made features for them to see without looking at imports. The only chance with this one is where it can be sold to them on the strength of the title and you don’t have to worry about the kicks afterwards. A transient house could undoubtedly do a good business with a title like this to display. The main trouble with the picture is that it doesn’t answer the query.

Some rather striking posters of the star will be available for lobby display and you should have little difficulty in filling the house if you play to a crowd that follows up the pictures with titles that promise a sex story. In this respect they will be disappointed because there are no sex situations in “Why Do Men Marry?”
Some Short Reels

“Thrills and Spills”—Fox
Type of production......................1 reel sport feature

Winter sports at St. Moritz form the subject of this reel which is another of the new series of Fox Educational. Ice skating runs the ballet a close second as shown in the opening shots. In quick succession are shown speed skating, barrel jumping, tobogganings and skiing, the latter being very good indeed. Will make a good filler for any program.

“Soak the Sheik”—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production......................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott travels over the desert on a radio equipped camel in this comedy, which is not above the average in humor. In trying to evade the Sheik while capturing his favorite wife, he avoids sudden death in many forms. A gag that should get a laugh is derived from a shrouded figure standing motionless in the tent where the lovers meet. A kick proves it to be a bronze bust on a pedestal. Thinking they have nothing to fear from shrouded figures they play hide and seek around another one which suddenly uncovers its face and is—the Sheik. This reel is not very much out of the ordinary, but should hold its own.

“The Alphabetical Zoo”—Kineto
Type of production......................1 reel educational

The titles of this single reel animal picture are written in rhyme and run from A to Z. A stands for alpaca, B for Bison and C for camel, etc. Each being illustrated by the animal in question. The animals are photographed in the zoo and form but a minor feature of this picture, the main feature being the titles which introduce the animals. This novelty reel will please the children and make a suitable educational filler.

“The Speeder”—Educational
Type of production......................2 reel comedy

Lloyd Hamilton who is starred in this two reeler uses a flivver to get laughs in the early portion of the offering, after which material of a more riotous nature is introduced. Several novel gags have been inserted and there is a genuine laugh when Hamilton attempts to park his car. As he selects space and starts to drive into it, another machine rolls in and again after he has removed an inconveniently placed car so that there is enough room for him, a faster vehicle rides in. Towards the finish, there is much knock-about stuff, the old idea of the trail of gasoline being lit and pursuing the comedian covering a good bit of footage. It removes a man’s trousers, wrecks a fireworks shop, causes other damage and at the end when Hamilton is being given a summons for speeding completely demolishes the automobile and motorcycle. There is mirth-provoking material in the portion where the frog perches under the principal’s cap and raises it whenever he meets anyone and the film should register in satisfactory fashion.

“Young Ideas”—Universal
Type of production......................1 reel comedy

Roy Atwell is starred in this comedy in which Jack Duffy really plays the principal role. It concerns an elderly grandfather who completely surprises those who expected to find him feeble, and proceeds to cut capers with vim and vigor. Most of the material is of slapstick variety but is is funny enough to get over and there are a few bits of business which are quite clever. An acceptable offering of its kind with Lila Leslie adding pretty features.

“Riding the Goat”—Mutt and Jeff—Fox
Type of production......................1 reel cartoon

The latest Mutt and Jeff cartoon is also better than some of the more recent numbers. In this one the comedy characters visit a circus and on the merry-go-round Mutt gets on a live goat instead of a lion and the maneuvers that he and Jeff go through in an effort to shake off the goat lands them a year’s contract with the circus for the great performance they give. The goat eats the salary given them by the manager and the two do their usual fade-out.

“Bone Dry”—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production......................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott spends all of his dad’s money that he can get having pictures taken of himself as a detective until dad who is a revenue officer sends him out to prove his worth by rounding up some desperate moonshiners. Paul makes a brand of hootch that knocks out even “Bourbon Bill,” the chief moonshiner and turns the whole bunch over to the authorities for himself the “moonshining” daughter. There is a funny chase and a number of situations that will get laughs although the plot is somewhat hackneyed.

“The Eskimo”—Clyde Cook—Fox
Type of production......................2 reel comedy

This is one of the funniest Clyde Cook comedies that Fox has turned out recently. It is essentially a burlesque on the snow pictures that have been so numerous of late, with the exteriors all obvious studio affairs. It opens with Clyde enjoying a morning ride on his ice boat. Cook is one of the crew of a ship that is “frozen in” and of course there’s a burly captain to make life miserable for the comedian. Most of the gags are new and there’s a lot of worth while and original laughs. It is a good comedy number that will go over on most any program.

Pathe Review No. 174

Scenic shots of the “painted waters” of the Adirondacks open this interesting issue. Some of the reflections in the water are exquisite. Next, the “Mud Pie Man” models interesting figures in swift succession. A novel feature of this Review is the passing of Pong, a chief of the Dutch East Indies, the rites of his burial being shown in detail. Handwriting analysis and colored shots of the Amphitheater at Athens do their bit in keeping this issue up to its usual high standard.
Short Reels

"Ancient Rome"—Fox

Type of production..........................1 reel educational

This reel imparts really valuable information in a clear, interesting manner. An animated map shows the extent of the Roman Empire when it was at its height, at the beginning of the Second Century. Present day ruins of ancient Roman glories interspersed with titles containing informative data make up the balance of the reel. Among other ruins are shown the Colosseum, the Forum, the Vestals Temple and the Pantheon.

"Two Slick Traders"—Aesop's Fables—Pathé

Type of production..........................1 reel animated cartoon

"A fair exchange is no robbery" is the moral of this cartoon. Farmer Al Falta has all sorts of trouble with his live stock. The Mule and the Goat play "medicine ball" with him and he is quite ready to change his farm for Ahic's flower. The beginning of the reel is quite funny but there is not the usual wallop at the end which falls rather flat. However it should get over as the animation is clever and the series popular.

"The Blanket Stiff"—Bruce Wilderness Tales—Educational

Type of production..........................1 reel scenic

Some interesting shots of the wheat country are about the best part of this Bruce offering which lacks the scenic beauty usually associated with his productions. It concerns a city fellow who gets out into the rough country, becoming a "blanket stiff" and taking knocks and favorable happenings as they come. He encounters a more experienced wanderer and the two get a "lift" as the reel ends.

Type of production..........................1 reel educational

The "why" of a volcano is first shown by means of a cross-sectional drawing which is animated. You are then taken on a visit to the most active volcanoes, all over the world. The scenes in which the cameraman flies over the crater of Vesuvius is thrilling in the extreme. This, however, has been used before in a Fox News Weekly. This reel is the first of a series of Fox Educational, all one reel or less in length.

"The Gypsy Trail"—Universal

Type of production..........................2 reel northwest

More complications than usually go into a two-reeler make their way into this story of the Northwest Mounted Police, starring Art Acord. Among the twists introduced in the theme are the kidnapping of a white girl by gypsies, the attempt of the villain to rob a widow of oil land, horse stealing, the jealousy of a gypsy woman because her husband displays affection for the blonde lass, the burning of an oil derrick and a few events of minor importance. Although it is rather jerky because of the quantity of material used and because little of it can be treated at sufficient length, it has a thrilling rescue and plenty of punch. Hugh Hoffman directed.

Type of production..........................1 reel fan magazine

Screen stars on a holiday are shown in this interesting reel. Betty Compson and Bert Lytell are in costumes of Grandma's day; Pearl White, back from the land of the Sirens, directs a new serial, and Snowy Baker plays tag with a kangaroo. Among other favorites are shown Johnny Hines, Edward Earle, Grace Darmond, the ex-Mrs. Valentino, Jane and Katherine Lee, Mabel Ballin, Wesley Barry and Colleen Moore. The reel is very entertaining and should prove a winner with any audience.

"Towering Wonders of Utah"—Urban Popular Classics—Vitagraph

Type of production..........................1 reel classic

One of the most unusual scenic offerings offered in a long while is this subject showing many of the strange rock formations in the Mormon State. From start to finish it is replete with striking spectacles faultlessly photographed. There are straight and curved rocks, balanced and slanted boulders, stones resembling toadstools, flat-topped hills, a remarkable natural bridge, as well as other peculiarly shaped works of nature. Written in a spirit in keeping with the character of the offering—of literary worth without the excessive flourishes often found in titles written for scenes—the captions serve the desired purpose. An excellent short subject.

"Water Sports"—Fox

Type of production..........................1 reel sport feature

This reel is not quite as good as the other Fox Educational released up to this time, but should prove adequate as a program filler. The photography is very good, especially the shots of aquaplaning and surf riding, but this subject has been used very frequently in news weeklies recently and therefore may not go as big as it would otherwise. We jump rapidly in this to all parts of the globe, from the beach at Brighton to the beach at Waikiki, Hawaii. There is a novel shot of a game of water tennis.

Type of production..........................1 reel magazine

A number of portions differing in character and each of interest make up another creditable magazine. Count Ilya Tolstoy, son of the famous author, is shown at work in the first section. After that, the spectator is taken to Algiers where Orientals are seen mingling with people from the west. There is another rapid shift and some highly commendable shots of a spider at work demolishing another insect are presented. Youthful colored musicians are seen in competition following that and closing is some footage showing the effect of perfumes upon wild animals. Quite up to the mark generally.

"The Story of Ice"—Fox

Type of production..........................1 reel educational

The exquisite scenic shots together with excellent photography are outstanding features of this Fox Educational. The reel holds the attention throughout and should be acceptable for any program. It deals with the cutting of ice in the winter for summer use. As a contrast scenes of a countryside which has been flooded by an ice floe is shown. Shots of a Government cutter on the lookout for icebergs closes the reel.

For a thing of its kind this picture is as nearly perfect as anything ever put on the screen.

New England with its pride of landscape and personalities is revealed in a way that has never been surpassed.

The story of two children who wander out into the country from their home in the slums in quest of a home and change the hearts of the people in a narrow little Maine town, is utterly lacking in sensationalism and has no kinship with the usual sloganized material of which pictures are made, but to a public whose taste is still fine enough to appreciate a wholesome and touching story, beautifully acted, the picture will come like a breath of fresh air.

The marvel is that this perfect depiction of New England has been achieved by an Irish director. Mr. Olcott has never done anything so nearly a masterpiece before.

The length might be criticised from the practical standpoint, but even the slow tempo to us was part of the character of it.

Joseph Depew is the boy who plays Timothy. He is one of the few boy-roles ever written and he plays it with the sympathy of a Baryshnikov.

Helen Roland is adorable as the little sister, loved and guarded by Timothy, who wins the heart of the austere spinster, whom everything points out to be ideally cast by Marie Day.

Margaret Seddon plays the sympathetic girlhood lover, and Viola Odgen is inimitable cocoon.

Stories like this and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are perhaps too sentimental for the sophisticated, but they are so typically and stanchly American that they deserve a shelf in the library and a place of their own on the screen.

Serial Clubs May Secure Non-Theatrical Rights to Kineto Productions

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

It is understood that W. R. Kelley, treasurer of the Pictorial Clubs, Inc., has concluded negotiations to secure the non-theatrical rights to the Kineto library. It is further understood that several million dollars are involved in the deal.

W. R. Kelley, the head of Pictorial, is reported yesterday that there was to be discussed at this time regarding the move, but that questions were not asked up to where. It is reported that the organization will allow 10 exchanges throughout the year, and there is some talk of one of the salons here being employed to disband this product in non-theatrical circles.

Pictorial Clubs, Inc., will move in 53rd Street early next month.

A present location is 233 Broadway.

Gleichmann Case

Court Decision Expected Within the Next Few Days—Exhibitors' Attitude

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Lansing, Mich.—The State Supreme Court action with reference to Judge Richter of the Detroit Circuit Court is scheduled for a hearing to morrow. A decision is expected within in a few days. The action is based upon an effort of the State Supreme Court to have Judge Richter of the Detroit Circuit Court pass and why he dissolved the temporary injunction previously issued by Judge Irjayne forbidding the exhibition of Paramount pictures in any other first run Detroit theater except the Broadway-Strand.

This will have a definite bearing upon Phil Gleichmann's litigation with Famous Players. Gleichmann is being United Artists and product from sources other than Famous Players and First National. It is understood that the Theater Owners of Michigan, the strongest exhibitor body in the country, has forwarded to Famous Players a resolution condemning action in the Gleichmann case. It is also said that had Gleichmann desired, he could have been nominated for the presidency of the Michigan organization. This he refused. It is further reported that Phil Kunsky and George W. Trendle, Kunsky's general manager, have resigned from the Michigan Exhibitors' organization as a result of these recent developments.

Moving On

Getting somewhere. Riding into it. And knowing it. With the uniform contract. In sight at least. And maybe only around the corner. Something to think about. If it's right. And it must be. Or it will never last. And this business has about reached a point. Where it had better have some important things, Which will last. So let's take that for granted. But—and here's the point. Assuming you have the uniform contract. Assume it is all satisfactory. Even to the exhibitor body. (And that's saying a chawful.) What next?

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

Maybe it will be this: a central clearing house. Established in New York. Maybe in: maybe outside. Of the Hays office. The purpose of which. Will be to have information cleared through. Just as the banks have the clearing house. In every big city.

Suppose there was an office. Where a record was kept. Of the purchases. Of every exhibitor. Just bookings. That's all. Play dates perhaps. But not absolutely essential. So that all distributors. Would know. Not have to guess. Whether Jim Jones. In Shandygaff. Or Someone else. In Chicago. Had contracted. For a lot more stuff. Than he could possibly use:

During a season.

(Everyone knows why he buys it. To block out the other fellow.)

NO MONEY RECORDS

Now this sort of a bureau. Would be worth its weight. In gold. There should be no records. Of prices paid. And of course no one. Should have access to these records. Properly handled. It would mean. That where exhibitor A needed 104 features. For a year's service. That when his contracts. For service. Reached—let's say—80. That all distributors were notified. And from then on. His purchases would be watched. Carefully. And scrutinized. And then. At the end of the year. Marcus Loew. And others. Wouldn't have a chance to say. That it cost 40 per cent. more. Than was necessary. To get play dates. To have the contracts lived up to. Incidentally. And it's not so incidental, at that. When the uniform contract comes along. There will probably be a play date included. Famous has been too successful this season. With this play date in. Not to have the other companies follow the lead. Hereafter.

KUNSKY'S NEW (?) IDEA

Film folk. Our Michigan way. Talking about the new (?) idea. Of Georgey Trendle. For John Kunsky. They say Trendle wants. To tie up. All the pictures he uses. In the chain. For a period of six months. So that no one else in his town. Can show them for that long. Believing. Of course. That by advertising this. It would help his business a lot. And block out. These pictures. From the neighborhood folks. Who show at less. Than Kunsky does. In his houses. Trendle ready to pay more. To get his product. On these lines.

Well, George. Think this over: Some years ago. Down New Orleans way. Herman Fitchenburg. Had the same bunch. And played it. And got some companies. To book up their stuff that way. And then the neighborhood house exhibitors. Got together. And put over an advertising campaign. Telling the fans. What Herman was doing. And the result was: that Herman had a lot of exclusive contracts on his hands. And the fans were going in the other houses. To help the under dogs. Who Herman had trapped. And that's one of the reasons Herman tied up. With Rich. And the Saenger's. It was a costly experiment.

SPILLING BEANS

Al Lichtman dropped a few pearls. In his various speeches. When you see him. Make him tell you the story. Of Cohen at the race track. It's a nifty. But in his serious moments. And they were many. He tipped off that Famous. Only had $18,000 capital. When Zukor started it. And now has fifty million. And that he had been offered jobs. Big ones, too. With First National. With Goldwyn. And with Universal. Before he started his own.

FOX'S EDUCATIONAL REELS

Something worth while. A move in the right direction. Intended at the start. For theaters. Later. If the non-theatrical field. Including educational institutions. Really develops. As it should. As many think it will. These reels should prove of tremendous value. Something like 1,000 cameramen. All over the world. Looking for material. Looks like Bill Fox. Is stepping out.

Missouri Rentals Lower

The M. P. T. O. of Missouri in a recent canvass through the state announce that exhibitors here are paying on an average of 40 per cent lower film rentals this year than last year. The fact that a depression in business has led the exhibitors to be more careful in buying is the reason given for the lower rentals.

State right operators received further visits from Government tax officials Representatives of the Treasury Department created considerable stir in the Godfrey Bldg., 720 Seventh Ave., yesterday when they visited a number of offices of state right operators. They were interested in collecting or trying to collect the 5 per cent sales tax which, as before noted, has caused considerable stir in the industry.

It is understood that efforts are being made to bring about a meeting of the State right distributors for the purpose of taking concerted action with regard to the situation which all admit threatens to imperil the existence of a number of firms doing business in this manner.

Harry G. Koech, attorney for the Independent Producers and Distributors Asso. said yesterday that inasmuch as the Association had filed a brief there was nothing to be done relative to the matter until this had been passed upon.

Mike Rosenberg Coming

To Be One of Feature of New News Reel—Exhibitors Reported Agreeable
The Associated Screen News plans to publish a news reel twice a week, and expects to start operations about Nov. 1 or shortly thereafter.
E. G. White, general manager of the organization said yesterday that information reaching them was to the effect that exhibitors would be glad to show the reel, which would be furnished without charge; the expense of maintaining the service coming from national advertisers whose product would be in some form shown on the screen, as a part of the reel.

A Correction

Valentino Case

Argued—Star Dislikes a Barrel for Seating Purposes
Supreme Court Justice Wasser- vogel reserved decision yesterday on the application of Famous Players Lasky for an injunction restraining Rudolph Valentino from breaking his contract with Famous Players which, it is alleged does not expire until Feb. 7, 1924.

Dr. Marshall, attorney for Famous Players, argued very briefly stating that Valentino is a man of education and a college graduate and that he knew what he was signing when he made the contract, which, it is alleged he is now seeking to break. Arthur B. Costello, who appeared for Valentino in explaining his contention that Famous Players broke the contract first, asserted that it was agreed to advertise Valentino as star to "Blood and Sand," but that Famous Players also advertised Lina Lee and Nita Naldi as co-stars which he alleged to be an action taken in good faith. He also alleged that the plaintiff compelled him to hire his own torcado to instruct him for the picture instead of doing it for him.

Times Square Fire
Fire breaking out in the offices of the Continental Films Inc., Herbert Miles, proprietor, on the sixth floor of the Leavitt Building at 130 W. 46th St., caused considerable excitement yesterday in the Times Square section but little damage. Miles estimated the total loss at less than $500, including three reels of film and office fixtures.

More inconvenience was caused by water which short-circuited the elevators and put them out of commission for the rest of the day. The cause of the fire is unknown.
Valentino Case
Valentino’s attorney also asserted that the plaintiff’s testimony of his wife was further cause for his contention that the plaintiff broke the contract first because as soon as he had married, the plaintiff demanded that his wife leave for the East in three days and instead of giving her the time he ordered, he took her to court in an attempt to protect her from annoyance, she was compelled to ride in a berth where she was found and disturbed by reporters.

He says that this treatment of his wife so affected him that he was unable to do any work.

Valentino alleged further that the plaintiff agreed to give him the same contract as it gave Thomas Meighan but he found out that they were not the same, because Meighan is paid for the time he is both playing and working and Valentino is only paid when he works.

He also alleges that the plaintiff compelled him to pay the cost of his correspondence which cost him $20 a month.

He also alleges that when "Blood and Sand" was given a private showing on the Coast he was not permitted to invite his friends as other stars have been. He also alleges that mail and telegrams sent to the plaintiff’s office for his wife were held up.

Disturbance at Paris Opening
No far-reaching results are expected at the D. W. Griffith offices from the reported disturbance in a Paris theater at the first showing of "Orphans of the Storm."

Griffith makes the point that the feature was passed on by French governmental authorities before it was admitted to France for exhibition.

The matter is now in the hands of the European distributors of the production but no further outbreak is expected.

Fox After Chicago House (Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Chicago—William Fox is negotiating for a "loop" theater to house his big productions such as "Nero" during the coming season. Negotiations for the Olympic, a legitimate house in Randolph Street, are reported on but so far no contract has been signed.

The Olympic has 1760 seats with $4,000 reported as weekly rental. It is understood that the Fox special productions will open in some legitimate theater by Nov. 1.

Pauline and Valentino
The girl upon whom Valentino’s "Blood and Sand" is based is Pauline Barrett. She is an American and the story was written by an American, William A. Wellman, who is now directing other pictures in Hollywood.

Pauline is a good-looking girl, but she is no fashion plate, for her dress is the usual American costume of American cut.

She didn't come over with Valentino and she has no idea of his reputation.

They met for the first time when Pauline was shipped across from New York to Hollywood. It was a love at first sight and the two became engaged immediately.

Valentino Case
In the suit the plaintiff contended that the defendant was liable for not delivering the picture "Blood and Sand" to the plaintiff on time.

The defendant, in its answer, contended that the picture was delayed in transit.

The case is set for trial on October 21.

When Knighthood Was in Flower

Cosmopolitan Prod.—F. P. L.—Criterion

TUESDAY—* * * As a spectacle, it is dazzling to the eye, splendidly impressive and superficially true to the romantic and picturesque setting. And spectacle and story go together. Neither can exist without the other. The spectator is easily interested in the people and scenes, but the story is slightly in the background and secondary to their surroundings. Which means that the boy who loves 'paper' alone likes it, "Marion Davies" * * * "Marion Davies" is surprisingly, she really outdoes herself. HERALD—* * * The best motion picture Marion Davies ever made. " * * " We see in it a stirring performance by this beautiful young woman, an example of fine acting in cinema directing which ranks high alongside the best in real world and do the same for a box office. And a background which has not to our knowledge been surpassed.

AMERICAN—* * * Sets a new pace for motion pictures and gives them an entirely new sense. This film has started to grow up. There is a lot of sophistication to the story. The more cast looks like a list of all the available classics and every role was played with wonderful results.

MAIL.—The most beautifully ambitious motion picture ever produced. * * * Sets a new standard in magnificence and splendor of production. A good portion of the story is true to the love scenes and the rest of it is contained in the film and is as the result of dialogue, the work of some of the best writers and directors. Miss Talmadge creates one of the most interesting characters on the screen and Miss Talmadge is no better than the character she is playing in this film. The film most strongly depends. The story drags and the acting is less than American production at all except for its fine photography.

HOLLYWOOD—The picture is more consistently dramatic than "Smutlin Through," and there are sufficient intense scenes to warrant several romances. Miss Talmadge is very moving, playing with exceptional variety in her different moods and modes, fitting tears with tears so gently—well, the ladies will have to see the scenes.

EVE, TELEGRAPH—Norma Talmadge does a most appealing bit of acting. The treatment of a husband and a wives. Miss Talmadge creates one of the most interesting characters on the screen. The story is a good one. The picture has been shot in such a style that the weaknesses of the story are not shown and that the work of the true interpretive artist is appreciated. "Smutlin Through" and "The Eternal Flame" are both excellent, but these two are not as good. The picture is beautifully shot and adds much to the artistic merit of the picture. GLOBE—Excellent opportunity for an artist and the director. Unfortunately, Norma Talmadge, who has always given Dorothy Gish a helping hand in so many pictures, got in so many layers of this picture, much of which may be left out as a result. She is a beautiful artist and the picture is beautifully shot, but it is not as satisfying as "The Eternal Flame." She is taken in a new light, and the picture is a real winner. As an artistic movie doesn't have to come from Germany, there is none, not by a long shot.

The Eternal Flame—First National Strand

TIMES—* * * Some of Miss Talmadge's later pictures have been very believable efforts, but she does too much for them in "The Eternal Flame." For example, the picture, because it presents the story of a woman in a believable way, is a triumph of story, intelligent direction and an unusually good supporting cast.

N. Y. WORLD—There are a great deal of beauty and dramatic strength in this adaptation of Rilke's "In the Garden of luxury." A remarkably fine performance by Miss Talmadge and one which adds to the box office excellence of Conway Tearle. * * * make it a real and holding entertainment. People who have not seen Miss Talmadge in a more effective role.

THE PICTURE is long—over too long, perhaps, but every foot of it is used. How could it fail to be with those two fascinating people, Norma Talmadge and Conway Tearle, as the lovers. Frank Lloyd, as the director, and Francis Marion, as the adapter, add to this beautiful picture, a film which actually becomes a picture of the century. Miss Talmadge creates one of the most interesting characters on the screen, Miss Talmadge is no better than the character she is playing in this film. The film most strongly depends. The story does a bit of acting. The picture is a good one. The picture has been shot in such a style that the weaknesses of the story are not shown and that the work of the true interpretive artist is appreciated. "The Eternal Flame" and "Smutlin Through" are both excellent, but these two are not as good. The picture is beautifully shot and adds much to the artistic merit of the picture. GLOBE—Excellent opportunity for an artist and the director. Unfortunately, Norma Talmadge, who has always given Dorothy Gish a helping hand in so many pictures, got in so many layers of this picture, much of which may be left out as a result. Europe Hopeful

"No Need to Fear Foreign Producers" Says E. E. Shauer, Back from Long Trip

"Hopefulness is the most impressive thing in European conditions today" says E. E. Shauer, of Famous Players, who has returned from a two months tour of Europe. "But high-cost American producers need have no fear of losing any of the world market to foreign producers.

The best sign in England was the constant shortening of the delay between the film shooting and the release of pictures. Two years ago the period ranged from 12 to 18 months. Now nine months would be fair average. It will soon bring the lease date, as near our American.schedule as is physically possible.

Belgian conditions show a great change for the better. The leading theaters in Brussels and Antwerp are using posters liberally. Business conditions in France are uniformly good.

Spain is on the threshold of the big business ever known. Two splendid new theaters are being erected in Barcelona and one in Madrid. Next year will bring the presentation of pictures on a scale never before attempted in Spain. Signs of similar improvement in Italy are found in the larger cities.

Only in Germany and Central Europe is improvement being held back by political and economic conditions."

On July 27, THE FILM DAILY printed an article about the showing at the Cameo of special strips of film taken from what was reported to be a feature called "The Legend of Troubled Water," produced on the Coast by Joseph Schemek from a story by Francis Marion and directed by Chester Franklin.

The process is said to have been invented by Dr. Daniel E. Comstock, a professor of physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It is claimed that all natural colors, including blue, are fixed on the film, which can be shown on any projection machine and requires no special apparatus.

The bankers in the new company are said to be James B. Colgate & Co.

The name of "Technicolor" has also been used in a color photography process in which G. A. "Doc" Willat was interested. Willat worked on the process for years and one feature was photographed in Florida under his supervision but it has never reached the public.

In the Courts
An answer with a counter claim for $10,000 damages has been filed at the Supreme Court by the Clark Corporation against Herbert A. Fowler. The defendant alleges that on Sept. 22, 1921, the plaintiffs agreed to sell them eight films and were to get their way out of the income from the releases. It is alleged that four were delivered and that the plaintiff then represented that another film "Blind Circumstances," which the would deliver would be better than the other and the defendant took that an released the ability and character for the other four, and executed bills of exchanging for the films delivered, which he is beguined on. The firm says it took "Blind Circumstances" greatly in the other and it was a severely criticized by the reviewers that several contracts for the Bio were broken, causing the damage due stock.

"Manslaughter"—F. P. L.

Rivoli

WORLD—Its melodramatic pace seems to take it nowhere. It is as if a new man had become interested in the affairs of Lydia East, a rich woman and a thumbling, licentious, the District Attorney, and Evans, the rich man. It has not yet been decided in fact, before Mr. De Mille's reasons for making and "Manslaughter" are exhausted. For its early parts, the picture is very slow. It is in the business of being terribly dull, and it is in the business of being a bacchanalian YOUTH.

One Exciting Night" with Carol Dempster and Henry Hull, Due On Broadway Soon

D. W. Griffith's new feature, on which he has been working for the last five months, is rapidly nearing completion. Following the usual Griffith procedure, no official announcement has been made of the title, the cast or the nature of the story. The production has been tried out in Derby, Conn., under the working title of "The Haunted House" and now the final eliminations are being made. The picture, as shown in Connecticut, is more than 13,000 feet but will be cut to approximately ten reels.

Present plans are to call the film "One Exciting Night." Taking his cue from the success of "The Bat" and other mystery plays on the stage, Griffith says he has produced a suspenseful, Producing for the film is the producer who put his finger on the ultimate phase in one night, thus involving many lighting effects.

Carroll Dempster and Henry Hull, who play in "The Cat and the Canary" are the stars. Others in the cast are Anna Harris, Margaret Dale, Frank Herold, Charles Crocker-King from the "Bull Dog Drummond" company, Jordan Wallace, Frank Wunderlich, Greta Street, and Charlie Mackay.

"When One Exciting Night" was production not a visitor was allowed at the Mamarroneck studio.

Simultaneous openings of "One Exciting Night" in several large cities will be under the management of Albert L. Gray. Present plans are to show the picture as soon as possible.

Technicolor plans to print positives for all producers leasing cameras Plans under which Technicolor, the two producers have made known yesterday by William Travers, one of the company's principals, will lease its cameras to producers and print positive films for distribution. We already have a laboratory at Boston with a capacity of 50,000 feet of positive film a week. All money received from the sale of stock will be spent in enlarging this plant and adding one in Hollywood, Calif., so that we will have a capacity of a million feet of positive a week. This will put color photography within the reach of all producers.

"One feature has already been produced on the Coast. It is "The Miracle," which will be released in October. The technicolor version, 1,700 feet long, will be released in October, probably by Metro.

Accept Resignation

Of Brunet—No President Likely Until Next Year

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the resignation of Paul Brunet as President was formally accepted and the Board authorized the following statement:

"No action was taken on the election of a new President, nor is any such action contemplated for some time to come, and in all probability will be deferred until our annual meeting some time next year. The Pathe Executive organization as now composed has been functioning for over a year with splendid efficiency and with entire satisfaction to all concerned. We accordingly see no immediate need of rearrangement or changes in management. Furthermore, the resignation of Mr. Brunet will in no way affect the policy of the Company nor its management."

Elmer Pearson, general manager of Pathe, will in all probability be the acting head of the organization until the annual meeting.

Sees 40 Weeks

Of Business in Theaters and 12 Weeks Closing

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—Earl Hammons, of the Educational Film Corp., has been here, negotiating a deal with Ideal Films, Ltd., whereby the latter will handle the larger part of the educational output in England.

Questioned as to the present position of the business in America, Hammons is quoted as saying that it is gradually getting into the hands of a better type of showman. "When this becomes general," he declared, "you will find that they will run their houses on strictly commercial lines, writing their expenses off in 40 weeks. This method will enable them either to close their theaters for the remaining 12 weeks of the year, or to keep open at a loss if necessary. Some of the big showmen, such as Butterfield of Michigan, are already doing this, and the result is that they are avoiding the unnecessary expenditure of setting up and cutting down, and can afford to run good pictures instead of being forced to indulge in false economy in the management of their enterprises, which is what has been happening to a certain extent during the past summer."

Allen Creditors Ask Extension of Time

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Toronto—An application has been filed and formally made to George S. Holmsted, K. C., Registrar in Bankruptcy, by the creditors of the Allen Theaters, Ltd., for the granting of an extension of time to the company in which to satisfy claims.

This action was agreed to by a majority of the creditors of the company, which was announced, who felt that an extension would be preferable to selling out to another theater company which has made several offers to buy the Allen theater assets.

The application to the registrar in bankruptcy for his approval for an extension, which was made on September 14, is the final legal move on the part of the creditors to provide for the solution of the financial difficulties of the Allen Theaters, Ltd.

There is absolutely no 'fogging' or breaking up into primary colors when rapidly moving objects, such as an aerial propeller, are shown. Technicolor films can be purchased at a cost low enough that they can compete with black and white pictures.

"Technicolor, Inc., the new company has been organized under Delaware laws, with $30,000 shares of capital stock, at no set par value, to take over the stock of the Technicolor Motion Pictures Corp., a Maine corporation, with an equal number of shares.

"Technicolor has been brought to its present state chiefly by Dr. Daniel F. Comstock, professor of physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology."

"MANSLAUGHTER," RIVOLI'S BIG HIT

Cecil B. De Mille Has Turned Out Remarkable Motion Picture From the Popular Novel.

CAST IS WELL BALANCED

Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy, Lois Wilson and Several Others Score Individual Hits.

By R. W. BAREMORE

Cecil B. De Mille's latest, and perhaps greatest, production, "Manslaughter," is at the Rivoli this week, and from all indications that theatre will enjoy one of the biggest weeks of its career. Yesterday afternoon and evening the house was out early, the house was jammed for the early showing and there was considerable of a crowd on line waiting to get in.

All of which speaks well for the drawing power of the DeMille name, and it must be said right here and now that the producer will not disappoint his legion of admirers in this screen version of Alice Duer Miller's novel. Far from it, for here is a really great picture. Great in its dramatic power, in its action, production and greatest of all in its direction. It runs, we should say, about seven reels, and there is not a dull moment during the hour and a half that the picture is on the screen. There is action at all times, and here and there truly breathless minutes, as for example, the thrilling smash-up, between the speeding, skidding auto and the motorcycle. This and many other bits work one up to a high pitch of excitement.

Then there are those scenes that bring a tear to the eye, the ones showing Lois Wilson as the mother with her sick boy, a shot or two in the prison and some scenes after a court trial. Yes, it is a great picture, one that DeMille may well be proud of and a positive treat for the film fans of the country.

Mr. DeMille has not been sparing in his elaborate scenes and has fully lived up to his past reputation in such matters. There are some startling views of Roman ruins, staged with several hundred people on the set, that rival anything of their kind ever photographed. Also there are one or two shots of a New Year's Eve party at a modern joint and some pictures taken on Brooklyn and in the studio that will make up the spectator house that will make up the spectator house that will make up a screen in the fashion of the motion picture theatre.

Short Subjects Questionnaire

Replies received from Federated Film Exchanges of America Inc. in answer to the questionnaire sent out by that company asking theater owners why they do not already acquire short subjects indicate that this condition is mainly due to the lack of interest of patrons in short subjects. The majority of the replies are to the effect that patrons regard short subjects as “fillers” which are used to lengthen a program, and that their quality is not taken into consideration.

"Broadway Rose"—Metro Capital

E. V. Mail—Mr. Murray entones, tremendously, yes, even violently, as she portrays her sad role in this opulent film, which was created with an eye to the cost of settings. This sort of film usually brings a hold on the public, and, that is attractive and does jazz dancing well. As a matter of fact she has always become down.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Mae Murray provides most of the glamour in this "drama. how the fantastic pose and attractive and will lose none of her following through this picture. The production, too, is unusually good and she is probably somewhat what the public wants.

WORLD—Somehow the lovely Miss Murray seems too gorgeous to enlist sympathy. She is like a sort of legend, but he will be almost certain to resolve all over again that this blond star is the vivacious beauty of them all.

AMERICAN—Mae Murray, as Broadway Rose, revealed three special preferences. When she aimed at emotions she wriggled her shoulders to tears. On the other hand, it was grace that she purported showing, she owned up a most remarkable ability to kick and jerk about. And while under the influence of these same attributes she was draped or swathed in golden cloth. She was, in fact, a golden rose of energetic leanings.

HERALD—They have produced Edmund Goulding’s story with a fine and lavish effect. The films of the commonplace, and it’s a pity he has controlled Miss Murray to the same effect, for her sake. Now she seems to control him. She has so many golden clothes she appears to have been dipped in the mudder.

TRIBUNE—If you like Mae Murray you’ll surely like this new picture, for it has more of everything in it than any other of her producing ones. The first part is done in beautiful natural color and at all times a delight to the eye. The picture has been very well directed by Robert Leonard.

SUN—Robert Z. Leonard, the director, and we, believe, the brothers who provide the film with exquisite settings (however possible.), is sure to say that the direction is flawless.

Mary Anderson With Burr Comedies

Mary Anderson has signed to appear with Ray McKeel and Charley Murray in C. C. Burr’s “All Star Comedies.” Production has already begun at the Glendale studio under the direction of Gregory La Cava. Plans call for a month for a year.

Booking Combine
May Find Difficulties of Arranging Average Program—Much Discussion

There has been considerable discussion among a number of distributors with reference to the recently organized Associated Booking Corp.
As before noted this organization is made up of a number of the more important members of the T. O. C. C. who are planning a get together for the purpose of making their own arrangements in an effort to escape from the embarrassment and difficulty of playing important pictures at the big circuits around New York have shown these features.

The promoters of the Associated believe that they can secure a large number of members of the Chamber of Commerce to co-operate and are putting about 400 days of booking.

It is well known that practically all of the larger companies have long refused to do business with any booking combine. All of them are working with the Stanley Co. of America, but this has been of such long standing that it is generally not considered.
Otherwise there has been a general objection to doing business with booking combines. This was clearly demonstrated a year or more ago when members of the Northwest combine, engineered by Jensen & Von Herberg finally dissolved because of difficulties in securing product.

“It is impossible to say at this time” said one of the distributors who has been talking this matter over with other distributors, “what the attitude will be. This is sure: our company (it is one of the largest) will not do business with a booking combine.

The company thing to do is to say this realizing fully what some exhibitors in this section are up against because of the circuit booking.”

Newspaper Opinions
"Missing Millions"—F. P.-L. Rialto
AMERICAN—The art of Alice Brady now above the rather maudlin matter contained in the crook picture entitled "Missing Millions" at the Rialto. And Miss Brady owns a certain "art." She dominates the various situations. "Missing Millions" is neither better nor worse than a hundred other films that have an interesting star, and no story at which to laugh.

EVE, M.A.I.—Crook stories have a fascination all their own, whether in book, on stage or screen; and when they are done well, they are fairly certain to supply interesting entertainment. "Missing Millions" is well done, and, having one strikingly weak point, is an excellent example of the crook film.

HERALD—For seven-eighths of its length, "Missing Millions," Alice Brady's latest vehicle, counts within striking distance of being the best crook thriller ever produced in films, qualified to challenge all comers. It just loses on points, you might say, for in the end it suddenly gets stuck in a bog of sentimentality.

TRIBUNE—Whatever may be said of the picture, Miss Brady's glamour is well worth prolonging a long way to see. The story is by Jack Boyle and it is the tale of Mary Dawson and Banton Blackie. It is one of those stories where crooks turn out to be detectives and detectives turn out to be crooks, and you feel all the time as though you were playing "Button, button, who's got the diamond necklace?"

SUN—The picture is a fairly good specimen of its kind, but it is never as exciting as it promises to be.

TREASURY—This sometimes exciting picture is one of the best pictures seen this month. It is a story of suspense, and you never know who is the good man and who the bad man, or the good man, that is, until the end. You will say, "Missing Millions" is a fine picture, a good picture, a better picture. It is a picture that is going to make the audience feel good, and it is a picture that is going to make the exhibitors feel good.

Visitors
Visitors at the 17th Street office yesterday were Sam Grand and Harry Ashton of Boston.

FOLLOW the leader, good game, whether it after school or in motion picture business. The harder the pace the leader sets the more fun you get out of it, and in the case of Irene Castle's new picture "NO TRESPASSING," the fun is translated into money at the office.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Ran Resemblance Contest
Hartford, Conn.—In connection with the showing of “The Eternal Flame” at the Princess, Manager Needle of the Princess offered a string of “Norma Talmadge Pearl” to the girl who most resembled that star.

Reached the Golfers
Centralia, Ill.—An interesting and simple bit of exploitation for “Golf,” the Larry Semon comedy was used by the Illinois Card reading, “This ticket and 40 cents good for one lesson in Golf, etc.”, were given to members of the Country Club and quite a few of them attended.

All for a Short Subject
Kansas City, Mo.—During the run of “Golf” at the Royal, arrangements for window displays were made with various sporting goods stores. Several hundred golf balls bearing announcements about the picture were tossed out on the fairways, while the house front was decorated with various implements used in the ancient Scotch game. It was a somewhat unusual spurge on a short reel offering.

They Feared the Dog
Toronto.—Ballyhoo advertising that was a reminder of circus days was a feature of the exploitation of “The Silent Call” at the Allen. A strong likeness of the dog in the film was created and put on an old circus wagon for display around the city. The painting on the box, done in red and yellow with hand lettering was the “tort show” variety. The dog used as Strongheart was really an amiable animal but the signs on the wagon “Hands Off and Do Not Touch” created the impression that he was ferocious. The campaign was further tied up with a Dog show at the Exposition ground.

Romantic Atmosphere
Huntsville, Ala.—In his lobby for “The Dictator,” Manager C. A. Crute tried to create the gay, romantic atmosphere of South America. Japanese lanterns were hung over all lights in the lobby, and posts on each side of the lobby were wrapped with red and white bunting. Red and white bunting was also hung in festoons across the front of the lobby. Crepe paper streamers, red and white, were hung from the lights. Along the sidewalk in front of the theater were a number of small orange trees with green fruit on them, while Wallace Reid’s name in cut-out beaver board letters was hung in front of the lobby.

Got Up Novel Heralds
Philadelphia, Pa.—The Stanley through Eli M. Orlovitz, Paramount exploiter, got up a novelty herald for “Blood and Sand” consisting of the words “blood” in red ink and “sand” in real sand. The process takes some time but is fairly simple and inexpensive. The herald naturally requires two runs through the press on the second run the rollers were “inked” with glue. As soon as the word “sand” was imprinted in glue the primer sprinkled sand over the herald some of the grains catching on the glue, and the rest rolling harmlessly off. They cost only $7.50 a thousand.

No Megaphones or Directors When DeForest Idea is Put to Test

Lee De Forest, just back from Europe, discussing his invention for making pictures, is quoted as saying: "An entirely new technique from the usual silent drama remains to be developed."

"Ordinary film pictures on the screen can be greatly benefitted by the addition of the voices of the actors. An entirely new class of music will be possible, according to the phonofilm. Actors and actresses who can speak as well look pretty and make funny faces will be in demand."

"We will now hear, when a fine cruise is shown of a waterfall or a surf upon the shore, the impression of its music of nature is represented, and perhaps the fault of which only now makes all such pictures tangibly empty."

"The creative revolutionary effect the phonofilm promises to have on the silent picture industry, Mr. De Forest added will be the silencing of the talk director."

"Mr. De Forest will have no more megaphones to direct the actors being "shot" to the camera. All must be silent during the production of the 'phonomography' so as not to mar the recording of the actor's voices."

"The talk director, therefore, must do "stuff" in pantomime."

Booking War?

Associated Feels Hostile Attitude

Toward Any New Combine

Must Be Combattted

While incorporation papers have been secured for the newly formed Associated Booking Corp., made up of members of the T. O. C. C., the important matter of securing films for the first run exhibitors by the organization will be attended by considerable difficulty if Nathan Bur- kman, attorney for the organization, has been quoted as saying yesterday. "I understand that the distributors and producers who make up the Hays organization have already expressed opposition to this booking plan" Bur- kman said yesterday. "They regard all circuits as an evil and this particular circuit is a very unwelcome child. The chiseling will be a sad party."

"However we have no doubt as to our ability to go film. We are confident that the new incorpora- tion is so new that it has not had time to make booking arrangements. Any difficulty in securing film is regarded as a bridge which we will cross when we come to it.

"The present booking situation is very serious to independent theater owners, without the purchasing pow- er of a circuit. I refer to the present unjust way of determining who shall be first run exhibitors and who shall be forced to take the lower rungs."

"Formation of the Associated Booking Corp. is entirely due to the system that operates unjustly toward innocent men who have made large investments and who must protect themselves financially."

"It is up to the powers that be to devise a plan whereby the evils of the present system of booking first runs can be overcome."

The following statement was is- sued from the Hays office: "The attention of Mr. Hays has not yet been called to this matter. Mr. Hays is the only person qualified to outline the policies of this organization. He will do when the proper time comes and will give every one a square deal."

Leah Baird is at work on a production from her own scenario for a four-play set, "All Mine," with Richard Tucker, Walter McGrail and Tom Sanelli in cast. Release will be through Associated Exhibitors. Wallace Worsley is directing. Arthur Todd is cameraman.

Paramount Week is being observed with personal appearances of stars at local houses showing Famous Players-Lasky films. Fox Week, Sept. 10-16, will be marked with the exhibition of three Fox films for first runs and two for second runs.

Mildred Davis will not renew her contract with Hal Roach and Pathe to continue as Harold Lloyd's leading lady. Lillian Leighton, now under a contract signed by Pathe, as has been consistently reported, Pathe's inability to star another picture, other than a few shorts, and officers to star in features coming from other sources, which has made her decide against continuing as a leading woman, are given as the reason. Miss Davis' contract expires with the current Lloyd production.

A New Idea in National Advertising of Motion Pictures!

HERE'S some big news for you. Ellis Parker Butler, one of America’s foremost authors, whose book “Pigs is Pigs” is known to practically every family, will write a series of six story advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post on “East is West.”

First National considered this picture so unusual it invited Mr. Butler to see it. He was so enthused over its bigness and its fine entertainment value that he agreed to write a message to the American public on its merits. It was then arranged to use these heart to heart talks in the most widely distributed medium known, The Saturday Evening Post.

Think of the tremendous asset in having Mr. Butler write these messages under his own signature. No more capable writer could be engaged to undertake such a campaign. And his high standing as a man of letters will carry additional weight. Besides, the American people love the personal touch in advertising, and especially when a man of so unusual attainments talks directly to them, telling them what HE thinks. This is something new in picture advertising.

We want the public to know that “East is West” is a BIG picture, so big that it can’t be compared with any previous Constance Talmadge picture. So we arranged for this unusual campaign to drive home the fact to every man, woman and child.

These six story advertisements will also be reproduced on six half sheet posters for your lobby so that a single glance will connect the advertisement with the picture, even if any one should not have taken time to read them through, though they’ll be so interesting every one will read them.

Joseph M. Schenck presents

FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Just Plain Postal Cards
Sabetha, Ky.—Ordinary postal cards with printed announcements, carrying a large or small illustration, each time have been used successfully by the management of the Royal to keep people in this section apprised of its coming features. On many occasions this has proved a means of getting the motor car crowds from the country into the house, and was especially successful in the case of "The Prodigal Judge" recently.

Interested the Police
Kansas City—A few feet of film, a motion picture camera and cameraman won a huge amount of publicity for "In the Name of the Law" when it was presented at the Liberty. Police officials were interested in the matter and they agreed to take part in the stunt which consisted of having a pistol duel and chase staged for the benefit of the public while the camera was cranked. The newspapers wrote it up explaining that it was the shooting of a scene for the police film.

Music from the Roof
Logansport, Ind.—W. H. Lindsey is an ardent radio fan, as well as a showman. Coincident with his showing of "My Wild Irish Rose," he worked a clever stunt. Equipping a phonograph with a repeating device, and the vocal record, he hooked it up to his radio amplifier, and placed the whole assembly on the roof of the theater. With the machine slowed down a little more than ordinarily would be done, the effect was weirdly attractive.

Created Medical Discussion
Lawton, Okla.—Breaking into the medical profession Manager H. A. Williams of the Murray got prominent physicians to express an opinion as to whether such a close resemblance of two men as forms the basis of the story of "The Masker" was possible. To start the exploitation the manager did some research work and uncovered records of where double identity and mixed identities had puzzled the police. With this as a basis he went the rounds of the medical fraternity and uncovered a wealth of material that formed the basis of a feature article in the Oklahoma Constitution. The Constitution went a step further and arranged for a personally conducted shopping tour for a mysterious man garbed in a mask and Prince Albert. It was sponsored by the paper’s advertising department, all the stores staging bargain sales at set hour with the understanding that the masquerader would head the shopping contingent. It worked all ways. The stores were glad of the notice, the newspaper had a chance for an extra advertising spread and the Murray profited by a lot of gratuitous publicity.

Saying It With Music
Scotts Bluff, Neb.—The song published in connection with "Burning Sand" and bearing the same title has been used by Manager Ostenvarg of the Orpheum to exploit the George Melloyd production. A singing contest was started with cash prizes for the winners and the ambitious vocalists warmed before the presentation of the film. The winner sang as a prologue and it worked out in a profitable manner.

Letters from Prisoners
Kansas City, Mo.—The Royal came through with an exploitation stunt for "If You Believe It, It’s So" that was so touching in its appeal that it interested the whole town, and cracked the columns of the conservative Kansas City Star wide open. Although Kansas City is in the state of Missouri, most of its interests lie in the adjacent state of Kansas. Howard Price Kingsmore, the Paramount exploiter, offered to exhibit the picture to the inmates of the Lansing Prison, the state prison of Kansas. If the warden would permit the prisoners to write their reviews of the picture. Warden M. F. Amrine consented and the exhibition was staged. Kingsmore announced that the writers of the best review would receive cash prizes. The story of "If You Believe It, It’s So," which deals with crook, life and regeneration, got under the skins of the prisoners for they all wrote their criticisms under a seeming emotional stress. A flood of manuscripts poured into the warden’s office and Kingsmore then took them to the Kansas City Star where the editors used them in a feature story. The Star ran the letters for several days, and the reception by their readers is best attested by the number of "open forum" comments which were sent to the editors.

DETAIL ........................ Splendid
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Should be a clean-up for any house. The rich girl suffers like the poor usually does
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 9,061 feet

To the collection of splendid productions now being released, Cecil B. DeMille comes along with "Manslaughter," and adds another to a tremendously interesting lot.

Everyone who read this when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post realized its picture possibilities, but when DeMille took it over he decided apparently that it did not have sufficient material for a true, typical DeMille production, and so to the Miller story he pushed in another. Now as originally written the story seemed good enough. It told in a striking and commendable manner what happened to a typical rich girl of today who had nothing but money and time, and spent both in an effort to strike a happy proportion between Heaven and Hell every twenty-four hours, so that when this spoiled and pampered beauty is the cause of a traffic cop being killed and is sentenced to prison for manslaughter, human beings generally agree that she sure got what was coming to her. Of course, in the end she married the relentless prosecuting district attorney, who all the time has been her heavy lover. But DeMille wasn't satisfied with this and so he drags in a Roman orgy, to make certain that this, in picture talk, becomes sure fire.

There have been orgies and orgies. Every director now and then conceives an idea of what an orgy should be and most of them are distressingly weak, insultingly sickening and get nowhere. But Cecil DeMille decided that his orgy was to be a real one, and it is. Just how it gets by the censors is surely interesting. The way the Huns led by Tommy grab the various females and hurling them on their horses ride away, into anything you want to imagine has enough picture hokum to put this over anywhere.

Tommy Meighan, nor for that matter the entire cast, nor the story need this, but it all helps. Tommy comes back into his own with a tremendous kick as the prosecuting attorney and Leatrice Joy is a sheer delight pictorially. She is so easy to look at. There is a long and unimportant cast, but they haven't enough to do to talk about.

"Manslaughter"—What a Title for Electric Lights!

This looks like real money. You have so many things to work with that you should need very little help in getting this one over right. First, it is a DeMille production. Then it has a peach of a title. This is going to look very good in the electric lights. For once a title gets away from the sickening sweet stuff so many producers like to use. This is going to hit a lot of picture-tired people on the nose because it is so different.

Then you have Thomas Meighan whose name should be easy to work with and you can also talk about Leatrice Joy who is photographed so beautifully that she looks like a knock-out in a dozen different ways.

Judging from the way in which "Manslaughter" has been received on Broadway it should be easy to get this one by. They are fighting for seats at four o'clock in the afternoon.

You can work the title with unusual exploitation angles, especially around election time in November.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Could not offend.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 7,000 feet

This is a tricky one. The title, "Broadway Rose," sure looks like a box-office. Mae Murray, who in her two recent successes has proven one of the sensations

in so far as she has won back a tremendous public is likely to please because she has one of those part, where despite the wicked willun she is happy with the man of her choice back on the farm. This although she had all the glamour of Broadway at her feet.

They have loved this kind of stuff in picture houses
since Harry Davis opened his first one in Pittsburgh.
They probably always will. But there is no more comparison between "Broadway Rose" as a story and Miss Murray's two other recent successes, "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination," than—

Of course Miss Murray works hard. She always does. She is probably one of the most sincere workers in this business, and inasmuch as she is on the screen most of the time her personality is bound to have its effect and those who like her rarely can see too much of her.

The direction is up to Bob Leonard's usual standard. All of the sets are magnificent, but even this fails to help in keeping your audience from outguessing the result. They know from the moment Monte Blue apppears on the screen and is contrasted with Ray Bloomer as the millionaire's son, just what is going to happen, and they have to sit through a lot of footage before their guess comes true.

The star is allowed to overact at times and her make-up is too white. She wears gorgeous gowns and the production values are exceedingly high, but the story is so old that some may find fault with it, especially those who have been looking to her for the type of material presented in her two recent big ones.

The Hattons did the titles. They look as though somebody tried to get smart.

Concentrate Everything On Star—This Should Be Enough

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one looks very good. Besides a well-known star you have so many advantages in your favor that putting this one over should be child's play. You have Mae Murray's name and based upon her two recent successes, she is probably one of the most popular women stars of the day.

You can talk about her great successes, "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination," and you can say that she is just as charming in this as the others.

Then there is a certain type of audience which "love" stage romances on the screen. To them you can appeal by talking about Mae Murray as the Broadway dancer who eventually marries the country boy when she finds the millionaire's son is worthless. There are still a lot of people who like this sort of material.

Concentrate everything on the star because if Mae Murray's name and her reputation doesn't get them in, you're just in hard luck.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 6,377 feet

Every once in a while—too seldom it seems—someone comes along with a picture full of heart throbs, full of sentiment, full of charm. And it gets away from the wild thrilling line of stuff that so many think constitutes a good picture. “Timothy’s Quest” is one of these. The story is slight, indeed almost meagre, but then so was the story of “Humoresque”; so was the story of “Over the Hill.” It isn’t so much the story as the treatment and while Director Olcott has failed to take the fullest advantage of what was offered in this delightful theme, nevertheless he has turned out a mighty fine picture. It might have been improved very much, but just the same it registers very definitely and there isn’t any doubt but that your women patrons are going to dampen several handkerchiefs before these two charming youngsters, Master Joseph Depew and Baby Helen Rowland, bring the story to a close.

The dominant idea of the theme is that love is alter all the compelling force. The manner in which these two bring this about is one of the sweetest, finest, cleanest things that the screen has ever known.

It might seem that this sort of a theme with youngsters carrying the leads might sag, but it doesn’t. From the moment you are introduced to the city slums until the final shot it holds you very strongly.

Production values are quite satisfactory and the cast very good, although except for Vivia Ogdin, who will be remembered as the gossip in “Way Down East,” there isn’t very much for anyone else except the clever children and a humanly intelligent dog called Rags.

The story tells of two tots left in a tough tenement district which has the ironic name of Minerva Court. The boy overhears one of two drunken women say that he and his little supposed sister are to be sent to an orphanage, steals away taking with them their pet dog and a funny little wagon, a feature of which is a wicker clothes basket. They board a freight car and land somewhere in New England, where they finally reach the home of a stiff, prim old maid who is soured on life because of the manner in which her neighbors regard her sister’s unfortunate experience.

How they obtain real heartfelt sentiment and sympathy, and how it eventually develops that they are the children of the unfortunate sister, completes the story.

Go Strong After Your Women Patrons—Forget All Else

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here is one of the pictures that are called “different.” It is. And it’s so full of charm with so many punches that keep you feeling for your handkerchief that it is a safe bet that your women folk will love it. Base all of your appeal to your women patrons. Take no chances. Circularize and otherwise inform your women’s clubs and your church folk about this one and tell them it is the sort of a story that mothers love to see.

You haven’t any names worth talking about to draw them in so stick to the idea of the story and the moral which is that children make the home a worthwhile place and that a home without them is incomplete.

Norma’s Latest a Beauty But Still Quite a Bit Too Long

Norma Talmadge in “THE ETERNAL FLAME”
Associated First National Pictures

DIRECTOR .................. Frank Lloyd
AUTHOR ...................... Honore de Balzac
SCENARIO BY ............... Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN ................ Tony Gaudio

As a Whole...... Beautifully mounted and splendidly composed; probably one of the star’s best offerings

Story...... A particularly happy choice; affords star unusually varied role with fine acting bits

Direction...... Has made a picture very beautiful to look at; good on the whole but uses too much footage

Photography .................... Excellent
Lightings...................... Excellent

Star...... Plays with a good deal of feeling and sincerity; very fine in this Support...... Conway Tearle has splendid opportunities and handles them capably; others Rosemary Theby, Irving Cummings and Adolphe Menjou

Exteriors ...................... Few
Interiors ............. Elaborate at times; attractive Detail ............. Given good attention

Character of Story...... Woman enters convent when her lover fails to respond to her letters but is rescued by him just before taking her final vows

Length of Production .......... 7,453 feet

Norma Talmadge’s latest release is a very fine picture and, excluding “Smilin’ Through,” is the best of all her recent productions. It is gorgeously mounted and from start to finish it fascinates the eye, not only through the star but in the settings and excellence of photography and lightings. “The Eternal Flame” is a pictorial accomplishment whatever else it may be.

The story is a splendid vehicle for the star. There may be some doubt as to its entertainment value, inasmuch as it may not appeal universally. However, it makes a good picture and as such should please the largest majority. Frank Lloyd has given it a most careful production and there are some sets in which he must have reveled, such as the ballroom scenes and those in the convent. They are beautifully done. Excellent photography and lighting is equally responsible for the feature’s attractiveness.

There is only one thing that can be held against Lloyd and that is the excess footage. Although all the sequences and scenes are interesting and good to look at, there are a few that are too long drawn out. He takes too long to tell you that the Duchess’ lover will not relent, for instance, and despite the remarkably fine work of Miss Talmadge in the convent sequences, and the uncertainty of the climax which he develops, this also is a trifle drawn out. It needs some more cutting to give it an evenly sustained interest.

As the wife of the Duke who wagered on her fidelity Norma Talmadge acquires a role that is about the closest approach to what she needs. Her portrayal of the coquette is delightful and the more dramatic moments carry a restraint and conclusiveness that is first rate. Her best work is in the convent episode where she tries to remain true to her vows but finally goes back to the world with her lover. Conway Tearle gives an excellent performance as Montriveau. Others are of minor importance.

Story: De Langeais wagers with de Marsay that the Duchesse de Langeais would accept the attentions of no man. The Duchesse leaves her husband when she learns of the wager. She falls in love with a young soldier, Montriveau, whose friends persuade him that he is being trifled with. When the soldier does not answer her letters, the Duchesse enters a convent and is about to take the final vows when Montriveau comes for her.

Will Surely Appeal to a Better Class Clientele

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“The Eternal Flame” is a picture that will be appreciated by the better class patronage. You can safely make promises for it and talk about the beauty of it. By now you know what “Smilin’ Through” did for you or your competitor. They’ll undoubtedly be anxious to see what Norma follows with and you should be quite satisfied with the business if you give your attention to putting it over.

The star’s name is one of your best bets. Appeal to her admirers and tell them they’ll be sure to like her in “The Eternal Flame” and for those who want to know, say it was adapted from Balzac’s “La Duchesse de Langeais.” Conway Tearle’s name might also be used. Catchlines or notes from the press sheet can be used to give a further idea of the story and atmosphere.
Here is a production that we know possesses unusual box-office values. This knowledge is based upon the picture having proved these values across the big new "Third Circuit" in New York and elsewhere. Sydney Cohen and others have said they believed it to be as strong as "Humoresque." We don't say that ourselves, but we cannot help exhibitors from saying it after the picture has made good at their box-offices.

THE WOMAN HE LOVED

From the story by William V. Mong

Directed by Edward Sloman

William V. Mong who wrote this unusual story, with laughter and tears combatting each other for control of your emotions, acts the role of a Jewish refugee who found sorrow—and happiness—in America. The challenging Marcia Manon plays the leading feminine role. You will like the story even more than the critics who are quoted below.

What the Critics Say:

The Film Daily: The theme of "The Woman He Loved" is satisfactory stuff with happy and pathetic moments so distributed as to maintain interest. It is essentially a human interest drama. In our opinion it is not a big picture, but a pleasing one and it will prove satisfactory entertainment.

Trade Review: An entertaining story with an appeal that will be fairly general. Excellent types; good comedy situations and at times revealing a real sympathetic appeal. Will prove a worth while attraction in houses where "Humoresque" and "The Sign of the Roio" have found favor.

Leeand Reviews; A good, clean picture that tells a heart story; has a nice love interest, plenty of smiles and is very well made in every detail. Plenty of humor and real pathos—not over done and one that will interest every type of audience.

Moving Picture World: William Mong, considered by many to be among the foremost character actors on the screen draws a fine characterization in this picture. He wins immediate sympathy for the man he portrays. You can make this another "Humoresque" with some driving. A story built on the idea of making certain human appeal, which it has in no small degree.

Motion Picture News: Heart interest story based on family separation. Much sentiment and character study here. Play it up for heart interest ... it will go like a house afire.

We beg also to report that Pete Harrison, of Harrison's Reports, and Fred Schader, of Variety, had attacks of mental dyspepsia the day they saw the picture and wrote dyspeptic reviews. With a quorum present they are outvoted.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... 5,870 feet

The “Boston Blackie” stories have been so popular and so widely read that a picturization of one of them should meet with public favor. Alice Brady returns to the screen in an interesting “Boston Blackie” story, one that gives her a role which undoubtedly will please her admirers. The star plays with a good deal of sincerity and a desire to appeal to her audience and she succeeds pretty well. She does not photograph as well as she used to probably because she has gotten quite thin. Miss Brady wears attractive costumes, as usual.

There is only one possible objection to the story and that is some improbabilities which it contains in the way of remarkable feats accomplished by crooks. It is hard to believe they could ever operate as successfully in reality as they do in “Missing Millions.” The secreting of an impression of the key to the strong-room of a ship by a girl who has won the confidence of the purser is plausible enough but the workings of her two male accomplices who conceal themselves in the strong-room long enough to open many chests of gold and replace it with lead weights is a highly improbable bit even considering the fact that the “detectives” also turned out to be crooks. It isn’t likely either that a man would be permitted to take part in the grilling of the man he accuses.

Another almost impossible twist is that in which the two crooks are surprised at their work by the other two crooks and in the fight that follows no ship attendant appears on the scene until Boston Blackie and his accomplice have made a get-away. However, for those who won’t pick it apart for improbabilities,
the feature will prove sufficiently entertaining.

Joseph Henabery supplies an adequate production and succeeds in holding the attention nicely all the way through and handles the cast very well. David Powell does good work as Boston Blackie and others in the cast are Frank Losee, Riley Hatch, John B.
Cooke, Wm. B. Mack, George LaGuerre, Alice May, Cooper Cliff, Sidney Dean, Beverly Travers and Sidney Herbert.

Story: Mary Dawson agrees to return valuable diamonds which she has stolen if her father will be freed of a charge of which he is really innocent. She is double-crossed and her father dies in prison. Mary plans her revenge by stealing the gold which will save her father’s, accuser, Cantwell, from bankruptcy. She fails because it would send an innocent man to prison. Later Mary marries her accomplice, Boston Blackie, and Cantwell kills himself because of financial ruin.

Announce Star’s Return and Appeal Particularly to Men and Boys

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who cater to a large majority of men will undoubtedly find they’ll be well pleased with “Missing Millions” or young boys as well will particularly relish a picturization of a Boston Blackie story.
Let them know that “Missing Millions” is one of them and tell them about the international crooks who never thought a job too big for them to tackle.

For the women patrons use the star’s name and announce this as her return to the screen. If she proved a favorite in the past make a special effort to reestablish her and you can say she wears some pretty new costumes in “Missing Millions.” Say that David Pow-eill is her leading man and use catchlines to give an idea of the story.
Familiar Situations in Meller that is Highly Improbable

LIGHTINGS ...................... All right

PLAYERS....... Alice Lake as the innocent wife gives a fine performance; J. Frank Glendon, Rosemary Theby and Philo McCullough do fair work

EXTERIORS ................. Few
INTERIORS ...................... Adequate
DETAIL ...................... Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Actor, believing his wife in love with another, deserts her only to learn years later that their separation had been framed

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,641 feet

"More to be Pitied than Scorned" has really only one point of appeal and it is to the lovers of melodrama. For them it will undoubtedly prove entertaining and thrilling in its more dramatic sequences, particularly the climax in which the scheming villain and villainess receive their just punishment. But for others the picture is a very familiar bit of meller with the same old eternal triangle situations, improbable and sometimes quite illogical.

When the husband finally exclaims, "It is all clear to me now. It was a frame-up," is quite likely that the majority of the audience will feel relieved that at last he begins to show some signs of life for surely the role of Julian Lorraine gives J. Frank Glendon the most stupid part imaginable. In fact the things you are asked to believe are so utterly improbable that you lose interest in everyone and eventually in even the cute little girl whose appearance at intervals brightens up an otherwise distressing story. The child is shown to have more intelligence than the father especially when she tells him that her mother who had disappeared was in the house but they would not allow her to be seen. The stupid parent accepts the explanation of the woman who wants him for herself, that the child had been dreaming.

There are other equally illogical twists. When the woman, whose husband believed her in love with another and left her, is taken from the home of the actress into whose care the husband had given her child, the officer is satisfied with the actress’ explanation that she knows nothing of the woman excepting the fictitious name which she gives him. And why the mother waited a whole year before she finally kidnapped her own child is another bit that is not explained. But it’s all to provide a plot and it certainly is a plot.

Alice Lake as the wife does the best work even if there are times when you lose patience with her for suffering in such silence. Rosemary Theby appears to very poor advantage as the siren and Philo McCullough is a fair villain. J. Frank Glendon might do well in a decent role.

Story: Julian Lorraine, leading man in a stock company, leaves his wife Viola, because he thinks she is unfaithful. When told that she has drowned herself he marries his leading lady, Josephine Clifford. Sometime later the husband and wife meet and learn that the actress, who was in love with Lorraine, and Grant, another actor, who was in love with Viola, planned their separation. Josephine is killed and Grant turned over to the police.

Might Please Admirers of Melodramas But Consider Your Audience

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You’ll have to decide on this one for yourself because it all depends upon the class of people you cater to and just the kind of pictures they like. If you know they favor melodrama and think they would be satisfied with as improbable a one as this, let them have it. You should be able to judge by past performance whether or not they like the eternal triangle theme.

If they do they’ll undoubtedly be satisfied with it.

Perhaps the title will have a drawing power so give it good prominence. Where this feature is used it might be well to get a strong accompanying program, good comedy, scenic or whatever short reels you use. Then in case they don’t like the feature you can make up for it with the remainder of your program.

Herbert Rawlinson has a vehicle somewhat out of the ordinary in "Confidence," his latest Universal release. However, the variation may please the star's admirers and appeal especially to those who like "hick" comedy stuff. The picture resembles the small town humor of some of Sennett's two-reelers and this one, also, would have been much more effective as a short reel subject.

Harry Pollard has managed to keep the story moving, nevertheless, and there are only a few slow spots caused by repetition. The main theme isn't novel but it is given a few original twists and some of the comedy gags will undoubtedly register sure-fire. The burlesque bit, showing a taxi fully equipped with the many new accessories, will get a laugh. An old Ford is all rigged out in signals such as "Empty," "Fare," "Back Up," signs for left and right turns, etc. It's a fairly ingenious comedy bit and will go over with an average crowd. There's a pretty good thrill in the auto chase sequence with the camera shooting from the front of a speeding machine. The result is similar to that found in one of the recent news weeklies when the camera man accompanied a fire engine that was rushing to a fire. Where the fire engine dodged traffic, the car in this one dodged curves and precipices.

Most of the comedy business is pure nonsense with one of the episodes something like the one in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" where the slick crooks get all the small town farmers to invest their savings in a fake project. Of course there is also a romantic twist with hero Herbert winning the hand of his competitor's daughter.

Rawlinson will undoubtedly satisfy his admirers in the role of salesman and the feature, as a whole, may please them. It is something a little different than the star's recent vehicles.

Story: Bob Mortimer loses his job as a result of his failure to land a certain order. In his room Bob is surprised to find $50,000 in his traveling bag. The townspeople immediately presume that Bob is a rich man who has come to build factories in the town and he is given a cordial welcome. Lang, a professional crook, who has come to the place to fleece the people, joins forces with Mortimer whom he believes is a brother crook. How Bob reforms Lang and becomes prosperous completes the story.

You Can Judge Whether or Not It Will Do

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who usually can please their folks with the Herbert Rawlinson features will probably find they'll be satisfied with his latest. Let them know that it is somewhat different from the star's recent offerings and it might also be well to tell them it is a "hick" comedy number. The small town comedy stuff may just appeal to them.

Play up the star's name and tell them he has a "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" role in his latest picture, "Confidence." The title isn't very explicit so it would be well to give them a better idea of the story by using catchlines such as, "Bob Mortimer lost his job, but see how 'Confidence' found him another." A trailer showing the automobile chase might serve to bring them back.

"The Veiled Woman"—Class A-b. (Superior)

"The Veiled Woman" is one of the most interesting of modern screen achievements. It is distinctly not "movie stuff," but is impressionistic in style.

Character development is excellent, the story is clearly defined and its points of argument clearly set forth. Lloyd Ingraham deserves a great deal of credit for his worthy attempt at the making of an inspirational picture.

SCREEN OPINIONS

There is easily enough drama with its accompanying love story to keep the spectator firmly interested throughout the progress of "The Veiled Woman," a picture produced by H. J. Reynolds and released by Hodkinson. It is a somewhat poignant story of simple souls told appropriately in a simple manner.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

An agreeable absence of the stereotyped and exaggerated small-town types so prevalent in the motion pictures.

The picture is almost flawless.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

A very unusual picture. Contains a moral and certainly gets away from the general run of picture themes.

"The Veiled Woman" is the most out of the ordinary picture that has been shown in some time, or rather it is Myrtle Reed's story which is unusual. The theme is wholly unlike anything that has been used and is certainly a deviation from the general run of screen material.

For those who want pictures that are unusual, this latest Renco production can be highly recommended. It isn't likely that they have ever seen anything like it.

THE FILM DAILY

The offering is certain to excite considerable interest due to its unusual theme and the moral established. Again the characterization is well defined and stands out, particularly that of the title character. In its favor is the fact that it gets away from the ordinary run of photoplays and presents a line of drama which is absorbing up to the scenes which build the climax.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Screen entertainment of the best and highest grade. Exhibitors should find this production a valuable treasury aid.

Really Two Stories in Mix's Latest. The First By Far the Best

Tom Mix in
"DO AND DARE"
Fox

DIRECTOR .................... Edward Sedgwick AUTHOR ......................... Marion Brooks
SCENARIO BY .................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN .................... Dan Clark

AS A WHOLE..... Starts out like a fine, thrilling, old fashioned western but ends in tiresome comic opera hokum

STORY..... The first part is great—alive with action and interesting

DIRECTION..... Excellent in opening reels but never should have allowed Mix to attempt to be a comedian

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. All right
LIGHTINGS ...................... All outdoor shots
STAR...... Will make them hold their breaths in the Indian sequence but not in the comedy stuff

SUPPORT..... Very subordinate to star. Claire Adams, Claude Peyton, Hector Sarno and Gretchen Hartman have little to do

EXTERIORS ...................... Some fine shots
INTERIORS ...................... Fair

DETAIL ......................... Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Westerner, looking for excitement, gets mixed up with Southern Republic revolutionists

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,744 feet

There's one big disappointment due Tom Mix's admirers in "Do or Dare" when they find out that this picture isn't what it starts out to be. The first reel or two promise a genuine old fashioned western with Injuns and all and there are some great thrills right in these two reels. But just when it's going good and you're all set to enjoy a typical old timer, the scene changes and you find that an old man is only relating the story of the once famous Kit Carson Boone to the latter's grandson Henry.

From this point on the feature becomes uninteresting with Mix playing a comedy role that is not at all suited to him. He's much more at home doing stunts than trying to get laughs. Then, too, there has been such a run on Southern Republic revolutions lately that they hold very little attention for the average picturegoer. There is a lot of aimless fighting that doesn't make thrilling action and gets few laughs. The firing squad gag has been used several times already in short reels. Clyde Cook used it not so very long ago. The titles are after the fashion of the so-called "wise cracks" and run like "he's safe enough  * thinks a revolutionary movement is a dance step."

The Indian sequence is so lively and full of real thrills that they are bound to be disappointed with the other half of the film. There is an attack on a fort that is great. The scene was shot from a distance and at a considerable height. Then the pursuit of the Indians after the stage is another fine thrill. Mix does splendid work in this sequence and furnishes some new thrills that will go bix with his admirers, only they'll want more of them.

Story: After listening to an old timer tell what a great man his grandfather was, Henry Boone decides to go out and hunt up some excitement. He is given an important message to deliver to a certain general who is planning to overthrow his government and gain control himself. Instead Boone is captured by the soldiers of the one in power and held as a spy. He escapes and saves the ruler's daughter from the enemy. After various captures and escapes he aids the ruler in getting rid of the enemy and wins the hand of the ruler's daughter, Juanita.

Let Star's Admirers Know He Has Some Old Fashioned Western Stuff in This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Maybe Tom Mix's admirers will like this one all right and maybe they won't. It depends on how well they like the comic opera stuff that makes up the last half of the picture. Most likely they'll favor the first half. It's been a long time since there has been an honest-to-goodness western with Indians and that's what "Do and Dare" promises to be at the outset.

You can promise some fine thrills in this sequence and you can get a pretty good idea of what Mix's admirers think of him as a comedian after you show this one. He doesn't register very well as a comedian so he had better stick to the saddle and stunt stuff for that is where he shines. A trailer of the attack on the fort will bring them back and of course Mix is a drawing card, just give him plenty of prominence.

SCENARIO BY ........................ Barney Furey
CAMERAMAN ........................... Not credited

AS A WHOLE..... Only pictorial appeal to recommend it; otherwise crude and implausible in its thrills STORY ...... A succession of events that keep piling on more complications all the time; incomprehensive usually

DIRECTION ...... Gave all his attention to dramatic effect without regarding the logic of it

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Fair
LIGHTINGS .............................. Fair

PLAYERS...... Pete Morrison and others fulfill requirements but no one can be credited with a good performance

EXTERIORS ..................... Many fine shots INTERIORS .......................... Not many

DETAIL ................. Fair: cutting very poor

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Man searches for another whom he believes responsible for the death of girl he loved and finds him after numerous adventures

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,257 feet

They have to be mighty easily pleased to be satisfied with such old school meller as that provided by “Headin’ North,” a third direction in the many “Headin’ ” titles, “Headin’ West,” “Headin’ South” and “Headin’ Home” having preceded “Headin’ North,” a state rights feature in which Pete Morrison has the featured role. It is a very ordinary picture and will satisfy only those who prefer action and an acknowledged high tension in preference to logic and plausibility.

Things do happen in “Headin’ North.” That’s to be admitted. But in securing this rapid succession of events, the director has sacrificed about every other rule of drama. The continuity is choppy and the feature incoherent during a good part of its course. In the first place the hero starts out on an errand of revenge that is hardly justified. The girl he loved is killed and he assumes that her death was caused by the man with whom she eloped. The fact that hero apparently did not even know the man except by name certainly would have made his plan a far-fetched one.

The development is obvious from the start and all the way through regardless of the many intervening adventures which supply the action. There is the felling of a huge tree which pins a man beneath it, the rescue of the heroine from a canoe, the payroll robbery and a series of incidents which are intended as thrills. The lynching of the hero is unintentionally funny. Pete Morrison’s face is so composed even with the rope tightening around his neck, that you would almost wish they do the unusual for once and hang the hero. Morrison shows little ability and not much personality. His supporting cast is no better.

The picture does not look like a very recent production and it has been very badly edited. The cutting is pretty poor in places especially once where the girl is shown talking to her lover and in the next shot she is greeting another suitor at her home.

Story: Bob Ryan loved Madge Mullins and when she is found dead he sets out to get Stowell, the man she had eloped with. He meets with many adventures in a lumber camp where Stowell, under another name, frames him for a robbery. Later Stowell is shot by an eccentric fellow and gives out the usual dying confession that he committed the robbery but that Madge’s death was really an accident.

You’ll Have to Decide Whether or Not It Is What They Like

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Maybe this will do. It all depends upon the people you cater to. If they prefer action and thrills in preference to a sensible, plausible story, you needn’t worry about not satisfying them. But “Headin’ North” will hardly do if you know they are critical and demand good pictures.

The only feature of “Headin’ North” that you can safely talk about is the exteriors. There are some really fine shots in the picture. The players are not known nor are any of them likely to gain a following from their work in this. You might work it in best with a double feature day program or a good short reel program.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Cub reporter solves mystery of famous jewel's disappearance, wins a promotion and a rich girl's hand

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

The story of "The Cub Reporter" doesn't amount to much other than serving as a vehicle for this new athletic star. It does give him plenty to do and most of the stunt stuff registers. His attempt to secure an interview with the owner of a famous jewel gets the picture off to a good start. Talmadge commandeers a taxi and follows the girl and when traffic regulations brings his cab to a halt, he jumps to the roof of a passing trolley, from the trolley to the tonneau of another machine and from one to another until he finally lands in the girl's cab.

There's a fair comedy touch in the young reporter's effort to get into the rich girl's house as a guest at the ball. The various ways he tries to get by the butler at the door may get some laughs, especially the disguise he finally assumes. The comedy, however, does not reach any great heights. Talmadge is a rather likeable player who appears to want to please. It will be difficult to get the proper material for him for features.

"The Cub Reporter" is not unlike a recent Jack Boyle story that appeared in the Red Book, although no author is credited on either the screen or press sheet. The theme has been used before. It is an improbable one but affords some good action and will appeal to a certain crowd.

The direction is fair. It might have been a whole lot better if the director had made some bid for suspense. As it is the spectator is one jump ahead of the action pretty nearly all the way through. The regular picturegoer will have the conclusion figured out almost from the start. The title and the first scenes give it away. A cub reporter is sent to get a story on a valuable jewel. You know he's bound to get it and the girl too.

Story: Dick Harvey is sent to interview Marian Rhodes, whose father has just presented her with a famous jewel which was supposed to have originally been stolen from a Chinese temple. While Dick is talking to Marian the jewel disappears. Two guests, in reality the emissaries of a Mandarin who had sent them to steal the jewel, disappear. Dick follows and regains the stone. Later Marian is kidnapped but Dick rescues her also.

Will Do if You Have the Right Crowd for It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A downtown audience would be especially well pleased with a picture like "The Cub Reporter." It contains the sort of material and action that goes over big with them and undoubtedly they'll like Richard Talmadge and his stunts. A trailer of either his rescue bits or the episode in which he seeks an interview with the rich girl would be sure to bring them back.

Tell them it is a story of a young newspaper reporter who either had to get a story or lose his job. Catchlines might also be used to attract attention. In case you have played one or two of the star's previous pictures you know pretty well how your folks will accept this one. If they like him they'll surely be pleased with this one. It won't do for big first runs or a critical audience.
Short Stuff

"The Frozen North"—Buster Keaton—First National

Type of production.........................2 reel comedy

In selecting the drama of the northwest as the subject of his latest burlesque, Buster Keaton has hit the proverbial nail on its head. The subject is one which has not been satirized to any great degree and Keaton's antics have the advantage of novelty. There are several distinctly amusing episodes in the production, the scene at the fishing hole being unusually good. In it the sorrowful comedian approaches a spot where an Eskimo has made his opening in the ice and is holding his line. Keaton approaches behind him and drills another. The manner in which their lines tangle and Buster finally pulls the other fellow under and out is certain to keep them laughing. In the scene with the sled, where the principal's team consists of dogs of varieties ranging from the squat pup to the rangy mongrel there is more mirth-provoking material.

Not essentially original is the bit in which Keaton shoots up a saloon. He is seen pulling the trigger rapidly and then counting the fallen, finally checking the total up on a cash register. A shot which just misses him causes him to complete the dealing out of death and revise the total. Somehow, this is similar to the scene in one of Chaplin's productions in which he is seen keeping track of the men he shoots. It is funny, however, and will probably amuse them. The piece as a whole is a commendable effort and a distinctly desirable addition to almost any bill.

"Face the Camera"—Pathe

Type of production.........................1 reel comedy

Several bits of knockabout comedy have been wrapped about the efforts of a photographer to shoot a bathing-girl pageant. In the rickety stuff there is little that is new and the sophisticated patron, accustomed to slapstick is not likely to find it very funny. As a matter of fact, an important feature is the display of femininity. Jobyna Ralston is the leading woman. Paul Parrott, the featured comedian, is not given the opportunity to do anything out of the ordinary.

"The Challenge"—Max Fleischer Cartoon—Apollo Trading

Type of production.........................1 reel cartoon comedy

An unusually interesting number and one of the best novelies that Fleischer has created. It shows the little imp from the inkwell making an effort to waken the artist whose snores disturb all other sleepers. Fleischer wakes, makes a cutout of himself in miniature and this cutout figure boxes with the imp from the inkwell. Just as the imp is about to knock him out a rough looking customer who is occupying a cot in an adjoining room and is kept awake by Fleischer, comes in and actually knocks out the artist. There is a lot of good humor in this and the clever animated work as usual.

"The Radio King"—Universal

Type of production.........................10 chapter serial

Taking advantage of the current popularity of the radio, Universal has turned out a serial which offers numerous exploitation possibilities and which the capable showman should be able to present to his advantage. From the beginning of the first episode to the end of the third—all that were shown for review—almost every bit of action concerns itself in some manner with the use of electricity. The arch villain in the offering is an electrical wizard, the detective knows a thing or two about the wireless also and in addition there is an inventor who perfects a method of recalling radio messages. Much of the plot deals with the efforts of anarchists and the chief evildoer to learn the secret of the latter device.

In the battle between the scientific detective, in which role Roy Stewart is starred, and the principal heavy, electrical apparatus constantly appears and this should appeal to most serial fans. The episode endings which show in turn, the attempted electrocution of the hero, the assault on the inventor and the trapping of the detective, girl and a youngster will probably induce them to come again.

"The Tiger of San Pedro"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational

Type of production.........................2 reel drama

Here is another of the Sherlock Holmes mystery stories which follow closely the original Conan Doyle stories. The suspense is held well and there is a fight between the detective and the villain which holds the spectator almost breathless. The plot is quite intricate but unrolls smoothly, dealing with The Tiger, so called because he claws his victims after killing them, his enemy Garcia, Garcia's sister, Dolores, whom the Tiger steals after killing her husband, and Scott Eccles, through whom the mystery is brought to light. This film should prove a very good program picture and please the average audience.

"Some Wild Babies"—Urban Popular Classics—Vitagraph

Type of production.........................1 reel animal study

Made up of interesting material excellently photographed, this reel should make a worthwhile addition to almost any bill. Animals shown on the screen invariably appeal and this in particular should be liked because it includes material dealing with young birds and animals which most patrons will classify as "cute." Newly-hatched birds in nests stretching their necks for food are seen in the early portion and later on, one sees minute rabbits, prairie dogs, young deer, a Rocky Mountain goat, sheep, llamas, a yak, pigmy hippos, quokkus and other animals. Raymond L. Ditmars, Arthur H. Fisher and F. Percy Smith who recorded this have contributed a desirable addition to the month's release list.

Type of production.........................1 reel magazine

Of more than passing interest is another Pathe Review. No. 175 is fully up to the standard maintained in these films if not a bit higher than the average. "Water Spearmen" is the title of the initial portion which shows the primitive fishing methods of Congo dwellers and the second section, scenic material called "Silhouettes of Nature" fully lives up to the designation "photographic gems." "How It Feels" is a clever animated cartoon, while "My Chum," which deals with a dog and a bit of colored footage at the close are also up to par. This series includes some truly commendable material and the exhibitor who is on the look-out for desirable short stuff should see some of these issues.

Prizma Threaten Suit for Alleged Infringement of Patent

William Travers Jerome, Vice-President of Technicolor, Inc., was notified Saturday by Prizma, Inc., producers of Prizma color pictures, through its attorney, Julian S. Wooster, 115 Broadway, not to manufacture, exhibit, lease or sell any color motion picture films made according to the process and with the apparatus described and claimed in U. S. Patent No. 1,490,920, dated July 27, 1920, and which is said to be owned by Prizma, Inc.

Jerome and Technicolor, Inc., are also requested to immediately discontinue further exhibition of the film exhibited at the Candler Building, and to account to Prizma, Inc., for all profit and advantages received therefrom.

This move on the part of Prizma was not entirely unexpected by many in the industry in view of the claims made in behalf of Technicolor, Inc., during the past few days in the New York newspapers, and the recent appearance of Technicolor stock on the New York Curb market.

Prizma, Inc., has been producing color film for the past four or five years and is now taking steps for the immediate filing of suits through Church & Washington, D. C., and Julian S. Wooster, to fully protect its interests.

Real Pictures

Lots of 'em. Never in the history of the business so many. At the same time. And this early in the season. They're hitting each other. All over. Cannot possibly give all their names. Too many. And liable to overlook one. Which will cause an awful hallow. Don't like hallow. But this is sure; they are out. In force. The kind of material. All the optimists were talking about. Several years ago. Fewer and better. You know. But they have arrived. That is—the better ones. Don't know so much about the fewer.

And this is the funny angle. Despite that they are good. Meaning the big ones. Reports from small towns. Indicate some. Are not getting the money. Particularly so. Regarding one of the big ones. From Famous or Famous Artists. Which is puzzling. A lot of people. And properly so. Because if they won't come in. For this sort of material. What do they want?

HEARST PUTS ONE OVER

And does it big. With "When Knighthood Was in Flower." And establishes Marion Davies. In a real way. What a picture? What a production? What a cast? Take off your hat.

To Bob Vignola. Forget this small town stuff: "Anyone could do it. If they had the money." That's out. Lots of 'em have had the money. And flivered. But this one. Hits on all eight. At once. It's real. And—what's more important. Will get the money.

Everybody. In this industry. From executives. To errand boys. Should see it. And feel proud. That they are in the picture business. Lord knows. You don't get that chance. Too often.

Hearst has spent millions. Trying to get somewhere. Well; this time. He landed. And it's a peach.

MIXING UP THE STARS

Important foreign buyer. Looking over Hugo Ballin's "Jane Eyre." Comments: "Well, I don't know. I like it all right. Think it's good. But where they want this. Somehow or the other Agnes Ayres isn't going very well. And I'm afraid they'll think. It's her sister Jane. And pass it by."

HELP 'EM OUT

Policemen and firemen. Want $220 a year more. In salary. Help them out. All you can. Particularly you exhibitors. In the T. O. C. C. Where you get a lot more help. From these boys. Than you want to talk about.

WAKE UP!

Meaning you members. Of the Independent Producers & Distributors. Who organized awhile ago. And then seemed to stop short. After a real start.

The one great difficulty. Of this business. Is that they start a lot of things. And then let them die. There's a Biblical expression: The Lord helps them. That help themselves.

LAY OFF BUFFALO

In the past 32 months. In Buffalo. There have been 49 managers changed. In the various distributing offices. Last one to go: M. H. Markowitz, United Artists.

It would seem. Buffalo is a good spot. For managers to shay away from.

THOSE COLLIERS ARTICLES

GOLDWIN'S NEW ADDRESS

Cable from South America. Reached Goldwyn offices. Several days ago. Addressed: "Goldwyn Pictures, 469 Fifth Avenue, New York."

DE HAVEN'S LATEST

Carter De Haven. Touring. Among exhibitors. Tells this one. About his property man: Came out on location. Carrying an iron. Such as women press clothes with. And explained it was a good one. Worried. Puzzled. De Haven wanted to know. Where such an implement was needed. In the script: "Here" said prop's; pointing proudly to scene 32: "don't it say Carter meets Flora on the lawn and presses his suit?"

Business of De Haven doing a flop.

OH, ALFRED!

Just think. What a time he'll have. When he starts an organization. Of ice cream distributors?

KEEP A COMING

All these reports. About H. D. H. Connick. Once upon a time. At Famous. It's true he's denied them. But they are saying. And it just won't be done. That if he isn't in one of the big companies. Soon. Well—they just say he will be.

GET OUT THE OVERCOATS

B-r-r-r! It's cold. Feels that way, anyhow. When you look over the list. Of snow pictures. There's "The Valley of Silent Men." That must give the stockholders. Of the American Ice Co. The pip. When they see all those undivided profits. Pathe has had three. Mayo made "Out of the Silent North" for Universal. Betty Compson had a lot of fur clothes made for "To the Border." And all the little Chinooks looked happy in "Nanook of the North." Then Universal tried out "The Trap" and "The Storm"—by the way, that's getting a lot of money these days. And R-C put in a bid. With "The Son of the Wolf" and Fred Warren shot "The Great Alone" and Universal did another "Perils of the Yukon."

That's enough snow for awhile. But, say; isn't it about time? For a good sea dramer.

Newspaper Opinions

"Rags To Riches"—Warner Brothers

ITEMS.—Wednesday, Sept. 12, is a photoplay of rare quality, combining fun, romance, humor, and a great deal of dramatic position. This young Westerner, Wesley Barry, the treacle-faced boy who was seen last in "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz," has made another delightful picture, although his career has been amusingly marvellous, mechanical.

THE JOURNAL—If excitement is what you crave, it surely comes in this film.

TELEGRAM—"Under Two Flags," makes the audience aware of the brilliant career which Miss Dean is an exponent of the star. This great piece of work is the result of a wide range of the particular opportunities on the screen than the stage has offered her. Miss Dean is an all in one vein and one of the outstanding stars of the day.

SUN—This Universal adaption of Ouida's famous romance has been so widely directed by Tod Browning that the patron is willing to allow a big discount for plausible and agreeable fare. Miss Dean is not doing her usual heart of thrills. Priscilla Dean, the star, has been discovered more altering nor more expensive.

"Pink Gods"—F. P. L.

Rialto

TIMES—Would deserve commendation if only for the fact that it sticks logically to its ending, even though that requires a killing of such a popular figure, as Bebe Daniels. "Pink Gods" may be praised on several other scores.

HERALD—Ending is not only unconventional, but very amusingly, and the whole piece of action as amusing as the woman with the diamond necklace.

GLOBE—There is more beauty in Mr. Strauss's pictorial effects than in the subterfuge which is the plot. Bebe Daniels, who is the leading woman in the picture, is everything Miss Daniels has been expected to be, and that James Kirkwood is quite all right.

SUN—Although "Pink Gods" is a far more exciting melodrama in itself, it is chiefly notable for the really striking performance which Miss Bebe Daniels dons. In this Crystal Stockley frares of heavy love among the diamond mines of South Africa she surpasses herself and contributes a note that is particularly powerful.

TELEGRAM—Bebe Daniels does some excellent acting in the part of the youngكس at the show, and are described as being the "pink gods," revealing a power of tragic acting in strong contrast with some of the joyous roles she has appeared in before.

Huge Incandescent for Studio Use

(Boston, Mass.—A 60,000 candle-power incandescent light designed for use at motion picture studios was shown for the first time at the convention of the Illuminating Engineers Society now in session at Swampscott. The National Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, at Cleveland, have made about a dozen of these lamps, the largest ever manufactured of their kind. The bulb is 12 inches in diameter and 18½ inches high. To operate a lamp costs $3 an hour. It is claimed that the light is nearest to sunlight of any artificial light.

The largest light for studio use today is the Sunlight arc with 1,000,000 candle power. Cost of operating a Sunlight arc is estimated at not more than $2 an hour. Many experiments have been made with incandescent lights for motion picture photography but these lights have not attained any great importance, lacking in actinic quality in their rays.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the fellow know how you cleaned up.

On the Cigar Lighter

Elizabeth, N. J.—In every cigar store in town the cigars were placed on the lighters, ready to be lit. The idea is for a light. "The Eternal Flame" is for the heart. Norma Talmadge, Miller Theater, New York.

In the Hoops!

During the showing of "Human Hearts" the parade in front of the Roth, around the block, was a huge success. The parade was pulled out on Saturday when many New Yorkers go to the beaches there, and the boys rolled the hoops along the sand, in and out among the people.

Fred V. Green, Universal, helper, in the plugging.

Filmed Fashion Parade

Seattle—An ingenious bit of exploitation was put over for "The Storm." George E. Bradley of the Palace sold a prominent department store the idea of cooperation. A fashion parade picture, using the store models and gowns was made, a florist shop operating the use of its windows as the scene of action. A miniature screen was installed in the store of the department store's windows and the films flashed on it, drawing quite a crowd. A scenario, showing a character in the story, was put to the city to begin, but the clothes had been worked up, one of the town's beautiful girls who agreed to try on the gowns while on the principal role. The work of taking the pictures and showing both made them stop, look and then come to the theater.

Decorated the Lobby

Youngstown, O.—Manager Joseph Shagrin of the Park arranged an elaborate lobby decoration during the run of "Monte Cristo," which attracted the attention of all who passed. The marquee which extends over a side-walk was belaced with a large array of flags, buntings, signs, cut-outs, and stills. Across both sides were canvas signs announcing the picture. Above these was a large cut-out from a 24-sheet mounted on heavy paper. This represented the Count of the story standing with arms outstretched on a sphere surrounding the words, "The World is Mine." The corners where the marquee and buildings met were rounded out with buntings and the interior could be glanced at by American flags. Beneath the marquee running at right angles to the curb was suspended another canvas sign painted by hand and describing the picture. Water colored stills and mounted posters were placed about the side-walk and entrance way.

At Broadway Theaters

Capitol

The entertainment is divided into six units. The first is the overture, Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody," with a crystal organ. The second unit is the air, "Kol Nidre," with organ arrangement by William Axt. The Capitol magazine is the third unit. The fourth is a tango, "The Queen of Sheba," with the Capitol orchestra accompanying the ballet corps. Miss Giamarelli and Alexander Osmansky follow with a tango dance. Erik Bye sings and the finale concludes this unit. Wesley Harry in "Back to Bremen" furnishes the fifth unit. The sixth is an original paraphrase of Hebrew melodies played by Melechore Mauro-Cottone, chief organist.

Cameo

Selections from "Vlle. Modiste" are played by the orchestra under the direction of Edward Kiley (for the overture). Then follow three short subjects: the news pictorial, topics of the day and "Wanderful Water," a Prima picture. John Roodenberg gives two screen songs, "Prelude" and Kober's "Papalotli." The comedy is a Hard Boiled Egg with Joseph Cottone. Wallace Reid follows as star of "The Ghost Breaker." An organ solo is the concluding number.

Rialto

Strand

The overture is selections from Vardi's "La Forza del Destino" with Kitty McLaughlin singing the aria. Then comes "Under Two Flags," the story of two lovers, preceded by a prologue, "A Street in Algeria," in which Wilhelma Bohlage is seen as a cigarette dancer while Joseph Martel, baritone, sings Finder's "Less Than the Dust." The short subjects are "Thrills and Adventure" and "A Matt and Jeff Cartoon entitled "Red Hot." An organ solo closes.

At Other Houses

Lesser's Trip

May Go Abroad to See That "Oliver Twist" is Put Over—First

ational Approves Plan

When Sol Lesser returns to the Coast at the end of the week it is likely that he will take up with his sponsors the question of going to London and perhaps visit the Contin-

to see if that the Coogil production, "Oliver Twist," gets a start with real American exploitation.

Lesser could not have found yesterday, but he said that First National distributed a sum sufficient to cover expenses for Lesser and the whole question is whether or not Les-ser's associates on the Coast consider that he can afford to give the time to the idea.

Amalgamated

Distributing and Producing Organization Formed by Kranz, Davidson and Grossman

A union of independent exchanges

cerned are Charles Kranz, George Davidson and Harry Grossman.

The company is announced as an independent organization of independent exchanges formed by two officers of the company after personal visits to key cities. No formation as to the present con-

volved could be obtained yesterday.

The production policy is an ounced as features taken from stage successes and famous books. For the first pic-ure "The Madonna in Chains," E.

Lincoln, Martha Mansfield and Mrs. Rodolph. Valentino have been aged. Production will start Oct 2 at the studios in New Rochelle.

The Mitterenthal studio in Yonkers has also been engaged for a second producing unit. Negotiations are also said to be in progress for well known stars.

In the Courts

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Trenton—An order has been issued by Federal Judge Joseph L. Bodine in the U. S. Dist. Court, directed against W. J. Vernon, W. H. Ellrige, the Marquette Co., Inc. and Asso. Theaters, to show cause why the management of the St. Regis should not be turned over to W. E. Ryan, who was appointed receiver last Jan., that the order at hand be vacated, and that the receiver continue to make the payment of rents to Ryan.

The Stratfield Amusement Co., which owns the State at Brooklyn, was sued in the Supreme Court by Paul M. Ginn, manager of the orchestra there in June for $15,000 damages. He wants $10,000 for injuries to himself when he fell through an unguarded hole in the orchestra pit, and $3,000 because he smashed his violin.

"Unlimited Facilities for Quality Work" They’ll All Come!

The greatest of all emotion-dramas—the play that has drawn laughs and tears from a million American hearts—at last given a production worthy of its story.

With the screen’s greatest character actor, Theodore Roberts, in the role he was born for—"Uncle Josh."

A story made of the sorrows and joys of plain folks and a great love that weathered adversity. Reaching its climax in a mighty cyclone scene that dwarfs any storm ever shown on the screen before.

Certainly one of the four biggest money-makers of the season!

Newspaper Opinions

"Pink Gods"—F. P. L.

Rialto

GLOBE—Old, old tale of a woman's inordinate love for something and her willingness to pay the price. The Picture is worth your while for its pictorial value.

POST—Thievish, dynaminstic, love and hatred are indiscriminately and inexplicably mixed. Bebe Daniels gives a clever impersonation of the woman. The Picture has been smoothly staged and photographed.

"Rags to Riches"—Warner Bros.

Capitol

POST—Here is an improbable story, in fact, an impossible story, yet a fairly enjoyable one. Perhaps it is because Wesley Barry is the central figure. There is something so incidentally happy about his far-spreading smile that you want to smile in return.

DAILY NEWS—"Rags to Riches" was a series of joyous chuckles to us because of the excellent work of Wesley Barry as the rich young who suffered from too much parentage. The Picture descends to a species of entertaining buffoonery, which you recognize but don't mind. When Wesley is on the screen the picture is great fun, and as he's in view most of the time, it's well worth seeing.

"Under Two Flags"—Universal Strand

TRIBUNE—And such desert scenes about the best we ever saw. The best thing Miss Dean ever has done on the screen. She is absolutely dynamic, for she has caught the spirit of the desert and has transferred it sparkling with life to the celluloid.

MAIL—Although it is the picturization of a classic, it does not possess the distinctive qualities it deserves. It is a bit too much like most of the other desert pictures.

"Under Two Flags"—New York Tribune

"Ten Nights in a Bar Room" It is reported that "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" has completed 88 per cent of the Northern California territory and is now booking in the schools and churches.

THE Film DAILY

Thursday, September 28, 1923
An "escape from the florid and maudlin stuff of recent flamboyant films...a welcome diversion from bravado and bunk," said the New York World of "Love is an Awful Thing," starring Owen Moore. It's a laugh picture your patrons will thank you for showing—Advt.

Carl Laemmle Returning
Carl Laemmle is returning from Europe on the Aquitania, due to arrive on Saturday.

Terriss Two Reelers
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
London—Tom Terriss has contracted with Seymour Hicks and wife, Ellaline Terriss to make a series of polite two-reel comedies of the style of Sidney Drew. Some of the stories will be from a few of Hicks' successful vaudeville playlets which he presented in London with his wife. All these will be produced by an American director under Terriss' supervision.

A. M. P. A. To Aid Movie Week
At the weekly luncheon yesterday of the A. M. P. A., Victor Schapira, as acting chairman, appointed A. N. Botsford chairman of a committee to work in conjunction with the Hays organization for a national movie week. A meeting of the committee has been called for next Thursday night.

Judge Moses H. Grossman spoke on the American Society of Arbitration, which aims to eliminate the red tape and delays of the courts by organizing a new tribunal of justice.

Uniform Contract
Reaching the Point Indicating It Will Reach Distribution Shorty

After a long session through the law committee of the Hays organization, and with important attorneys outside passing upon various intricate points, the indications are that the proposed uniform contract will, within a short time finally reach a point where it can be presented for acceptance to all interested parties.

The chief reason for the length of time consumed in the arrangement of the contract is what is known as the arbitration clause. So that this could be fair, effective, and at the same time legal, considerable thought has been necessary. Only yesterday the most recent draft of this clause reached the Hays office.

There are several problems meeting the committee in charge of the proposed uniform contract, one of them being those points on which the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce vary with the desires of the National Exhibitors' organization. It is believed, however, that this will be satisfactorily worked out. With the arbitration clause out of the way it is generally believed that there will be little or no difficulty in settling the other problems.

Chicagos Boosters, Says Klein
Edward L. Klein wires from Chicago: "Western exhibitors and exchange men are happy over greatly increased business and excellent prospects for the future. All are beating and co-operating with each other and team work always wins."

"Robin Hood" To Open at Lyric
Douglas Fairbanks, "Robin Hood" will open at the Lyric in the near future. Contracts for the theater were signed yesterday by the Shuberts and by H. D. Buckley, representing Fairbanks.

The presentation will be under the personal supervision of the star who is due to arrive here next Tuesday, accompanied by Mary Pickford.

"Robin Hood" will not be shown at any other New York theater during the coming season, it is announced.

Pete Smith, in charge of the "Robin Hood" exploitation and road shows, left yesterday for Chicago, where arrangements have been made which call for the opening of "Robin Hood" on Oct. 15 at George M. Cohan's Grand Opera House.
Northwest Notes
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Krome and MacArthur have bought the Strand, Laurel, Mont., from C. L. Harvey.

Ferndale, Wash.—Guy Merrill, of Elk River, Idaho, has bought out Edna Fitzgerald's Liberty.

L. K. Brin, who handles Warner Brothers products in the Pacific Northwest, has started a high-powered billboard campaign with 24 sheets of Warner 'Brothers Screen Classics, papering the city thoroughly. It is exciting favorable comment. Glen Moore, will cover Oregon for Brin, and John Brothers will cover Colorado and Utah out of the Denver office, which is under the management of E. J. Lynch.

Robertson Here
John Robertson, formerly with Famous Players and who has just completed Mary Pickford's "Tess," is in town. It is expected that Robertson will announce his future plans shortly.

There is considerable talk that he will make a series of series bearing his name.

Periodical Notes
Word comes from London that Walter Forde who is claimed to be the foremost British screen comedian, will visit New York within the next few weeks. Forde will be accompanied by Billy Bowman. Forde plans to inspect the studios in New York and on the West Coast.

New French Loew-Metro Firm
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Paris—For the purpose of exploiting the Metro pictures in France a small company has been formed under the title Societe Anonyme des Films Loew-Metro, with offices in the Aubert building, 124 Avenue de la Republicque. The capital is fixed at 256,000 frs., in five hundred franc shares. The first directors are J. G. Brockdill, of Gardour Street, W., and Merses. Pollock-Harr and Thomas Salter, of Paris. The renting of these films will be done through the Aubert establishment.

Theatricals
"The Gray Dawn" is now playing in nearly every major city, and there's more talk today than there was yesterday of the fact that "The Gray Dawn" is the greatest "western" released in the past two years. It sizzles with action in every foot of the film, and a picture of San Francisco during the days of the Vigilantes is one of the most faithful historical contributions to screen achievement.
WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

Is the most sensational hit in the history of motion pictures. All New York is talking about it! The newspapers are filled to overflowing with its praises!

Here are a few extracts from leading New York dailies:

"When Knighthood Was in Flower is one of the greatest film epics ever made in America; in fact, the picture merits visit after visit to grasp all its glories." — Robert G. Welsh, Eve. Telegram.

"The most amazingly beautiful motion picture ever screened. Moves swiftly never wearying, and leaving at the last a regret that it is over." — N. Y. Mail.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower is all that has been claimed for it; the people simply burst into applause again and again. Don't miss it." — Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"It seems to us that this picture is every bit as important to see as any play on Broadway. It marks a high point in the art of entertainment and in the art of the American motion picture studio. We whole-heartedly commend it to every man, woman and child to whom romance and beauty are not mere words found in dictionaries." — Daily News.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower ranks high alongside of the best in romantic screen drama with a beauty of background which has not to our knowledge been surpassed. The scene showing Marion Davies in an attitude of prayer is one of the finest moments which we have seen in the cinema." — N. Y. World.

"It has magnificent settings and costumes, and lighting effects of almost unbelievable beauty, and is acted with skill in addition." — N. Y. Sun.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower is dazzling to the eye, splendidly impressive and apparently true to the time and places of its settings. Marion Davies really outdoes herself, while Lyn Harding is a joy. Such a King!" — N. Y. Times.

"No one can afford to miss this great screen masterpiece, and you may be assured we will go again." — Evening Journal.

"Marion Davies gives a performance of the modern, stubborn, adorable Mary that is not only the best thing she has ever done, but one of the finest performances ever given by any actress." — Morning Telegraph.

"You come away from 'When Knighthood Was In Flower' as pleasantly weary as an art collector after a day among treasures, or an out-of-towner after a Sunday afternoon on Fifth Avenue." — N. Y. Globe.

"The production is one of the most massive and costly ever attempted, and Miss Davies' interpretation has made the entire effort worthy." — Edward E. Fidgjon, Journal of Commerce

"When Knighthood Was In Flower represents the supreme achievement of the motion picture art." — New York American.

"Beautifully staged and photographed. The costuming is gorgeous." — Evening Post.

The Kunsky Idea
In a recent issue of this publication there appeared an item with reference to Kunsky's new idea, which told of a tentative plan by which George W. Trendle, General Manager of the Kunsky enterprises contemplated putting up production for the Kunsky chain.

In reference to this, Trendle writes:

"We have never dreamed of putting up any pictures except to fill a certain point of our houses to the exclusion of other theaters in Detroit. We couldn't afford to fill up any pictures a six months period of time, and, if nothing is put any good shape on for the Kunsky chain.

"Thirdly, pictures like "The Four Horsemen," "Orphans of the Storm," "Three Weeks," etc., have usually played in a dramatic house at increased prices and have then been kept out of the larger cities for a period of three or four months before being shown in the picture houses, and in each instance the picture house has profited by it, as it has enhanced the value of the film. For that reason the writer arranged with the producers of "Blood and Sand" for a three months' protection on one picture to determine whether or not a protection of this nature would be an advantage or a detriment to our residential houses.

"All these things have to be entirely complete any information you have to the contrary is not only erroneous, but apparency due to the fact that perhaps because this picture was a definite success with the Broadway Strand theater over Paramount pictures we felt justified in announcing that we would give a one-sided account of the situation.

"We have received certain expressions from various quarters to give a one-sided account of the situation. We do not wish to discredit our organization with Associates who have agreed to an equal statement.

"Your publication has been authentic, to the best of our knowledge, and we will redact any salient points out to the contrary. A picture which went tremendously in the United States was probably among one of the biggest successes of last year, was not, did very badly in our part of the country because it was too long. Not only has there been considerable testimony that North Americans have been, as it were, done quickly and that this could not be done right. This being one of our features should be over five reels, no matter what importance there is either to production or story. That's why we thought it difficult when they run longer."

St. Louis Notes
St. Louis—The Rivoli, formerly the Royal, will re-open about Oct. 22. It is being enlarged and remodeled. The theater was recently purchased by Universal from Harry Koplar.

Eli Gory plans to rebuild the theater at Wisconsin and 10th, to be ready for occupancy on or before Dec. 1. Meanwhile Towne's Missouri city salesman is in the Fulco-Schaeffer Supply Co. quarters, 3301 Olive Street.

Samuel Werner, of United Film Service, has secured the Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois rights to the following pictures: "Evolution of Man," "Woman Above Reproach," "When Doctor Quicksle Did Hide," "Winners of the West," "Gold of the Desert, and Sons of the West," "Defying the Law," "Fighting Ranger," and "Guilt." W. W. Hodkinson Corp., will move into the old Metro quarters in the Plaza Hotel building as soon as alterations and improvements are completed. Additional vault space is being installed. The Goldwyn office adjoining is also to be completed and improved. Under the altered plan Goldwyn and Hodkinson will use the same main office room to Lindell boulevard. At present Hodkinson has quarters in Tom Leonard's Pioneer exchange.

Kiddies See "Nanook"
(by Cable to THE FILM DAILY)
Chicago—It twenty-five hundred small boys and girls from 30 charitable institutions saw "Nanook of the North" with the Orchestra Hall at the Ivolution of the management.

South America Busy
Max Glucksman who has just arrived from South America en route to London and Paris says that all through South America business is in excellent shape. He points out further that many of the features should be shorter. "A picture which went tremendously in the United States was probably among one of the biggest successes of last year, did very badly in our part of the country because it was too long. Not only has there been considerable testimony that North Americans have been, as it were, done quickly and that this could not be done right. This being one of our features should be over five reels, no matter what importance there is either to production or story. That's why we thought it difficult when they run longer."

More Comment on Los Angeles

In an article titled "California the Prodigious" in this week's issue of The Nation, George P. West says: "Today there are 10,000 actors alone in Los Angeles, including all who are listed with the central casting bureau from million-naire stars to drug addicts used for "atmosphere" in plays of the underworld. The movies spend hundreds of millions a year for salaries and materials. They have profoundly changed the entire city, creating a sprawling, formless city with an underlying population of Middle Western villagers, and their influence reaches into every home of the Southland where there are boys and girls. In Hollywood, Puritanism out of an insidious neighbor to the demimondaine of the arts."

Tied Up With New Game

San Francisco—An unusual tieup came through the new craze "Mah Jong" which is having a big vogue on the West Coast. A prominent store decided to put a window display of the game in to boost its sales. A live showman got wind of it and sold the store on the idea of having one of the figures masked. The masked man wore one of "The Masquerader" disguises, and played "Mah Jong" with three chic Chinese maidens several afternoons while the stunt drew thousands to the windows.

Gave Away Bananas

Charleston, Ill.—Manager O. W. McCutcheon of the American tried the banana peel joke when he played "The Dictator." McCutcheon bought up a lot of bananas and to each he attached the following tag: "This banana put Wally Reid to work and made him "The Dictator.""

Several hundred of these were distributed as heralds and made a big hit. In Charleston, folks aren't afraid to peel 'em and eat 'em right on the street.

Effective Tie-Up

Eveland—During the run of "The King of Zenda" at the Stillman tie-ups and newspaper publicized effective in arousing interest in the window of a prominent shoe store was shown a pair of slippers worn by Alice Terry. A large display was made, which read: "Dainty slippers were worn by Terry, in the making of the picture and such production, etc. Can any Cleve-land girl wear them? The following facts will be given: First, second and third place free tickets to "The Prisoner." They can be tried on inside Ladies' Shoe Department day morning, August 22, between 10 and 11 o'clock." A large colored poster giving Lewis Stone and Alice Terry was exhibited in the window and provided an attractive background. While a large assortment of slippers completed the effect display. The Cleveland Press filed a detailed story about the success of the competition. The first story outlined the general idea; the second, under a large picture of Terry. The story ran to pride, in that it gave the opinion that Atlantic, Pittsburgh and Portland were the only cities in the "Cinderella" felt.

The story went on to give average size of women's feet in England in comparison with the average size of women's feet in the United States. Instead of the final choice of Cleveland's Cinderella, when the lucky man was to get a pair of slippers, the store was flooded with applicants for the coveted dish. Instead of the single hour used for the trying on of the shoes, the proprietor of the store was obliged to extend the time to permit everybody to have their chance. The affair was a success.

To Protect Rights To “Sherlock Holmes” Title—Other Actions Filed

Goldwyn Dis. Corp., handling Jack E. Barmore’s “Sherlock Holmes,” announces that it will endeavor to restrain all other firms from issuing motion pictures under the title of “Sherlock Holmes” or “The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.”

G. B. C. Morton, author of the motion already filed in the Supreme Court by William Gilette, Charles Froliman Inc. and Ateli Enterprises Inc. asking for an injunction restraining the Stoll Film Co. Ltd. and Educational Film Exchanges Inc. from using the “Sherlock Holmes” title. Hearing on the action was held before Supreme Court Justice Francis Martin on Sept. 14.

The plaintiffs contend that Conan Doyle transferred dramatic rights to the character of Sherlock Holmes to the Triangle Publishing Corp. in 1924 and that therefore the contention is that a contract with Conan Doyle gives them rights to 46 stories and that, since the character of Sherlock Holmes is a fictitious one, the copyright claim will not hold.

Putting It Over

Record Size Canvas Sign

Columbus, O.—One of the largest canvas signs ever used to advertise a motion picture was a feature of the Grand’s exploitation of “Mute

The sign was dropped from the roof and covered more than five floors. It was 69 feet long by 11 feet deep. The letters were four feet high. Seventy-four nitrogen lamps were necessary to illuminate it at night.

Tied Up Merchants

Hamilton, O.—Fred Meyers of the Palace and a holdout for his double-truck for “Nice People.” More merchants than could have possibly been accommodated in two pages of newspaper advertising liked the title so well they really solicited permission to partake in the teip. Harry Swift, Paramount exploiter from Cincinnati, was really the boss of doing it. The gentleman that got the merchants. A typical ad read, “All Nice People eat at the De Luxe Restaurant.”

Auto Dealers Take Space

Evansville, Ind.—Seventeen automobile dealers paid for Manager C. F. Lewis’ full page ad on “The Crucible.” Two of them said they were just in time. Each ad contained an unidentified picture of an automobile with that car’s advertising slogan. Any person bringing the ad to the newspaper with each automobile correctly identified, received a free ticket to “The Bonded Woman.”

Ascroic Poem Contest

Altoona, Pa.—Manager Russell of the Capitol inaugurated a novel newspaper contest a week before the opening of “The Crucible.” The word contest was to write a poem with the initial letters of each spelling the words “A Pool There Was” when read downward. Several thousand came to see the production and then went home to write their poems. The winner received a cash prize.

Invited Criticism

Allentown, Pa.—Dr. B. H. Stuckert, manager of the Strand with the co-operation of J. M. Orowitz, Paramount exploiter, sewed up the town’s leading newspapers for a criticism of the picture “Gilded Cage.” In asking the public its opinion, Dr. Stuckert realized that persons who would have to see the picture only got patronage for all days of the run. The initial announcement was made in the form of a four column reproduction of a telegram from Dr. Stuckert, polling a few complimentary remarks to Allentown and stating that she, per-

Wesley Barry’s Latest Another Really Delightful Entertainment

DIRECTOR ..................Wallace Worsley
AUTHORS ..........William Nigh and Walter De Leon
SCENARIO BY ...... Wm. Nigh and Walter De Leon
CAMERAMAN ..................Not credited
AS A WHOLE........ Delightful entertainment; wholesome and amusing and likely one of Barry’s best so far

STORY........ Conventional melodrama of itself but serves as an ideal vehicle for star and has been splendidly handled

DIRECTION .... First rate; counterbalances meller with great comedy and fine audience appeal

PHOTOGRAPHY .......... Very good

LIGHTINGS ................. Good

STAR ...... Sure to “get” any audience; does very good work throughout the picture

SUPPORT ...... Niles Welch a good hero and Russell
Simpson fine as the farmer; others Ruth Renick,
Richard Tucker, Eulalie Jensen

INTERIORS .................. Good shots

DETAIL .................. All right

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Rich boy runs away from home to have some fun; mixes with crooks who plan to hold him for reward

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 7,209 feet

There isn’t a whole lot to be said about “Rags to Riches” other than that it is a fine picture, delightful entertainment and a wholly amusing feature. But that should be enough. It doesn’t matter that the story is the old conventional meller hokum. It is the way Wallace Worsley presents it and Wes Barry’s presence that makes it a winning number. They cannot help but be satisfied unless they object to being amused.

Worsley has handled the piece splendidly. He has kept the meller bits toned down and keeps the laughs coming. And they are all spontaneous. The opening shots showing Barry and Marmaduke Clarke, the poor little rich boy, are fine. It is going to hand the poor kids a thrill of satisfaction when they find out it isn’t so pleasant to be a rich kid who is for-bidden to play ball with the other boys. But the best of all is the farm sequence. If they don’t get a long laugh out of the picture where Barry rides a broken down nag whose back looks like a scenic railway curve, they probably never will laugh. There is another especially good bit in the opening reels where Wes is practicing on his violin but a close-up of the music stand shows that he is reading a “Diamond Dick” novel.

Besides the comedy business there is considerable human interest in the farm episode. The farmer, played by Russell Simpson, is a kind hearted old fellow who gives the supposed crook and his little pal jobs on the place. Then comes the love interest in the romance between Niles Welch and Ruth Renick, the farmer’s ward. There is everything imaginable in the story, even a sure-fire thrill when Welch and Barry, in order to escape being hit on a railway tressel,
are forced to jump into the water below.

But it isn’t the story but Wes Barry that makes it a show. They’ll hardly know him at first as the rich boy. He’s not himself until the freckles show and he gets back to overalls. The supporting cast is adequate but not greatly important except for Niles Welch who makes a pleasing hero.

Story: Marmaduke Clarke encounters a burglar in his home and decides to follow him and see the world.
The crook who calls himself “dumbell” takes the boy away from the rest of his gang when they plan to hold him for a reward. Marmaduke’s adventures with Dumbell and the final discovery that he is a detective are interestingly told.

Get It and Let Them Have a Good Time

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Barry’s latest is another sure-fire box office that you don’t want to miss. Put in your order as early as possible and start getting them interested as soon as you are sure of it. You don’t have to promise anything but Wesley Barry in another delightful comedy entertainment that will please them all.

The star should have a big enough following by now to bring them in at the mention of his name.
Give them an idea of what he does in this by saying he was a rich boy who ran away from home to have some fun and found it on a farm. You can’t beat this for clean entertainment and a really “family” picture.
It is for old and young alike. Appeal particularly to youngsters and their praise will send the grown-ups.
Star Does Good Work. Story Is Very Slow Moving Except For Climax

Priscilla Dean in “UNDER TWO FLAGS” Jewel-Universal

DIRECTOR ......................... Ted Browning
AUTHOR ................................ Ouida SCENARIO BY.... Edw. Lowe, Jr. & Tod Browning
CAMERAMAN ........................... William Fildew
AS A WHOLE...... The action, though thrilling, comes too late; early reels slow and consumed chiefly with incident

STORY...... Its possibilities for Sheik stuff have been elaborated upon; the ending is left indefinite

DIRECTION...... On a big scale pictorially; players are well handled but allows interest to drag badly at times

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Excellent
LIGHTINGS ............................ Very good

STAR...... Role of “Cigarette” provides her with right opportunities; admirers will surely like her SUPPORT...... James Kirkwood a good actor but too much so for a soldier; John Davidson, Stuart Holmes and Ethel Grey Terry all do good work but are occasionally stiff

EXTERIORS ........................... Suitable
INTERIORS ............................ Good
DETAIL ................................... Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY...... French girl, favorite of regiment, joins forces of Arabs to get information which saves her country and her lover’s life

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........... 7,407 feet

Priscilla Dean’s “Under Two Flags” is just a bit disappointing, or at least it is likely to prove so to those who will expect a picture full of thrills and action from start to finish. Tod Browning’s production contains some fine action but it is all in the last reel, too late to save the five or six slow moving reels that precede it. Otherwise his presentation is a good one. It contains fine bits of pictorial appeal and a cast that provides some interesting characterizations.

Some variations have been made in Ouida’s novel. For one thing they have taken the recent Sheik craze as an excuse for bringing out the desert atmosphere and generally stressing this angle of the story. It affords opportunity for picturesque desert shots, harem scenes and dancers, all of which are good to look at. But it is this and other slow-moving incidents that help to make the story drag when it should be one of continual action. One of the very offending slow bits is that in which the Princess Corona flirts with Victor, the carver. There is much bowing and ceremonial gestures with frequent closeups that greatly retard the action. The scenes in which Cigarette tries to win the affection of Victor are interesting inasmuch as Priscilla Dean’s playing holds the attention, but beyond that they also help to slow things up.

The best of Browning’s effort has been concentrated upon the climax. And it is very good. The escape of Cigarette from the Sheik’s harem and her wild ride to save her lover’s life and warn her regiment of the coming Arab attack, is especially well done. Browning has used a Griffith touch, that of shooting the scenes of the dashing horses from a low level with the result that the hoofs appear to jump right into the camera. There is a genuine patriotic flavor in the last scenes where Cigarette, though badly wounded, shoots the Arab who attempts to pull down the French flag. The original ending was tragic but here you are not definitely told whether or not the heroine dies.

Priscilla Dean’s admirers will in all probability be delighted with her performance as Cigarette. She is a thoroughly alive and fiery daughter of the regiment and then at times rather alluring. She is excellently photographed at all times. James Kirkwood is too good an actor to be a convincing soldier but they’ll like him. Stuart Holmes is up to his old tricks as the villainous Marquis de Chateuroy.

Good For Dean’s Admirers But Be Careful About Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In your announcements of “Under Two Flags” concentrate more upon the appearance of the star and the pictorial values than on any promises of action because the production is disappointing in the last mentioned quality. You can make promises for the climax but don’t bring them in for the thrills otherwise, because after five reels without any they are liable to give up hope of any at all. The climax itself is fine but this is one time when there should have been more than one climax.

It is a safe bet where the star is popular. Her admirers will be pleased with her work and probably won’t kick because the story runs slow. Use James Kirkwood’s name also. The title is enough to let them know what it is about and be sure to say it is a new picture since Fox made one a few years ago. They might get the idea that it is a re-issue.

DIRECTOR .................. Harry Beaumont
AUTHOR .................. George Crosby
SCENARIO BY .................. Harry Beaumont
CAMERAMAN .................. John Arnold

AS A WHOLE............ Fair comedy number, but not nearly as good as star's last picture, "The Five Dollar Baby"

STORY.............. Almost a complete repetition of a previous picture, but not as good material

DIRECTION.............. Average; keeps it moving pretty well except for anti-climax that slows it up at the finish

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Good
LIGHTINGS .................. All right
STAR............. Not nearly as appealing in this; losing some of her "cuteness"

SUPPORT............ Bryant Washburn leading man; an adequate but unimportant supporting cast

EXTERIORS .................. Suitable
INTERIORS .................. Good
DETAIL .................. Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Girl deserts mother's choice of a husband at the altar and eventually marries a musician

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 6,000 feet

George Crosby's story, Viola Dana's latest release, is so much like a Rex Taylor story which the star appeared in under the title of "They Like 'Em Rough," that at first you would think they were showing the same picture again. There is the same atmosphere, much the same line of characters and the role of a temperamental young society girl for the star.

Viola Dana's last one, "The Five Dollar Baby," was such a winner that this one seems even weaker than it otherwise would if it hadn't followed such a good one. The situations in this are familiar and not strong enough to provoke genuine laughs. At best it is only mildly amusing. The intended comedy is mostly nonsense and even where the star's winsomeness at other times made up for poor material, she fails to do it this. Somehow or other she doesn't register her usual "cute" line of tricks and there is an obvious lack of refinement in some of her acting that will undoubtedly hurt her with some of her admirers.

The director keeps the story moving fast enough with the players chasing each other about in helter skelter fashion. For those who can be amused by the very slight situations that make up the story, it will probably seem a bright enough offering. Beaumont might easily have stopped with five reels but he takes on an anti-climax that gives it a rather draggy finish. The star's dance may cause some discussion where there is rigid censorship. It isn't the sort of thing her admirers will want from her. Bryant Washburn has a limited hero role. The cast is fair. Some of the titles are very poor.

Story: Clytie, a rich society girl, is about to be married to a man of her mother's choice. She deserts him at the altar and is taken back to her home by her orchestra-leader sweetheart. Her mother locks her in her room but she gets out the window and goes to the roadhouse where the jazz king plays. The dancer does not appear so Clytie takes her place. The mother arrives and tries to force Clytie to go home with her but she refuses. The leader kidnaps her, takes her to his island home and they are married.

May Go Over Where Viola Dana is Popular

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can undoubtedly do business if you know the star is popular just by mentioning her name. Probably they won't be as well pleased with this one because she has had some really good entertainments lately, especially the last, "The Five Dollar Baby." They'll want them to keep coming good.

Play up the star's name and tell them that "June Madness" refers to the month of many marriages. You might tie it up with some stunt exploitation that will interest them. Use catchlines and it might be well to let Bryant Washburn's old admirers know that he is Viola Dana's leading man in "June Madness."

DIRECTOR .................. Penrhyn Stanlaws
AUTHOR .................. Cynthia Stockley
SCENARIO BY .................. Ewart Adamson
CAMERAMAN .................. Paul Perry

AS A WHOLE........... Probably too far-fetched for the majority; requires an enlarged imagination to appreciate this STORY........... Interesting is some ways but always sensible; offers a cure for those who crave diamonds

DIRECTION.......Up to the Stanlaws standard; uses much footage for the amount of material

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Very good
LIGHTINGS .................. Good

PLAYERS...... Features Bebe Daniels and James Kirkwood in unconvincing roles which they handle capably nevertheless; Anna Q. Nilsson, Raymond Hatton and Adolph Menjou have unimportant roles

EXTERIORS .................. Appropriate
INTERIORS .................. Attractive

DETAIL .................. Suitable

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Woman with craving for diamonds is ready to barter her soul for them but learns diamond king only desires to cure her

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 7,180 feet

The figures in the above line indicate one of the bad features of "Pink Gods." The picture is far too long for the material involved. It would have maintained a more even interest and held the attention more closely if Stanlaws kept it down to at least six reels. The climax particularly could be speeded up and at the same time create a better suspense. The familiar method of approaching a climax is used and it is so obvious what is going to happen that it would be a whole lot better to get it over with quickly. There is a shot of the couple in their rendezvous, another of a bomb placed by the man's enemy, still another of the woman's husband rushing to the scene in one machine and the man's fiancé in another car. There is little thrill in this for the spectator because they've all seen it before. They may not be prepared for the death of the heroine, however. It must be admitted this is one exception to the rule.

Stanlaws presents a well made picture and there are the usual number of interesting shots, both interior and exterior. He has a good company and uses it to good advantage except that Bebe Daniels' diamond-hysteries are not likely to be taken seriously. His scenes showing how the Kaffirs steal the precious stones which they mine are very good and the most sensible angle of the story, incidentally.

Cynthia Stockley's story is a trifle too far-fetched for most minds to accept as film entertainment. It presents a possibly interesting bit of psychology but highly implausible—that of a woman's desire for diamonds reaching a state of near insanity and then indulges in a long episode in which she is finally cured of her desire but accidentally meets her death in the bargain.

Bebe Daniels tries very hard to make you believe she is "crazy" about diamonds and Anna Q. Nilsson looks very attractive in some new gowns but she hasn't a great deal to do. James Kirkwood is the diamond merchant who will undoubtedly strike some as being very reckless with the precious stones. Others are adequate.

Story: Lorraine Temple craves diamonds so, in the absence of her husband, she forces an invitation from a diamond king, Quelch, to see his collection. Lady Cork, in love with Quelch, tries to warn Lorraine that her husband is in town. An enemy of Quelch's blows up the building. Lorraine dies after explaining that Quelch had cured her of her craving.

Good Exploitation Possibilities With This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It may be a little difficult to judge how they will receive "Pink Gods." Where they like adventure stories and don't look for plausibility, you can most likely satisfy them thoroughly with this latest Penrhyn Stanlaws production. Tell them it is from Cynthia Stockley's story, "Pink Gods and Blue Demons."

Play up the names in the cast such as Bebe Daniels, James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Raymond Hatton. The subject offers plenty of ideas for stunt advertising and exploitation. Catchlines directed to the women would undoubtedly arouse considerable interest and there's an unusually fine opportunity for a tie-up with your local jewelry shops. It should help business on both sides.
These Triarts are the added measure that turns the conventional program into the ideal entertainment. There isn’t a program in the country that cannot be made better by including the Triart series, nor is there a theatre in existence that, having played them, has not received the enthusiastic endorsement of a well pleased audience.

Character of Story................. Girl’s guardian frames a case against her fiancé when she refuses to marry guardian’s son who is anxious to share the fortune the girl will inherit

Length of Production........... About 7,000 feet

"Deserted at the Altar" is just another meller with the regulation plotting and scheming usually found in the type of melodrama represented in Pierce Kingsley’s stage play adapted from the book by Grace Miller White. The picture offers entertainment only for a certain crowd, those who are satisfied with improbable situations and the usual melodramatic hokum.

The producer hasn’t spent very much on it and the director has not been extravagant. He provides an adequate cast and some excellent locations but otherwise his efforts are mediocre. There are a few good touches that make up the human interest side of the story and will undoubtedly appeal to a good many. The shot showing the school teacher’s recollection of her girlhood romance is a good touch. She is shown riding the now out-of-date tandem with her beau, the present villain of the story. This offers one of the feature’s humorous touches and the school room sequence is another that may get some laughs even though the same thing has been used before.

Director Howard has used nearly two reels too much in telling the story. The climax especially is long drawn out and almost tedious in its length. It is obvious all the way that the hero and heroine will be happily brought together at the close and it’s just a matter of waiting around for the ending. The lynching sequence is very much out of place and a highly improbable twist. It isn’t likely that any city fellow would remain in a small town long enough after having a case framed against him to permit the townspeople to lynch him.

Bessie Love is a rather appealing heroine but she looks far too clever to allow her scheming guardian to put anything over on her. Frankie Lee will win the audience as her brother and the remainder of the cast is more or less well suited. It includes William Scott, Wade Boteler, Tully Marshall, Barbara Tennant and Eulalie Jensen.

Story: A squire and his son plot to steal the inheritance of the squire’s ward and her brother Tommy. The boy is injured by an automobile owned by a city fellow who pays the doctor’s bill and falls in love with the boy’s sister. This spoils the squire’s plan for his son to marry the girl, so he hires a woman to present herself as the hero’s deserted wife and prevent the marriage ceremony. Eventually the woman, in reality the deserted sweetheart of the squire’s son, tells the truth and the lovers are happily reunited.

Will Probably Do Business Where They Like This Kind

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Once more it is up to you to decide whether or not you want this feature. And it depends entirely upon the class of people you cater to and the type of picture that appeals to the largest majority. If they like melodrama you will undoubtedly satisfy them with "Deserted at the Altar." It will not do for big first runs nor even the better neighborhood houses where they want original stories and good entertainment.

In the proper localities the picture will probably do good business. The title will bring them in and it can be boosted by stunt exploitation or catchlines, although it is sufficiently explicit in itself without further explanation. Bessie Love’s name might be mentioned. She is the best known player in the cast.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Woman’s dying request is for old sweetheart to look out for her daughter’s happiness for which he eventually gives his life

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,836 feet

For those who like dramatic stories, Peter B. Kyne’s “The Long Chance,” picturized by Universal with Marjorie Daw, Henry B. Walthall and Ralph Graves in the principal roles, offers a good entertainment. It contains some strong situations and good dramatic moments that will interest them and Jack Conway supplies a suitable production.

The director tells the story in a smooth, straightforward fashion and it moves rapidly toward the climax. He has succeeded in getting the dramatic bits over with some force and conviction even when coincidence or slight improbabilities are associated with them. It is easy to follow and quite explicit except in one instance when they do not explain how the Indian came to follow hero Ralph Graves into the desert. It is a fairly important bit inasmuch as the Indian’s presence saves the hero’s life after he is attacked by the villain’s emissary. A title is needed here to clear up the point.

There is one especially strong scene in the climax where Walthall goes out to “get” the man he believes has killed the hero, with whom his ward is in love. It has a good deal of punch and Walthall’s acting is very fine. In fact it is Walthall’s work throughout that is conspicuous. His performance is well worth seeing, all except the actual death scene. There are too many of them in pictures anyway. The last shot showing the graves should come out altogether.

The story deals with some fairly conventional situations such as the lost mine and the villain who tries to stake a claim for it and cheat the pretty heroine out of it. However, good acting and rather careful direction keep it from becoming commonplace and give it an entertainment value. The cast is a good one and the performances of the three principals, capable. Marjorie Daw is quite pleasing as the girl and Ralph Graves a suitable hero. Jack Curtis is always a convincing villain and others are Boyd Irwin, William Bertram.

Story: John Corbaly had died without staking his mine. His wife, Kate, dies twenty years later leaving her daughter, Donna, in the care of Hemmage, a gambler who had always loved Kate. McGraw, a stranger, comes to town to buy Donna’s mine for his employer, Carey. Hemmage learns that a bully, O’Rourke, is also employed by Carey. McGraw falls in love with Donna but Hemmage doubts his sincerity. McGraw is lost in the desert and O’Rourke files a claim on the mine. How it develops that Carey had years before double-crossed Donna’s father and had sent McGraw on as a “blind,” completes the story.

Satisfying Dramatic Entertainment and Good Acting

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitors

The many old admirers of Henry Walthall will be glad to see this one. Play up his name prominently and you can safely tell them he does some fine work in “The Long Chance.” If you can secure a trailer of the gun fight between Walthall and Jack Curtis you can be quite sure they’ll come back to see the whole picture.

It should be an easy matter to arrange a tie-up with a local book shop by having them display copies of the Peter B. Kyne novel, “The Long Chance” and the announcement that it can be seen picturized at your theater. Marjorie Daw’s name can be used and while Ralph Graves is not as well known as the other two stars he may be remembered for his role in Griffith’s “Dream Street.”

Back in 1918 Marshall Neilan directed Mary Pickford in an adaptation of Bret Harte's "M'liss." Probably the Pickford production will have been quite forgotten by now but those who remember it will not be likely to look with favor upon the Rupert Julian version, in contrasting the two. The original story has been changed somewhat and most of the dramatic sequences either eliminated or consistently toned down. This may have been done for a reason, since Gladys Walton is not especially adapted to dramatic playing. But in taking it out the story becomes too slight for screen purposes and there is little left but the romping of the star.

As the story goes now it is essentially a series of incidents in the life of an untamed mountain girl. There is not sufficient explanation of the action of the man who appears, claims to be the brother of the girl's dead mother, and kills her father. This was the big situation in the Pickford production. The schoolmaster was accused of the crime and the girl saved his life. In the Walton picture no one is accused of the murder. It's just forgotten. And there is a peculiar twist in the adoption of the girl by the murderer's two friends whom the title tells you are gamblers. There doesn't seem to be any good reason for them devoting their time to pampering the mountain girl with dolls and finery.

The star may please her admirers but she is capable of better things. She seems to confuse her character in this with some previous things she has done. Instead of making "M'liss" an untamed girl, at times she makes her appear tough, more like the gum-chewing sales girl that the star has portrayed cleverly. The remainder of the cast is average. Vernon Steele is a hero of minor importance.

Story: M'liss's father is killed and the two old men present themselves as guardians, much to the girl's objection. A new schoolmaster persuades her to attend school and the girl is contented until she sees the teacher sitting in the seat with Clytie, another scholar. M'liss secures a promise from the teacher that he will not do it again. When she is sent from the room for swearing during the school board's examination and gets no sympathy from the teacher, M'liss plans to run away with Velvet Jack. The teacher battles for the girl and takes her away with him.

May Do For Star's Admirers But Not Strong Enough Otherwise

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Don't count on getting them interested in "The Girl Who Ran Wild," on the strength of its being an adaptation of Bret Harte's "M'liss" because they may have difficulty recognizing it. It will go best where the star is very well liked and they don't care a whole lot what the story is as long as Gladys Walton is in the picture.

She has had many better vehicles than this. There is not very much you can say about "The Girl Who Ran Wild" so if they are at all critical you probably won't be able to satisfy them. It is a short feature, however, and might go very well on a double feature program or with a strong short reel program. It is not strong enough to serve as the main attraction.
IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

William Fox desires to make known to Exhibitors and Motion Picture Theatre Owners the fact that

FOX EDUCATIONAL ENTERTAINMENTS are now ready for release to the trade

Another Mile-Stone in Motion Picture History Has Been Passed

The release of the first group of Fox Educational pictures marks the beginning of a new Epoch of public Appreciation of the Service rendered the Community by the Motion Picture Theatre.

See three following pages for details.
—of Fox Educational Entertainments:

Wm. A. Johnston, Publisher Motion Picture News

says editorially, (See page 1354, issue Sept. 16.)

"When William Fox takes off his coat and goes after anything you can always count on results. We speak prominently here of this enterprise because we regard it of great fundamental importance. This kind of picture brings the exhibitor in sympathetic touch with those community groups which today are often opposing him. And it is just this bridging the gap—and only this—which will eventually eliminate censorship."

Robert E. Welch, Editor Moving Picture World

says editorially, (See page 182, issue Sept. 16.)

"There is going to be unusual interest in Fox Educational Entertainments. William Fox is spending a lot of money here on an idea that is akin to an ideal. If all the subjects hold up to the first ones he has lived up to every calculation he has made."

Martin J. Quigley, Publisher Exhibitors Herald

says editorially, (See page 19, issue Sept. 23.)

"The significance of this undertaking is very great. The time is most opportune for the production of motion picture subjects of an educational character...but the effort of the Fox organization does not stop merely with the production of subjects that inform and instruct...these subjects afford genuine entertainment. They place in the hands of the theatreman an instrument that certainly will be productive of excellent results in gaining the attention of the best people of his community. The Fox organization in this matter has identified itself with a highly commendable undertaking.

Coming Fox Educational Entertainments

Future Releases
The Educational Division of Fox Film Corporation plans to release fifty-two subjects yearly of from 300 to 1,000 feet in length. These will be pictures of current educational and entertainment value and will not be of a scientific or technical nature. They will be produced from the showman's angle for the purpose of entertaining and amusing the theatre-going public. Each one will be a distinct novelty, unlike anything heretofore offered the motion picture theatre.

Production Plans
More than 200 experienced cameramen are now gathering especially ordered material for Fox Educational Entertainments.

Frederick Fesneau and L. Maes, two cameramen thoroughly acquainted with the Old Country, now are in Europe making special pictures for these subjects. Russell Muth, who won fame by his daring flight over Mt. Vesuvius is in South America. Al Brick, another of the Educational staff, has just returned from China, where many unusual subjects were made for your use. These pictures set a new standard of exceptional entertainment.

CAMERAMEN............Oliver Marsh and Lester Lang
AS A WHOLE.......Holds attention but sequences are too abrupt STORY......Interesting Indian story, not entirely plausible but holds attention well DIRECTION........Satisfactory but seems to have been cut considerably
PHOTOGRAPHY ..........Generally good
LIGHTINGS........Some very artistic, others too dark PLAYERS..........Nancy Deaver very appealing, Saxon Kling and Nick Thompson give good performances
EXTERIORS ..............Beautiful
INTERIORS ................ Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY......Half breed Indian girl accused of murder by jealous Indian suitor is rescued by white lover
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.........4,700 feet
This picturization of Jack London's story "Jees Uck" while probably losing somewhat in being transferred to the screen still makes an interesting if somewhat improbable entertainment.
The settings which have been taken on the shores of Lake Champlain and in the surrounding forests are very beautiful. Although the story is obviously movie-stuff, and the introduction of an adventuress entirely unnecessary, the picture holds the attention all the way through. Miss Deaver has been well-cast in the role of the half-breed girl and gives a very appealing performance. Nick Thompson is a satisfactory villain and Saxon Kling as the white lover does good work.

There is a counter-plot that is unnecessary and unconvincing and could easily have been omitted, and the picture has evidently been cut considerably thus losing much of its smoothness. Some of the sequences are quite abrupt. However the story holds the attention well until the very end. Then, instead of showing the action of the climax, a title is used to explain, leaving the audience somewhat bewildered by the sudden turn of events.
The Indian atmosphere, while somewhat theatrical is by far the most attractive point in the picture.
Story: Jees Uck, half-breed Indian girl is accused by a jealous chieftain of murdering the tribe's medicine-man. She flees to her white lover at the trading camp for protection. When the tribe attacks the post, she misinterprets the presence of an intriguing white woman and surrenders herself to the tribe. Her lover follows and getting into the chief's tent by a ruse, finds evidence of his guilt in the murder and delivers him to the authorities.

Use Jack London's Name for Your Strongest Appeal

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Those who like Jack London's stories will undoubtedly be drawn to this if you feature it as a picturization of his story, "Jees Uck." It is probable that a great many people have read "The Sea Wolf" or "John Barleycorn" who have not read "Jees Uck," and a display of his name will get their attention. There is a good cast that you can feature and if your crowd likes this sort of thing it will not be misled by the title.
You can certainly make promises for the locations as some are splendid. A good comedy would help in case they don't care for the feature, and otherwise build up the rest of your program.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Political gang hire "double" to impersonate candidate for mayor who loses his sweetheart in the bargain

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,400 feet

William Russell hasn't very good material for his latest release, "Mixed Faces," another dual role vehicle in which he plays the part of a judge who is candidate for mayor and that of a fire extinguisher salesman who is hired to impersonate the judge and spoil his chances for election. The situations are rather slight and not very original so the feature will have to depend upon the popularity of the star for its success.

Rowland V. Lee provides a fair production and manages to keep things moving, though much of the action is of the helter skelter variety and doesn't mean a great deal. There is a lot of chase stuff that helps to make some excitement such as the kidnapping of the impersonator and early in the picture, the method employed by Jimmy Gallop to sell his fire extinguisher, may supply a thrill. He sets the hotel on fire to persuade the owner that he should purchase a supply of extinguishers.

Some comedy bits make their appearance but they are shortlived and not important. The main trouble with Roy Norton's story is that it is a combination of comedy and melodrama but isn't sufficiently strong in either to make a good picture. It will probably get over on the strength of the star and his admirers will be adequately pleased with it.

Russell does good work in the dual roles. There are not many double exposures, however, and the few that have been used are not especially good. Rene Adoree is the star's leading lady, and De Witt Jennings, the "heavy." The cast, on the whole, is fair.

Story: Judge Granger, candidate for mayor, is trying to persuade Miss Sayre to say "yes" to his proposal. She promises to write him her answer from the city. On the street in the city she meets a young man, Jimmy Gallop, who looks just like Granger and mistakes him for her suitor. Granger accepts her friendship and when he leaves for a trip to see the man he is impersonating, Miss Sayre writes that her answer is "yes." How Jimmy is hired by Granger's political opponent to undermine Granger's campaign and spoil his chances for election, and how Jimmy finally tells the truth but wins Granger's sweetheart, completes the story.

Will Go With Star's Admirers Or If They Are Not Too Fussy

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Possibly the average crowd will be satisfied with "Mixed Faces." Anywhere where they are not too critical, it will have a fair chance of getting over. But if you know they are pretty particular and want good strong stories, or pictures with a lot of action, you probably won't be able to get "Mixed Faces" over.

Where the star has a good following, you shouldn't have any trouble with it. Play up the idea of the two men who looked so much alike that even the sweetheart of the one could not tell them apart except by the way he hugged. That might be a good idea for catchlines, too, if you want to go to a little trouble to get them interested. Give the star's name a good prominence and use the regular line of exploitation.

Regulation Melodrama Is Dustin Farnum's Latest

INTERIORS ................. Few
CHARACTER OF STORY........ Ne'er-do-well dynamites brother's saw mill to revenge supposed alienation of his sweetheart's love

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 4,428 feet

Dustin Farnum's latest starring vehicle is obviously and unashamedly an old school melodrama, its salient feature being the explosion of the sawmill, in which the hero is pinned to a wall by a falling log. The first three reels are crammed full of Farnum in a "holier than thou" role as the strong brother. The action here is very slow moving, but after that thrills come thick and fast.

Everything happens just as you expect it to, and you are quite certain of the finish all the way through.

The exteriors are very beautiful, and the shots of the logs sliding down a mountain to the river are among the best points of the picture. The direction is good except in the bit where the dynamite is tucked into a log that is going into the mill. Close-ups show the saw slicing its way to destruction. In the long shots of this scene rain comes down in torrents but the closeups in which the villain inserts the dynamite show a surprising absence of rain.

Those who like Farnum, old fashioned melodrama, with a drunken villain a "strong" hero, striking workmen and a sure rescue finish will in all probabilities find this satisfactory entertainment.

Story: Dave Malkern wants his brother to reform because of Jim's engagement to Betty whom both love. Jim's continued drinking forces Dave to eject him from his job whereupon Jim dynamites Dave's sawmill. Dave is pinioned by a log, but escapes. However, Dave cannot turn his own brother over to the law, so allows him to get away, while Betty at last realizes where her true love lies.

Use Farnum’s Name—Get Good Short Stuff to Help Out

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Dustin Farnum in “THE TRAIL OF THE AXE”
American Releasing Corp.

The title of this doesn’t mean much so you will have to depend on Farnum’s name to draw them. If they like him, or if they like old-fashioned honest to goodness melodrama, this should please. Otherwise it won’t. You can feature the explosion of the saw-mill and the beautiful settings without hesitation, but the plot is threadbare.

If you think Farnum has a large enough following or if your crowd likes lumbering stories maybe this will get by. Better get a good program to carry with this. Try some unusual novelty short stuff. There isn’t enough of this type of material being used anyway, and when you get a chance to bolster up a weak sister this is the time to put it over in good shape. Don’t think about short stuff as “filler’s.” Make them cash in for you. And this is the chance with pictures of this type.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Man accused of murder is cleared by girl who solves the mystery

"Face to Face" is an ordinary picture as far as its entertainment value is concerned and a poor one when compared with present day productions. It is badly made and doesn’t look as though it is a recently made picture. The clothes worn by the women players are of the date when long skirts were in vogue the last time. Surely Marguerite Marsh would not be wearing a short belted waist or a full tunic in the days of long straight lines. Fashions are tell-tale things when it comes to showing old pictures.

The story is a very conventional one that concerns itself chiefly in the solution of a murder for which a young burglar is accused and in which a friend of the murdered man’s daughter interests herself for no other reason than that she suspects a mystery in the man’s death. Many of the situations are illogical and it certainly speaks bad for the police department to have a girl solve the mystery where they had apparently not even made investigations. The man is killed in one room and the burglar cornered in another where he claimed he had fired the shot but not at an old man such as the person who had been killed. Even a slight examination of the room would have immediately disclosed the fact that the fellow shot at a mirror in which he saw his own reflection. But it took the girl to find it out.

In his effort to create a great suspense the director has only confused the spectator with a series of unimportant movements which you are given to understand are highly significant, such as the introduction of a lot of papers found in the suspected man’s room. They are handed to the judge and you expect startling discoveries, but the people in the picture are the only ones who are in on the secret. The development is quite false and very incoherent and the story at best is an implausible melodrama. There is but one really good twist which discloses that the man was not murdered at all, but committed suicide.

Marguerite Marsh as the self-elected detective gives a satisfactory performance and the remainder of the cast is adequate. The photography and lightings are not up to the present day standard.

Story: John Weston is found dead in his room. Manners, a youth, discovered in another room, is accused of having killed the financier. Helen Marsley, visiting with Weston’s daughter, Grace, believes Manners innocent and suspects Hartley, Weston’s brother. She accuses Hartley in court and produces a glass door at which Manners had directed his shot, thinking that the reflection of himself was another man. How it develops that Hartley knew his brother had committed suicide but had kept silent because of his theft of certain bonds, completes the story.

Will Not Satisfy Them If They Demand Good Pictures

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If they like murder mysteries and are not critical about how logical or well developed they are, you can show “Face to Face” and probably not displease them. But if they demand melodramas with strong situations and coherent development they won’t accept this one. The picture is not up to the expected standard and those educated to better pictures will find this one lacking.

It will do for a transient house, double day feature or with a good short reel program. If you care to arouse their interest in it because of the mystery atmosphere, catchlines will probably be adequate to do it. There are no names in the cast to help the box office unless Marguerite Marsh might interest them.
A FRANK STATEMENT!

In announcing a new picture for release, the conscientious producer and distributor finds it most difficult to convey the excellence of his production...... for fear he will over-rate or sometimes under-rate its real value.

We are in just this position in announcing...

SHADOWS

The few persons at Los Angeles who have seen it pronounce "Shadows" the most unusual picture ever made, a revelation in every way!

So totally different that it just doesn't permit comparison with any other picture!

Their comments tempt us to refer to it as "the Greatest", "the Most Wonderful" motion picture ever made.

But one reads so many such claims that these adjectives have long since lost their true meaning!
So we merely wish to convey that

Thursday, October 19th

That is your day.

That is the date for the second Fall tournament of film golfers to be held under the auspices of THE FILM DAILY at Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, Long Island.

Only a rain storm can delay the event, and in that case it will take place the following day.

Almost everyone of importance in the industry, in and around New York, will attend. Besides many well known film men from Philadelphia, Washington and other points are expected.

It promises to be another real holiday for film folk.

Ask any who attended the event at Oak Ridge last May.

The fee for players, $10, including lunch, dinner and prizes. For non-contestants, $5. Send in your entry. Checks can be made payable either to the Committee, or this publication.

"Let 'er Run"—Christie—Educational

Type of production..........................2 reel comedy

Dorothy DeVore is featured in this comedy which holds the attention very well and is amusing throughout. She is ably supported by George Steward and Lincoln Plummer, the latter playing the role of a horse-racing Kentuckian, incidentally her father. He promises his consent to her marriage if her sweetheart's horse wins the race. At the last moment the hero's horse bows a tendon and in unable to run. They borrow a horse from Dad's stable and paint it white. The foot- age showing the race is excellent. The white horse wins and Dad rushes out to buy it, finally giving a check for twelve thousand. Just then a storm comes up and the rain coming down washes the paint off the horse. The idea that a man cannot recognize a horse through a coat of paint, or not even know that it is paint is a trifle far-fetched, but the whole thing is so amusing that it will probably not be questioned.

"Bending the Twig"—Urban Popular Classics—Vitagraph

Type of production..........................1 reel educational

Several shots of youngsters, showing them doing things not calculated to make them entirely healthy and other scenes showing proper physical care make up a fairly satisfactory number. Children are always liked upon the screen and there is quite a bit of footage in this that will hold interest. At the same time, this sort of material may not be accepted as suitable entertainment in some quarters. Its educational value, however, is a feature which can be employed to advantage, for school teachers can probably be induced to endorsing it.

"The Radio Hound"—Century—Universal

Type of production..........................2 reel comedy

Brownie, the educated dog, figures very prominently in this two reeler which has several amusing bits. Most of it is quite satisfactory laugh-getting material, with the dog and two youngsters who are occupying the center of the screen most of the time, making a likeable trio. It is essentially a vehicle for the trained pup, who is amusing in a radio rig and other bits. Using the wireless to provoke mirth is something that has not been done a great deal as yet and this hits the mark in doing just that. Kiddies are liked on the screen as are animals. In view of the fact that the capably performing canine and lads hold down the honors in this, it should register in fine fashion.

"The Big Flood"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe

Type of production..........................1 reel animated cartoon

Built around the idea that it is an ill wind that blows no one good, this cartoon reel holds interest in good fashion. It includes several amusing bits of business, one touch being especially funny. That is a play on the popular expression, "It's raining cats and dogs." During the flood which causes Noah to embark in his boat, innumerable little cats and dogs are seen mingled with the rain drops. It should get quite a laugh.

"His First Job"—Universal

Type of production..........................1 reel comedy

This is the first of a series of comedies with Lewis Sargent in the lead and throughout the reel it holds interest. Then the crash comes in the form of an ending that is all too abrupt and sudden and one feels as he sees the final fadeout that this should have been continued another reel. Until the conclusion, it shows good direction and the various situations in which Sargent is placed amuse. Julia Brown, who plays the role of little sister is clever and one wants to see more of her. Probably, the forthcoming issues will give her greater prominence. As to the story, that works up an interesting antipathy between the principal in the role of messenger boy and a pug-nacious scraper from the gashouse district. One begins to wait for the impending clash which is averted once, but it never comes. It is regrettable that they did not work this out further for Sargent performs capably. As long as it runs, it is sure-fire stuff, but why did they wind it up so soon? Robert Kerr and Scott Darling directed.

"Fresh Fish"—C. C. Burr—Educational

Type of production..........................1 reel animated cartoon

Here is a corking good cartoon which should fit into almost any bill and hold its own. It is built about a clever idea, has been animated in clever fashion and in its entirety registers well. It includes scenes of a youngster photographing some cartoon characters and the capers cut by the figures—a boy, goat and some fish—are unique and entertaining. Earl Hurd who is credited with this has contributed a reel that is worth its weight in laughs.

Official Urban Movie Chats, No. 34—Hodkinson

Type of production..........................1 reel magazine

Quite a bit of globe-trotting is done in this issue of the Urban Movie Chats. It starts with several shots taken in New York's aquarium, takes one to Hawaii directly after, roams to Canada where people of a strange religious sect are seen, jumps to scene or two in Guatemala and then shifts to California where sets used in some big films are shown. All of the material used is interesting and this is entirely up to the mark set in most of these releases.

"The Fable of the Hated Rivals"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe

Type of production..........................1 reel cartoon comedy

"None But the Brave Deserve the Fair" is the moral of this fable, in which Jack's Jill is temporarily stolen from him by another suitor who proves too cowardly to protect her from an escaped lion. The animation in this comedy is good as always and the subject matter is amusing. If they like this sort of stuff you can give them this without hesitation.

"Twin Husbands"—Carter DeHaven—Film Booking

Type of production..........................2 reel comedy

This Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven comedy, while pleasant because devoid of slapstick humor, is still slightly too impossible in plot. Carter DeHaven takes a dual role insofar as he is supposed to be twins. There is a funny scene in which he fights with his twin who has become violently insane and is locked in a room. By standing in the doorway with his own arm around his neck DeHaven gives the appearance of fighting with his twin. This should get a laugh. Carter having recently married has never seen his father-in-law. They are invited to visit him and at the station meet a friend of the wife's whose $50,000 inheritance depends upon her husband's signing of a paper that afternoon at three in the presence of a lawyer. Her husband misses the train and Carter is appointed temporary husband. The lawyer happens to be Carter's father-in-law and naturally complications arise. Mal St. Clair directed.

Have the newer. And better pictures. Over there. They are showing pictures. Two to three years old. As a rule." Then they add. In this style:

Valentino Loses

Justice Wasservogel Grants Famous Players Injunction—Case Probably Will Be Appealed

Justice Wasservogel handed down a decision on Saturday in the Supreme Court, granting Famous Players-Lasky an injunction with regard to the services of Rudolph Valentino. The Justice directed Famous Players to file an additional bond of $25,000.

Valentino, as before noted, contended that Famous Players has broken the contract.

Arthur Butler Graham, counsel for Valentino, said that an appeal will be filed immediately.

Washington, D. C.—Counsel for Charles G. 30 Exploiteers

F. B. O. Publicists at Each Branch Office Will Increase Staff By 22

Within a very short time there will be an exploitation representative at each of the 30 F. B. O. branch offices, increasing the present staff by 22, according to J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president.

Heretofore eight men have been working in the field. They have been exploiting mainly "In The Name of the Law," Under the new plan an exploitation man will be attached permanently to each F. B. O., to handle general exploitation and to render comprehensive service to exhibitors.

This is the most important move since the re-organization of the company, and the change of name from Robertson-Cole to Schnitzer, "F. B. O. puts itself on record as an advocate of personal, intensive exploitation.

The first to be added is Gilbert F. Josaphon, assigned to the Albany exchange. The eight men already serving F. B. O. are Jesse Wells, Buffalo; Frank Leonard, New York; Charles Gigerich, Philadelphia; Harold F. Wendi, Cleveland; Louis Kramer, Chicago; Hal Horne, Omaha, Fres- ton Hickey, Minneapolis and Monte Rice, Seattle.

The enlarged exploitation staff will be under the supervision of Al Bosberg, who came to F. B. O. from Famous Players.

“A Rogue’s Romance” Vitagraph—5 Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

TAKING advantage of Rodolph Valentino’s phenomenal rise to fame, Vitagraph is reviving this production of other days and in billing the picture is giving “The Perfect Lover” equal prominence with the star, Earl Williams. This is all well and good and fine business practice, but Williams is the boy who does the work. It was as a dancer that Valentino first won public attention and in this feature he gyrates through a couple of wild Apache dances, in which his fair partner undergoes some rough treatment and otherwise distinguishes himself in the role of The Ferret, a Montmartre hard-boiled egg. The girls will undoubtedly rush to see Rody dance, so this picture has a real box office value.

So much for the Valentino end. To Earl Williams, however, goes the honor of portraying a very entertaining character, that of M. Picard, master criminal. Williams dominates every scene and it is Earl at his best.

The atmosphere of Paris has been fairly well transferred to the screen. The Café D’Or being a colorful underworld setting for the Valentino dances. There are some elaborate shots at a fashionable hotel. The story is one that holds the interest throughout. It deals mostly with the theft and recovery of pearl necklaces and the capture of a band of grafters. The exposure of the plot and subsequent escape of Picard forms a dramatic climax. James Young directed this one. That is a decided asset. The thing for exhibitors to do when they book this one is not to overplay the Valentino end too much.

The Cast

M. Picard .............................................. Earl Williams
The Ferret ............................................ Rodolph Valentino
Helene DuFrenay ................................. Katherine Adams
M. Henri DuVal ................................. Brinsley Shaw
Jean Derneau ...................................... Maud George

By H. H. Van Loan. Scenario and direction by James Young

The Story—M. Picard, a master criminal, antagonizes The Ferret, a dangerous Apache. The Ferret in return hounds Picard, informing the police of his every move. Picard always outwits the police and escapes. A girl induces Picard to turn his powers to the aid of society. He helps the police capture a dangerous band of grafters as well as recover a valuable pearl necklace. He is cornered several times but always gets away.

Classification—One of those interesting French crook stories that always appeal.

Production Highlights—The Apache dances performed by Valentino and a sprightly little partner. The work of Earl Williams as Picard, the criminal. The exciting escapes. The theft and discovery of the necklace. The fine photography, direction and lighting effects. The correct Montmartre atmosphere. The thrilling climax.

Laemmle Says It Is Not The Place To Make Pictures
For America

European films will never be a place to productions made in America, according to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who has read the report in the past three months spent making an analysis of French activities and the possibility of producing pictures abroad with American actors. Laemmle was prepared to make several productions in Europe, but decided against this after seeing the field.

I am convinced that Europe is the place to make pictures for America, said Laemmle. "The conditions are very unfavorable. The difference in exchange is more than counterbalanced by the distance of the base of supply and the difficulty of getting American atmosphere.

Furthermore, I didn't see a single American actress in Europe who could possibly be made to look American. The faces and expressions are very different. There are no pictures at all in Europe so far as I have seen.

I am pleased with the results of our experiment. We have just made in our laboratories and simultaneously the release of the picture in this country. Therefore, American productions have been two years late in showing England. The British film situation is vastly improved, I believe."

Laemmle was given a spectacular home. A letter from Mayor L. C. Batey arrived on the deck of a French steamer, greeted with applause from a 30-foot cruiser with its wings. The French government has just returned from France where he looked after several matters in conjunction with Rex Ingram's "shooting" now taking place there.

Combination

May Solve First Run Situation in St. Louis—Skouras Conferring With Famous

Syrkos Skouras, holder of the Asso. First Nat'l franchise for Missouri, and one of the leading exhibitors of St. Louis, is in town conferring with Harry Lubin and other Famous officials regarding the first run situation in St. Louis.

Famous controls the Missouri, which is the largest new house in the city and Skouras operates, among others, the Grand Central. Skouras wants the first run situation cleared up to avoid the difficulties that exist at present. He doesn't want to dispose of his house huge, however, and if it is said Famous has no desire to sell the Missouri, if, however, some sort of a combination could be arranged this might work to the satisfaction of both parties concerned. If such a deal could be arranged the long run would be shown at the Grand Central, Missouri being given over to big pictures and specials which, however, would not have long run possibilities.

It became known several days ago that William Goldman, former manager of the Missouri, would become asst. general manager to Kuklkin, looking after the Famous theater interests. That might have some bearing on the St. Louis situation.

St. Louis—Nathan Frank, president of the Famous Players-Lubin Corp., admitted that negotiations are under way between Skouras Bros. and Famous.

Filming in Florida
May Allison, Richard Travers and Ben Hendricks, Jr., are the leading players in "The Broad Road," by Hapheburg Liebe, which is being filmed here by Associated Authors Prods., for release through Associated Exhibitors. Edward Mortimer is directing. Wm. Cooper is the cameraman.

In the Courts
Supreme Court Justice McCook has reserved decision on an application by Lucille Langhanke, 17 years old, who has taken the stage name of Mary Astor, for an injunction restraining Harry Durant, of the Famous Players Lasky Corp., from interfering with her employment by film producers because she signed an agreement two years ago to put herself under his exclusive control for six years.

Counsel for the girl argued that Durant had done nothing for her, but that the agreement required him to give her instruction, and at one time he advised her to seek a position for her with some other producer than Famous Players; and when he tried to do so was notified that the agreement with Durant was still binding. It was alleged that Distinctive Productions would have given her employment but for its desire to avoid a lawsuit.

Philip Wittenberg, Durant, told the court that film stars of today are not actors or actresses, but plastic personalities molded into shape by the ideas of the director.

Not Directing Blanche Sweet

New Faces
They've been talked of for some time. Every producer says they are needed. But it has been to Rex Ingram. To have now two new ones. In "Trailing Women"—his latest. At the Astor, Monday night.

He presented Ramon Navarro. Who made a real and distinct hit. He brought a new charm to the screen. He was clean, fresh and youthful. And worth watching. Incidentally. He is of the same general appearance of Valentino. Who happened to be in the audience. Given the right sort of material he will probably give Valentino something to think about.

Then Ingram was the screen new vamp. Barbara Le Mar. Of course vamps aren't very much in demand these days. But Barbara Le Mar stands out as a very interesting type, and can be expected to do things.

Navarro was a dancing master in Hollywood. Barbara Le Mar stands out as a very interesting type, and can be expected to do things.

New Canadian Chain
H. J. and Max Allen Mentioned In Connection With Sterling Theaters, Ltd.
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Toronto, Can.—Announcement is made of the organization of an entirely new chain of moving picture theaters in Canada by an enterprise that is titled Sterling Theaters, Ltd. It is intimated that the new chain is being organized by the Allens, including H. J. Allen and Max Allen.

One of the early acquisitions of the company has been the Walkerville, in Walkerville, Ontario, which is operated under the direction of Max Allen. Two theaters have been secured in Toronto, the La Plaza, at 735 Queen St., and the National, at 373 Yonge St.

Sterling Theaters, Ltd, has also secured or will acquire theaters in various Ontario centers outside of Toronto, it is declared. These houses are located at Windsor, Paris and elsewhere.

Whether the development of the Sterling Theaters chain is a sequel to the failure of the Allen Theaters, or is an organization which is being undertaken by several of the Allens formerly identified with the Allen chain, is a matter that is arousing considerable discussion in Canadian theater circles.

films is, on the whole, good and conditions are improving. There is evidence of effort on the part of the exhibitor to attract the public with long programs, and an increased effort to attract children.
“T he public is picking and choosing entertainment with greater care.
The makers of pictures are recognizing this condition, generally, as evidenced by the employment of the best story writers of the country and fur-ishing ample funds for the use of skillful directors in securing the most artistic results. Thus we have a healthy growth of the producer, exhibitor and public.”
The report also states that, on May 1, 1922, 93 theaters were open in Cleveland and its suburbs out of a total of 179 theaters, due to poor business conditions.

Newspaper Opinions
“A Woman’s Woman”—Allied Prod. & Dists.—Cameo HERALD—“not only gives the title character an opportunity to give free rein to her suppressed desires, but it also satisfies Miss Mary Alden’s suppressed desires to be a star.” * * Miss Alden gives an interesting performance.
MORNING TELEGRAPH—For the most part the picture is rather a drabby affair, with exceedingly good acting on the part of the star, Mary Alden, to make it worth watching.
TRIBUNE—A pretty good picture. * * * Mary Alden is always delightful.
WORLD—Subject upon which this play is based is important, and one that lends itself to filming. * * We are inclined to place it in the list of films worth seeing.
It is wholesome and sincere and is constructed upon a serious thought.

When Rudolph Valentino entered the Astor Monday night a flock of girls and young men almost knocked him down. When he wanted a breath of fresh air during the intermission they again manhandled him. And when the show was over and Valentino and his wife left the theater they were all but mobbed. By a small but zealous crowd, and had to take refuge in the New York theater, where the front doors were closed, to give them a chance to live.

There is a police sergeant on duty at the Astor. As he pushed the mob away from Valentino he kept saying: "Buy a magazine and see his face there. Give the man a chance."

ANNOUNCING

To the Exhibitors and the Public, the

Gene Stratton-Porter

Productions

Which will be made under the personal supervision of the Author, and which will include film dramatizations of the following of her record-breaking books:

Gene Stratton-Porter leads all other contemporary novelists in the number of her readers and sales. More than 10,000,000 COPIES OF HER BOOKS have been printed and sold to English-speaking readers, giving her an estimated audience of 50,000,000 READERS and a marvelous sales record, beginning with the famous "Freckles" down to the present time of 1,645 COPIES SOLD EACH DAY FOR 18 YEARS.

In addition to this matchless record of sales in the English language, there are EIGHT FOREIGN TRANSLATIONS, including the Arabic, and three Braille point editions for the blind.

The famous Bird Woman of the Limberlost country, in Indiana, is known where ever books are read. Her readers include readers and lovers of clean, wholesome, inspiring fiction and Nature Studies, between the ages of fifteen and ninety.

The first of her personally produced pictures, now being made with an all-star cast at the Ince Studios in Los Angeles, will be MICHAEL O'HALLORAN—a clean, simple story of real people, doing things in a sincere way, under the inspiring influence of an unusual newsboy—Michael O'Halloran, the most lovable youngster of modern fiction.

Up to June 1, 1922, the certified figures of the Doubleday & Page Company showed that

1,061,473 COPIES OF MICHAEL O'HALLORAN had been sold. Publishers estimate readers on a basis of five readers to the book, which gives this novel alone, more than FIVE MILLION READERS, who will be anxious to see Mrs. Porter's own screen version of her story.

Gene Stratton-Porter has carefully selected a competent experienced staff of picture makers to produce her films. She will be with them every day to contribute her own genius to the work—to add the little, intimate psychological touches that have made her fiction people beloved by all the world; and to assure her millions of readers of a film version which will be true in spirit to the books.

MICHAEL O'HALLORAN will be ready for the public early in the Winter. Distribution arrangements will be announced later. Meanwhile, exhibitors who wish to make plans for booking

In the Courts

In a suit of Rita Vina against Mary, Valerio E. Perret, with Leonice Perret, in which the plain is trying to collect on a judgment against Mme. Perret, an applicat was made in Mme. Perret’s behalf vacate an order directing the Equable Trust Company to turn over the plaintiff a balance of $237 on the note in the name of Mme. Perret. It was alleged that this money belongs to Perret, and that he is in Munich making a film and will have several months longer.

Supreme Court Justice McGovern heard the suit of Mary Astor against Harry Durant from preveting her from getting employment in film companies on the ground that she has an "apprentice" agreement with her by which she is to be under exclusive contract for six years, and that the question is one for jury to decide because her allegations are denied by Durant.

The single suit that was described as an applicant under the agreement as a "subterfuge" may well be to entail the relief asked for being too difficult to decide on affidavits alone.

Supreme Court Justice McGovern who heard the suit of Mary Astor restraining Harry Durant from preventing her from getting employment in film companies on the ground that she has an "apprentice" agreement with her by which she is to be under exclusive contract for six years, viewed the question as one for the jury to decide because her allegations are denied by Durant. The decision is that if she was described as an apprentice in the agreement, the subterfuge "it may well be that it is entitled to the relief asked for, but it is too difficult to decide on affidavits alone."

"Trifling Women"—Metro

Astro—

TIMES—Did you read some old tale of rascal, and incredible puppets, so lar-sketched in its assumptions and development and so fruitful in its results? Pay the thing you kept saying to yourself, "What impossible ragamuffin," and well told, socidal in its details and made so vital as a whole by the author's treatment of it that you could not put it down? If so, you came across the Astor a super picture tragedy.

GLOBE—Rex Ingram's latest picture is not so very compelling or thrilling until the came to his quarters of play, it picks up mightily and drives through to a surprising con-cclusion.

Ingram risks the unhappy ending. And if he sweetens the pill a bit by having this dis-tale take story within a story, it is only a device for sensory you home in a cinematic manner. His new picture is virtually a

A director's play and acting direction is excellent.

EVE—NEW YORK—Under the tritest, most rancid and far too box office title of "Trifling Women," there came to the Astor a superb picture tragedy.

Ingram nobly worked in the theme and the working out of its story. "Trifling Women" is practically perfect in its direction, well in its playing, and its cast as not to be improved upon.

Rex Ingram, who wrote the story under the far more alluring title of "Black Orchids," of course did the directing for Metro. And what a director Rex Ingram is! No wonder that in the Hollywood phonograph director he is listed as Ingram, Rex; there is no question but what he is king among the swingers of the driestephe megaphone.

JOURNAL—Scores a success as screen play.

MAIL—A director has something far be-onder the ordinary in ability when he can m an's his favor with pulling drama and can. He does not need dreams fulfilled and further, it move to a spontaneous story. Ingram's work is, indeed, the culminating the most tragic scene of his picture. Yet Ingram's picture is just what he has been described.

"The Women" is really just a "vantire" picture, but it is a film of this type articulately well made. No one but the best of Ingram's picture has made, but it is a good picture. One could scarcely expect to produce a "Four Horsemen" or "A Prisoner of Zenda" at every attempt.

EVE TELEGRAM—Without doubt Mr.
Ingram has been always given to emphatic and en Photographing its excels "The Four Horsemen," this time makes even the "Prisoner of Zenda." Mr. John F. Seitz is without a doubt the most prose of the situation.

He brings out all that is necessary. No thing more.

POST—"Trifling Women" is called Rex Ingram's greatest picture, but although it be no mistake with the big pictures of the year, it is not the equal of what we believe to be his greatest effort. "The Four Horsemen," as a piece of workmanship, now still stands out in the history of the picture business. And we are convinced that Mr.
Ingram has the gift of injecting real humor at the right moment and that a happy touch is to a director. The dramatic moments are exceptionally fine, and are very creditably elled by the vocal and instrumental exhibition.

BIG SURPRISE AT PLAYHOUSE.

Saturday night, in the face of new opposition, the Playhouse was crowded to the doors to see Johnnie Hines in "Sure Fire Flint." It was a wonderful laugh-getter, as it kept the audience in laughter throughout the entire seven reels. Then the surprise. Manager Flagg escorted Johnnie Hines himself to the stage, where the people were given an opportunity to see and hear him in person, and from the comments of the audience it is one of the best comedy dramas they have ever seen. There were also with Mr. Hines the producer, C. C. Burr, Lester Scott, general sales manager.

SURE FIRE FLINT!

The local newspaper reported "the picture went on cold" and "warmed the house".

A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION
1st Nat'l Survey
What Newspaper Editors Think Of Business Conditions And The Outlook
Following will be found excerpts from the survey made by Asso. First National, of business conditions throughout the country. The survey was made from newspaper editors and publishers.

ALABAMA
Mobile. Erwin Craighead, Editor The Register: Unemployment situation remedied, due to moderate lower interest rate, which encourages investment and increased demand of labor. Business outlook for Fall and Winter indicates improvement over same period last year. Cost of living lower. Merchants generally express satisfaction with business done, taking full account of conditions both recent and present, and are vigorously pushing trade. Local bankers, business men, economists, optimistic.

ARKANSAS
Little Rock. Business Manager, The Gazette: Unemployment remedied, due to big crops, recent improvement in business. Business outlook for Fall and Winter indicates that condition have been very good this year. Cost of living down. Business men optimistic, feeling that good times will continue.

COLORADO
Denver. Rocky Mountain News and Denver Times. Sub editor, General Manager: Unemployment situation remedied in the West, due to removal of factors, farming conditions and business in cities. Business outlook for Fall and Winter might be better in this region than last year. Conditions are improving steadily to the Middle West. People expect a decline in interest rate per capita, 20%. Cost of living about 25% lower. Food and staple commodities slightly better than this time last year. Business men optimistic. This section was not so heavily depressed as the East, and is expected to improve.

CONNECTICUT

GEORGIA
Atlanta. Clark Howew Jr., The Constitution: Slight improvement in unemployment situation. Business outlook indicates decided improvement. Prospects of a good crop, steady high prices for cotton, with the tremendous amount of building, should improve conditions. Ten per cent increase in average income per capita. Cost of living has decreased slightly. Business men and merchants optimistic. Business operations in Atlanta have reached a new high level. Prospects for the South seem to be particularly bright for the next year as compared to the last year.

IDAHO
Caldwell. C. J. Sheeh, editor and publisher, The Register: Unemployment situation remedied because money has become more stable and inventories feel more secure. Cost of living is lower. Retail sales of staple commodities have decreased. Bankers and business men optimistic. Conditions at Caldwell as good as ever before, mainly on account of increased population. People living here do not gamble on the weather and crops conditions.

ILLINOIS
Chicago. Glenn Griswold, Chicago Journal of Commerce: Unemployment situation has improved to this extent the steel industry and some other industries are facing a rather acute labor situation. Some of the steel mills in this territory have reduced their operations because of a lack of fuel to find sufficient labor. Some of the packing houses have been closed down for common labor to obtain help. Look for a gradual improvement in conditions in the Fall and Winter. Do not anticipate that this will be any large or sudden betterment. Believe that deflation of commodity prices will begin in

INDIANA
Indianapolis. Russell E. Smith, Indianapolis Star: Unemployment situation remedied, due to removal of factors, farming conditions and business in cities. Business outlook for Fall and Winter indicates that condition have been very good this year. Cost of living down. Business men optimistic.

CAMERAMAN ................ Karl Brown
AS A WHOLE .......... A great picture; should get lots of money

DIRECTION ............ Generally splendid; misses several big points from old play, but introduces tremendous wind storm almost as effective as Griffith's famous ice stuff in "Way Down East"

DETAIL ....................... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY .... Just book this and don't worry

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 7,650 feet

To their strong list of attractions Famous adds another in "The Old Homestead." This is going to prove a real box office attraction. Not only has James Cruze, the director, used almost everything that made Denman Thompson's famous old play one of the most popular attractions for years, but he has thrown in very effectively a tremendous wind storm which comes at the climax, and which is used to build the same sort of suspense, and furnishes almost the same kind of a thrill that Griffith developed in the famous "ice stuff" in "Way Down East."

During this splendid sequence, you see a whole village destroyed; with trees being uprooted, houses demolished and barns tumbled over. At the height of the storm the cowardly villain, conscious stricken, tells his father that he committed the theft for which the hero has been arrested, and the beloved Uncle Josh has practically become penniless in the effort to protect the good name of his son.

George Fawcett, one of the finest character actors that the American stage has ever known, rises to extreme heights in this picture. Towering over the conscious-stricken son, and wielding a mule lash over his son's shoulder, he drives him through the storm to the old homestead where, because he is "a just man," he demands that Uncle Josh mete out the punishment which his son should have. Then Theodore Roberts as the beloved and lovable Uncle Josh tells Fawcett that in his religion there is no vengeance, and urges Fawcett to forgive his son. This is a whale of a punch. Especially the way Fawcett carries out Roberts' suggestions.

Then it is discovered that Fritz Ridgeway has left the old homestead, and the brave hero, Harrison Ford, dashes after her, and finds her on the very edge of the precipice called "Lovers' Leap." Her waist has been torn off her body by the storm, and the rest of her garments are ripped to shreds, and in this manner she is brought back to the old homestead in her lover's arms.

The entire effect of this storm, its whirling clouds, and the dramatic action throughout, make this one of the biggest sequences ever filmed.

You should know the story of "The Old Homestead." If you don't, your people probably do. Seldom has there been a stronger cast exhibited, led off as it is by Theodore Roberts and George Fawcett. Roberts goes through the whole performance without the sign of a cigar. Production values are high.

If You Can't Put This Over You Had Better Quit
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There are so many good pictures coming and going these days that it is difficult to classify one which surely ranks among the very topmost without drawing inevitable comparisons. "The Old Homestead" stands out all alone, and right at the top of what might be described as the rural picture drama of the season. You can tell your crowd that it has everything: laughter, tears, dramatic action, splendid story, and the finest wind storm with spectacular as well as dramatic effects that has ever been shot by the camera.

The present generation of picturegoers may not be familiar with Denman Thompson's old play, but their parents sure are. Any time you have something which gives the old folks a chance to talk and mix around the supper table, you are helping things out materially. You may tell them to ask Pa and Ma all about the story.

You have well-known players also to talk about. Tell them George Fawcett and Theodore Roberts head a splendid cast. These two probably stand out more conspicuously than any other character actors on the American stage.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . About 9,000 feet

Here is a great picture, a magnificent production, and a corking story, all carefully worked out and slipning at the end for no good reason. Rex Ingram, whose recent productions have put him among the most prominent of American producers has used the old idea of having a story told to point a moral; and he does it so powerfully, that when, after a great big dramatic sequence he cuts back and takes up the completion of the story telling tale, it is like—well, can you imagine how a splashing big diamond would look with a circle of cheap stones around it? That’s just what this is; a magnificent fiery diamond, a great dramatic or tragic story, cheapened by the frame with which Ingram has thought necessary.

And it isn’t necessary. That’s what hurts the most.

Bank On Ingram’s Name—Talk of Handsome New Leading Man and Newest Vamp on Screen

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Rex Ingram’s name means a tremendous lot to the box office these days. Not only is this deservedly so, but on most of his recent productions you have cashed in. You probably will get them in without a lot of trouble with his latest—“Trifling Women” which incidentally, is a box office title, and with Ingram’s name should prove sure fire.

Your higher grade audiences will love the manner in which the production has been handled and any crowd at all is going to appreciate the great force of the story and especially the finish where the outraged husband wins out against the scheming wife and causes her lover’s death. This is great stuff.

Forget all about the story told within the story, and stress everything on the dramatic stuff. You can also talk about a new handsome leading man who is going to prove popular with your women folk, and if your crowd likes it go after Barbara La Marr as the newest and handsomest vamp on the screen. She photographs like a million. Use some stills showing her at her best. Remind them of Ingram’s great pictures of the past several years. If you don’t know their names get out of the show business.
Even Arliss’ Ability and Artistry Hardly Saves Very Poor Story

George Arliss in
"THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD" Distinctive Prod.—United Artists

DIRECTOR .................. Harmon Weight
AUTHOR........... From a play by Jules Eckert Goodman founded on Gouverneur Morris’ story of the same name

SCENARIO BY ............... Forrest Halsey
CAMERAMAN .............. Harry Fischbeck
AS A WHOLE...... A pity to have wasted the talents of an artist like Arliss on such dissatisfying material

STORY...... In no way absorbing and with its principal situations quite far-fetched; a poorly sustained interest DIRECTION...... Poor; had fair material for screen purposes but fails to make half-hearting feature of it

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good
LIGHTINGS .................. All right

STAR...... The only asset of the offering: he is interesting at all times but has little opportunity to appear to real advantage in this

SUPPORT...... Of rather minor importance; Ann Forrest suitable as the wife; others have little to do; Edward Earle, Effie Shannon, Ivan Simpson

EXTERIORS .................. Adequate
INTERIORS...... Little variation; always the same shots from the same angle

DETAIL .................... Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Musician who loses his hearing is about to give wife her freedom when she convinces him she still loves him. A fall restores his hearing

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........ 5,810 feet

Admirers of George Arliss are due for a disappointment in his latest feature, “The Man Who Played God,” chiefly because of the material and poor handling. Gouverneur Morris’ novel might have provided interesting reading and even Jules Eckert Goodman’s adaptation for the stage may have met with success, but the material certainly doesn’t measure up to the requirements of the screen, nor the demands of an artist like Arliss, as the director shows it.

The main situations in themselves fail to convince, or it may be that Harmon Weight has failed to make them convincing. In the first place it is difficult to believe that a person would completely lose his hearing as the result of an explosion. This is not to say it is impossible—it is improbable. And so is the sudden restoration of his hearing, brought about by a fall. There are numerous inconclusive twists that annoy.

Just why an accomplished musician should destroy his instruments and lose faith in his wife and God because of his sudden affliction is incredible. Rather would you expect him to master his trouble and gain even wider admiration. So it is that John Arden gains little sympathy from the audience. The producer and director have wasted not only good money, but a talented artist in the bargain.

Harmon Weight does not get the most out of the story, despite its weakness. He shows an apparently cultured society gentleman, played by Edward Earle, invite an obviously well bred woman into the park to “tell her something which he prefers not to say in her home.” And yet you are to understand that they are people of refinement. Weight drags his sequences very badly at times, noticeably that of the musician’s philanthropic adventures, the one of the two kiddies in particular. Arliss does very good work but his admirers will be disappointed at what he has to do. Ann Forrest is the wife and others are adequate.

Story: Arden upbraids his pretty young wife whom he believes does not love him since he lost his hearing. His charitable deeds brings about a reconciliation and his hearing returns.

You Will Have to Depend on Star’s Admirers But Be Careful of Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The staunch admirers of George Arliss may be compensated by his mere appearance and not complain about the poor material which has been given him in “The Man Who Played God.” If you can count on them being satisfied from this standpoint, you can play safe with the feature. You are likely to disappoint them otherwise.

The interest is allowed to lag badly at times and you may find some won’t wait for the ending. It is the kind of a picture that makes you impatient. It is slow and without suspense. Probably cutting would speed it up in places and if it can be done without greatly injuring the continuity, then it should be done by all means. The name of the star is your best asset so rely upon this to attract them.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Society girl, saved from wreck by stoker, is about to marry society man when stoker kidnaps her and turns out to be a rich fellow who was seeking adventure

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......5,171 feet

Only for the remarkably fine production that Irvin Willat has provided, “On the High Seas” would probably have amounted to a very ordinary picture, at best, because the story contains some well worn situations and melodramatic twists and no original bits to make it any different than several similar ones that have preceded it. But a thoroughly live production, consistently good action and realistic atmosphere and thrills, make it a sure-fire entertainment of its kind—one that will have a decided appeal for the lovers of melodrama, especially of the sea.

Willat’s production is on a big scale and apparently nothing has been spared to obtain realism. The picture contains two shipwrecks, both providing genuine thrills and looking like the real thing although they undoubtedly are not. It looks as though slow motion photography has been used on mighty well executed miniatures. Whatever it is the effect is highly satisfying. There is only one instance in which the director’s desire for realism has been carried to extreme. That is in showing the bodies of the crew of a plague infested vessel and the shots of the burial at night.
These are just a trifle gruesome.

The story varies little from the usual sea melodrama.
The stoker who saves the girl’s life turns out to be a rich man who had merely been seeking adventure and, of course, then it is perfectly all right for the society girl whose life he saved, to marry him. It is a question whether or not the greater majority would not prefer to have the girl marry him as the stoker instead of her turning her back on him even after she admitted her love for him. It seems a little false to follow the conventions so rigidly.

Jack Holt is always a likeable hero and he has lots to do besides just acting in “On the High Seas.” Dorothy Dalton is suitable but she has done better work. A fine bit of character work is contributed by Mitchell Lewis as the ruffian stoker. Photography is first rate.

Story: Leone Devereaux is homeward bound to marry her father’s choice of a husband. The vessel is wrecked and Leone saved by Jim, a stoker. They take refuge on a plague infested ship which they fumigate and live aboard in hope of being picked up.
Leone finds herself in love with Jim. In a storm the vessel becomes unmanageable and is about to sink
when they are picked up by a Government vessel.
Later Leone is about to be married when she is kidnapped by Jim.

Should Be Popular If They Like Plenty of Action and Thrills

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This will please a big majority of picture goers because there are a great many of them who favor a picture of this kind and they will certainly be satisfied with the production which Irvin Willat offers. It is a sea melodrama that has been done in a big way and you need not be afraid to make promises for the production which he has given the story.

A trailer of any of the thrill sequences or good bits of action would be about the best means of letting them know what to expect and it will undoubtedly bring them back to see the whole picture. Use the stars’ names and take advantage of the exploitation suggestions contained in Paramount’s press sheet which you can secure at your local exchange.

CHARACTER OF STORY . . Death of a son, killed that had drifted apart

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION * 7,892 feet

There has been a lot said and written, recently about the self imposed martyr in the persons of wives and mothers who voluntarily assume all the worries and hardships for the whole family. And that is what “A Woman’s Woman” is all about. Mary Alden is the martyr of the Plummer family and the chief reason you cannot sympathize with her is that she realizes her own failing but doesn’t bring about the necessary change which she knows is needed to remedy matters and which she indicates in her diary as “I must keep up with the times.” But instead of heeding her own warning she continues to pamper her husband and daughter and to suffer their neglect in silence.

Nalbro Bartley’s story will undoubtedly only appeal to those who can sympathize with her heroine, Dense Plummer. For the others, they will likely be so out of patience with the character that they’ll be annoyed rather than entertained. Even though there is a certain amount of logic and truth in her story, she distracts from it by making her heroine entirely independent of those who mistreat her. If she remained dependent upon them and there was no way out of her trouble, then you could readily sympathize with her but Dense Plummer is talented and clever enough to have brought her family to its knees long before she finally does.

The conventional happy ending is somewhat sacrificed inasmuch as the death of her favorite, a son, is the means of bringing about the reunion. Director Giblyn provides a perfectly well suited cast and an adequate production but he makes the very prevalent mistake of using too much footage to tell his story.
It takes so long to reach the climax, and such a short while to set the whole matter to rights, that you cannot help but wish they had reached the climax much sooner.

Mary Alden is pleasing as the mother and the cast, on the whole, seems to have given the director good cooperation. Holmes E. Herbert, Dorothy MacKail and Albert Hackett are the most prominent.

Story: John Plummer does not appreciate his wife, Dense, even when she establishes a business to help him out of financial difficulties. Her daughters live their own lives and her only confidant is her son, Kenneth, whose death finally brings about a reunion.

The Women May Like It So Make Your Appeal Chiefly to Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is a good chance for this one with the right type of audience. One composed chiefly of women will be the best bet for “A Woman’s Woman” and you can use the title with catchlines to attract your women patrons. Undoubtedly many of them will find consolation in the character of Dense Plummer or if you want to play it up differently you might get them interested by the line: “Wives! Mothers! Attention!
Are you a household drudge? Find the cure for it in ‘A Woman’s Woman’ at the blank theater.”

Mary Alden is the best known player and you might use her name. You had better consider your clientele in deciding on this one. It will probably do for the women but it is doubtful if the men will like it. At any rate let them know what it is about through catchlines and your regular exploitation methods.

A Literary Digest's "Fun From the Press"
Patriotic Melodrama That Will Draw Big Business in the Right House

Thomas H. Ince presents
"SKIN DEEP"
Asso. First Nat'l Pict.
DIRECTOR ...................... Lambert Hillyer
AUTHOR ...................... Marc Edmund Jones
SCENARIO BY ...................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ...................... Charles Stumar
AS A WHOLE .......... A patriotic flavored melodrama a little wild for the better class but a big box office for the right crowd STORY ...... Has quite an audience appeal despite conventional situations and twists that comprise it DIRECTION ........ Gets action and thrills of the popular variety; selected fine types for parts
PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... First rate
LIGHTINGS ...................... All right
PLAYERS ...... A really fine performance by Milton Sills whose make-up in early reels is great;
Florence Vidor, Marcia Manon, Frank Campeau and Charles Clary good EXTERIORS ...................... Good
INTERIORS ...................... Appropriate
DETAIL ...................... Suitable
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Crook's wife works with gang to frame him so she can be free of him; instead he rounds up gang and clears his name
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,303 feet
Where the crowd is right, Ince's "Skin Deep" will likely make a clean-up. With a better class clientele it is more than likely that they will say lots of things about it that aren't nice. It's that kind of a picture—wild, wild meller but a fine one of its kind and an ac-nowledged money-maker where they want this kind of entertainment. Ince follows in the footsteps of the well known George M. Cohan by injecting a patriotic flavor with the flag waving in the breeze for a finale.
Can't help but send them out cheering when you do that.

But regardless of what some may think about "Skin Deep" it has every chance of making many box offices happy because there is a large percentage of picture patrons who still seek the dyed-in-the-wool melodrama.
Added to this "Skin Deep" holds the advantage of being very well produced and containing a first rate cast. Milton Sills' performance alone is worth seeing if for no other reason than the make-up he wears in the early reels. And while it isn't quite probable that he could ever have his face as completely renovated as they do it, it is a fine boost for plastic surgery and an interesting side-issue in connection with the general reclaiming of maimed soldiers. They have been known to do some quite wonderful things in making over broken noses but they have not been able to restore a "cauliflower" ear.

The story sticks pretty closely to the regulation formula for melodrama with coincidence playing an important part in the development. But Hillyer does manage to keep things more or less plausible and there's a punch in the thrills that will satisfy. The prison escape includes an airplane stunt in which the convict jumps from the prison wall to the roof of a speeding train and from the train to a rope ladder dropped from the plane.

Milton Sills gives a fine performance in the role of Bud Doyle, ex-gunman and war veteran. Florence Vidor is appealing as the heroine but the more important part, that of Doyle's wife, is played excellently by Marcia Manon. The entire cast is 'very well suited and does good work.

Story: Bud Doyle returns from France bound to go "straight." When a "dishonest politician"—as the title puts it—finds that he cannot secure Bud's service any longer he co-operates with Bud's wife, who wants to be free of him, and Bud is sent to prison for a frame-up. How Bud eventually rounds up the crooks and saves a large sum of money intended for the soldiers is told in a series of rather exciting sequences.

Great Exploitation Angles For You to Work On
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Without even looking at the press sheet it was a safe bet that the producer had the American Legion back of him on "Skin Deep," that is as far as exploiting the feature is concerned. As it happens the press sheet does inform the exhibitor that "every American Legion Post awaits the coming of 'Skin Deep.'" And that the Posts will cooperate. So if you can do this you will undoubtedly do a fine business with the picture.

Where they like melodrama and if you know they "fall" for patriotic stuff, give it to them. They'll be delighted with it. The production should bring returns where the audience is right. It isn't for highbrow trade, however. So don't try to give it to them.
Otherwise boost it and properly exploited it should bring in fine returns.

DIRECTOR .......................... Charles Miller

SCENARIO BY .......................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ........................ Lawrence Williams
AS A WHOLE ................. Ordinary feature with the same old Northwest Mounted situations; fair action at times

STORY ...... Not well handled; drags very badly especially in climax that carries no punch at all

DIRECTION .... Creates no suspense and is content to allow the spectator to know what will happen in advance visible in some scenes

PLAYERS ........ Mediocre cast; Earle Fox poor in emotional bits; others Doris Miller, Frank

EXTERIORS ........................ Fair

DETAIL ............................. Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Mounted officer ambushed by man he went after, is exiled from the force but later brings in his man

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,792 feet

They never seem to tire of the Royal Mounted Police slogan. It once more forms the main situation in Jasper Ewing Brady's story produced by Charles Miller under the title, "The Man She Brought Back." It is a fair entertainment whose value as such is considerably lessened by the frequency with which the idea is used. Each Northwest Mounted picture be comes more tiresome than the last, chiefly because they all revolve about the capture of a murderer with a dash of romance to set it off. The Brady story doesn't differ from the rest as far as this formula goes.

It introduces a wholly unnecessary character in the person of Fenton, a preaching philosopher, played by Frank Losee, who goads the hero on to better things and is the general consoler of the heroine when she fears her lover is a coward. His is a silly part that doesn't help the story a bit. Earle Fox is a fair enough hero except when he tries to emote. They might well have omitted his close-ups in these moments. Doris Miller isn't required to do very much as the heroine and the remainder of the cast is about average.

The director hasn't always handled the material to good advantage. There is one scene that is silly.
The girl's lover returns to his post after having been trapped by the man he went after. This disqualifies him in the eyes of the major and the girl, supposedly in love with him, without hearing his story personally, plucks a white feather from a stuffed dove and hands it to hero to indicate that he is a coward. It is a decidedly poor touch.

The action is allowed to lag considerably especially from the time hero is disqualified until the time he finally brings in his man. Cutting in the sequence showing the pursuit would speed things up a trifle.

Story: Major Shanley satisfies his daughter's request when he gives her lover, John Ramsaye, a chance to win his chevrons in the Mounted Police, by bringing in Benson, a murderer. Webster, a 'rum smuggler, also in love with Doris Shanley, sends his men to ambush Ramsaye. His disqualification folfollows. Encouraged by an old philosopher, Ramsaye sets out on an independent expedition to get Benson.
He gets his man and also Webster who has killed one of his gang who has threatened to squeal. He wins back Doris' love and is reinstated.

They Are Probably Tired of the Formula But Use Your Own Judgment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This will probably do for the average audience but if they are the least bit particular don't try to pass it over on them. You will also have to consider their feelings with regard to the Northwest Mounted stuff.
If you have given them a lot of it and think they are beginning to get tired of it, it won't help matters to give them another.

"The Man She Brought Back" isn't different enough from the others to allow you to boost it for originality.
Better let them know what it is either by catchlines or display in the lobby because the title doesn't hint that it has to do with "get your man." You haven't any names to work with in the way of players, although Earle Fox may be known to them.

AS A WHOLE . . . . Remember “Gallagher?” This is a female version and has a corking good fight known touches. Excellent fight. Court room

INTERIORS .................. Look natural

DETAIL ..................... Well handled

CHARACTER OF STORY . Unnecessary attack on girl in barn may be disliked by patrons of some neighborhood houses

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . 8,600 feet

There is a whale of a fight in Bill Nigh’s first special, “Notoriety.” This has to be stressed because it is probably what will put the picture over big in some places. The way Nigh puts this fight on—well, it has the “Tol’able David” fight skinned. That should be enough. Otherwise many of the expected touches and titles that have made Nigh stand out during the past several successes are not as evident as was hoped for.
Perhaps this is due to the fact that when the picture was shown it was admitted that it should be cut, and perhaps the necessary cutting will speed this up in the spots where it drags. But it is much too long, especially in the courtroom sequence, although this is well done.

In fact the entire production is well handled. Nigh knows his types and knows just what effect he wants.
Usually he gets it. But there are too many titles, too much argument in the courtroom scene, and then it ends suddenly, too suddenly considering how much has been put into it. You discover Pigeon, the little waif who wanted notoriety, only because it gave her something she had never before had—some attention, and consideration from the world—then realizing that it is all to be taken from her. This is a fine touch and skillfully handled.

If the unnecessary footage can be removed—and there is no reason why it should not be easily done—
then “Notoriety” is going to attract a lot of attention.

There is a tremendous lot of action in the fight which is staged in the barn when the hired man goes after Pigeon. There are three fights in all, not including the one Pigeon puts up for herself, and finally the bad man is sent reeling down the railroad tracks into the great nowhere. But he certainly puts up a smashing fight before hero finally sends him to cover. And before then the half wit boy, and the good for nothing sport, splendidly played by Richard Travers, also puts up a real fight.

Story: Pigeon, a tenement waif, who has nothing to awaken or interest her in life, while peeping at a big dance in a mansion, becomes involved and is accused of murdering a philandering social pet. In a moment her whole life changes, and the notoriety attendant upon her arrest for the murder of this well known social butterfly puts into her life all that had heretofore been missing. When she is about to be freed of the charge, realizing that she is going back to her dreary, slow life, she tries to claim being the mur-

Use Nigh’s Name and Remind Them of His Recent Successes

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have Will Nigh’s name to work with in this and that should help a lot. Tell your people he made “School Days” and other successes last season for the Warner’s, and you can add that he also wrote the scenario for “Rags and Riches” which looks like another hit, and has just been released. His name should mean a lot in the box office. You can talk about some of the better known players, and then center everything on the big fight. It should get them in. You also have a great chance to have the newspapers working for you both because of the title and also what is back of it.

Some neighborhood houses with a peculiar clientele might well consider the attack on the girl by the hired man. Some particular people might not like it. You will have to consider this as it is the basis for a big punch in the production. There are ample possibilities for catchlines and lobby display.

Unoriginal and Weak Situations That Are Not Very Well Handled

John Gilbert in
"CALVERT'S VALLEY"

Fox

DIRECTOR ......................... Jack Dillon
AUTHOR .......................... Margaret Prescott Montague
SCENARIO BY ..................... Jules Furthman
CAMERAMAN ....................... Don Short

AS A WHOLE.......A weak attraction with only an appeal to those who favor sensational stuff; all right for certain patronage

STORY......Contains unpleasant situations and is badly constructed; drags considerably at times

DIRECTION......Fair; might have speeded up the action although situations are slight and required extension for feature length

PHOTOGRAPHY .................... All right

LIGHTINGS ........................ Good

STAR.......Does average work; hasn't a very agreeable role

SUPPORT.......Fair; Sylvia Breamer and Philo McCullough, the principals

EXTERIORS ......................... Adequate

INTERIORS ........................ Suitable

DETAIL ............................. Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Man confesses to murder he believes he committed in order to save girl who is accused of having caused the man to commit suicide

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,416 feet

Undoubtedly there is an audience for such a picture as "Calvert's Valley" and others like it and that is the reason they are made—to reach that particular crowd. If this is true, and they get them money, you can't blame producers for making them. But it is decidedly the cheaper class of patronage that will favor the sort of thing presented in this latest Fox release starring John Gilbert.

They probably like the sensational touches and situations that it contains. It all revolves about the death of Philo McCullough, as the fiancee of the heroine. A stranger in town who had been present when McCullough tumbled off the cliff and met his death, believed himself guilty of murder inasmuch as an old woman who had seen the incident, told the stranger that he had pushed the victim off the ledge. The stranger, being drunk, takes her testimony for granted. From this point on the story drags terribly. You are shown the stranger, played by Gilbert, going through all kinds of conscience stricken torments until finally he wanders into a church and exclaims that he murdered Calvert, the character played by McCullough.

This might have been worked into a rather forceful climax, but the director has not succeeded in getting the slightest punch into it. The courtroom scene that follows, in which Gilbert is cleared of the crime, carries no suspense and it is a safe bet that the biggest majority of the audience will have the ending all figured out long before Dillon gives it to them. There is one sequence in which he leads the spectator to believe that the murdered man's brother suspects the stranger of having killed his brother and is subjecting him to a series of incidents that will force him to confess. There seems no other good reason, at the time, for inviting Gilbert to participate in settling the dead man's estate.

The production is adequate and the cast satisfactory. The sub-titles are clumsy in their wording which frequently makes them difficult to read.

Story: Hester Rynal breaks her engagement with Jim Calvert. A widow, with a demented son, tells Emlyn, a stranger in town, that he killed Calvert but keeps his secret. Later Emlyn hears Calvert's mother accusing Hester of having caused her son's death, the mother thinking he had committed suicide. To save Hester, Emlyn confesses and then to save Emlyn, the widow tells that her half-wit son killed Calvert.

Good for the Right Crowd But Be Sure That You Have That Kind

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here is another case where it depends upon the class you cater to. And you know best whether or not they like pictures of the type represented by "Calvert's Valley." If your audience is right for it, let them have it and they'll probably like it very well. On the other hand, if you play to a better class clientele, those who demand good logical story material, don't try to please them with this.

Gilbert is hardly popular enough to warrant bringing them in on the strength of his name, so you'll have to do it with catchlines or by using a trailer of whatever bit you think will be most likely to bring them back for the rest. The title will need explaining to give them an idea what it is all about.

Short Stuff

"Rough Going"—Pathe

Type of production: 2 reel western

Leo Maloney is a young rancher in love with the daughter of his Cattle King neighbor. As he is about to propose a youthful stranger appears who is affectionately greeted by the girl. Maloney overhears two of the men say that he is Jim Dawson, wanted for murder. After a hard-riding, hard-fighting mix-up of outlaws and detectives in which the real "Jim Dawson" is discovered, Maloney learns that the man he suspected is an officer of the law and the girl's brother. This should please those who like westerns. There is plenty of action and the riding ranks with the finest.

Lupino Lane in "The Reporter"—Fox

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

Here is a mighty fine bit of amusement. If all of the Lane comedies, or any part of them measure to the standard set by his then they are going to be a decided addition to any program. This was caught at the Strand and during his activities several in the audience could be heard audibly commenting that Lane seemed like Doug Fairbanks. As a matter of fact either he, or if a double was used, the double does a lot of stunts more or less of the Fairbanks variety. They are all good, too, and some of the gags pulled by Lane are not only new but exceedingly funny. He is a scream when he plods along with the telegraph pole tied to his back, and when he is on the ground and tumbles and pulls one leg over the other in an effort to adjust himself, your crowd surely will laugh. There are more great gags in this than in the average and if the Strand crowd is a criterion then your people are going to like it a lot.

Roving Thomas Takes a Trip on a Fishing Trawler—Kineto

Type of production: 1 reel novelty

This latest edition to the Urban "Roving Thomas" series takes Thomas to sea on a fishing trawler. There are a lot of fine marine views in the reel and a few of the shots taken from the rocking vessel are likely to produce nearly the same effect as actually being on the boat. It is a pretty rough voyage for the audience, as well as for Thomas. Shots showing the hauling of the fishing nets and the return of the trawler with its catch make it a rather interesting reel.

"A Kickin' Fool"—Century—Universal

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

A trained mule occupies the center of the screen through a considerable portion of this and figures in a number of incidents which should elicit laughter. The opening portion in which the animal is used to break up wood, boards being placed where it may smash them with its hind hoofs it sure to get a laugh. Later, the shot in which it gizzles a bottle of quid, placing one foot upon a rail in the fashion once familiar is really funny and its other antics, such as the eating of an cakes, will provoke mirth. It is a satisfactory knockabout comedy with the mule registering in great style during a considerate part of it.

"Pop Tuttle's Clever Catch"—Film Booking Offices

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This Plum Center comedy stars Dan Mason who as Pop Tuttle is the central character. The picture moves along placidly and is content to be mildly funny during the first reel. In the second however it peeps up quite a bit and moves to a good finish. The titles are among the most clever bits in the picture, getting a good many of the laughs. Pop Tuttle runs the village stage, which meets all trains. He is returning with the week's mail when he is held up by a bandit. He consents to give the thing the mail if he will shoot bullet holes in his hat as a telling. After the bandit empties his gun shooting holes in Pop's clothes, Pop pulls his own gun and making him mount Wildfire, the town's truckhorse, rides him into town and gets the reward.

"For Rent—Haunted"—Pathe

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

Most of Johnny Jones' previous productions have possessed more humor than this one, in fact, this could almost be classified as a serious drama. It concerns the efforts of Jones and a group of youngsters to nip the plans of a shrewd and unrelenting real estate operator who has driven an aged widow from her home. The youngsters create the impression that the house is haunted and collect a reward of $50 for rent ing it, when the fear of spooks has made the dwelling place undesirable. Youthful performers in short reels are liked and Jones is capable, which will get this over in good style. It is not as funny as some of his other comedies but it is good, clean entertainment.

"The Tin Broncho"—Sunshine Comedy—Fox

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

They have a lot of laughs coming in this latest Sunshine release in which they show that all the comedy possibilities in an auto haven't been exhausted as yet. In this one they have a specially constructed body that they call the Klassy Komplex and the gags that they work in with it make it a sure-fire comedy number. The front of the car is so big that the driver takes a step-ladder to get down to look at the engine. One of the biggest laughs is where the parts of the motor keep falling out so the driver secures a huge magnet which he attaches to the back of the car for the purpose of having it pick up the parts as they fall out. But the parts of the car aren't the only thing that the magnet attracts. Sewer covers, letter boxes, etc. follow the car with policemen, merchants, etc. chasing the driver. It's a good number and will get the laughs.

"Screen Snapshots" No. 10—Pathe

Type of production: 1 reel fan magazine

Lon Chaney's art of make-up is shown in interesting close-ups which open this number of the Screen Snapshots. Marillyn Miller's wedding affords interesting pictures of Mary and Doug, the bride and her new husband. Jack Pickford, Charles Chaplin and other guests. Interesting scenes of the meetings between Will Hays and a score or more of film celebrities at Hollywood and of the wonderful reception given him close the issue.

Official Urban Movie Chats, No. 35—Hodkinson

Type of production..............................................1 reel magazine

Opening this are several shots taken along the Sixth Avenue "L" line in New York and they hold attention fairly well. Some wasps are seen at work directly after and that is a meritorious section. Ivory is dealt with in the following portion and then there are a few shots among the Arapahoe Indians. In the concluding part, different birds face the spectator and wind up a satisfactory screen review.

"The Upper Cut"—Pathe

Type of production..............................................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrot plays the timid hero in this mildly amusing comedy. He is forced into a ring fight with "Champion Poison Fist O'Flannigan" in order to win his lady love's hand. Jobyna Ralston is pleasing but is not given an opportunity to do very much. The ring shots take up most of the footage in which Paul ultimately knocks out the champion accidentally.

"Cold Turkey"—Mutt and Jeff—Fox

Type of production..............................................1 reel cartoon

There doesn't seem to be a very good reason for Mutt and Jeff to be fooling around with turkeys at this time of the year but they are trying to secure a good meal in their latest number, "Cold Turkey," in which the bird is so tough they can't kill it, so they chloroform it and start plucking the feathers. The turkey revives and chases Jeff until he does his usual star-light fade-out.

An Organization's Attitude Unchanged Towards Reappearance Of Arbuckle In Pictures

Los Angeles—Friends of Roscoe Arbuckle say they are confident that "A. Araby," an old favorite, will return to the screen and stay.

For some months past anonymous unsigned letters have been received in the offices of the Hays Commission, all of the same purport and many of them along the same line, indicating that the writers were anxious to see Arbuckle return to the screen. All of these communications had such a similar expression that they have been disregarded, and the Hays office maintains the same attitude towards Arbuckle's return to the screen as it did weeks ago. Arbuckle is regarded as unnecessary to the management.

Fights Claims Killed

Famous Also Says Valentino Charges Are "Scandalous and Impertinent"

Famous Players-Lasky Corp. has filed an application in the Supreme Court to strike out the defence and a counterclaim for $320,000 damages in its suit against Rodolph Valentino on the ground that the allegations he makes in defence of the suit to restrain him from taking employment with another film company are "a sham, irrelevant, impertinent and scandalous, and will prejudice or delay a fair trial of the action." The application also asks that Valentino be compelled to file an entirely new answer.

Famous Players objects to the first defence and counterclaim for $320,000, in which he alleges that misrepresentations were made to him as the result of which he was made to believe that his services as a film actor were worth only $1,000 a week, whereas they were worth $5,000 a week. The plaintiff also asks the court to strike out the allegation that a contract like that with Thomas Meighan was to be given Valentino, and he thought he was signing such a contract. Valentino asserts that Famous Players made its contract with Meighan for $5,000 a week with the understanding that "take improper advantage" of him, and that it is not binding.

WORKING OUT IDEAS

Six years ago. Ben Schulberg. Working for Famous. Read a story—"Ching. Ching. Chinaman." Thought it would make big picture. Talked it over. With Al Lichtman. Also working for Famous. "Some day," said Ben. "when we have our own company." "Yep," said Al. And the same day arrived. Finally. Like it usually does. And they have their own company. And they have made the story. And are calling it "Shadows." That's what sticking to an idea does.

Something to think about.

Of all these trade papers. Says Peter Hamilton; editor in chief. Of the Wall Street Journal.

"You can put your premises, illustrations and conclusions in any way you please, but you must arrest the reader's attention before the end of the first line. The title can often serve this purpose. (Continued from Page 1)

The plaintiff wants the court to strike out Valentino's allegation that Famous Players intimidated his wife, which "humiliated and embarrassed" him, and for which reason he raises the damages asked to $350,000. Famous Players objects finally to the allegation that Adolph Zukor, Jesse Lasky and others connected with the plaintiff "use unfair methods of competition in business" and that they violate the anti-trust laws. The plaintiff asserts that the allegations as to "oppressive and unfair business practices and policies are scandalous and improper and will delay a fair trial, and even if true would not be availe" in the Supreme Court because only the Federal courts have jurisdiction over the anti-trust laws.

At the offices of Arthur Butler Graham, Valentino's lawyer, it was said that an answer is being prepared which will be filed before Oct. 19, when the action is returnable in court.

“Three Musketeers” in France

The following communication has been received from Henri Diam-tant-Berger, producer of “The Three Musketeers” in France:

I read in your estimable paper that the Fairbanks production called “The Three Musketeers” will be given in France next year.

I am to think that I own the rights from Du-Maurier and the distributors of my film, “Three Musketeers,” won’t certainly let be done before 1941, when my rights expire.

I am very sorry and shall be very happy any case to let the Fairbanks film shown in Paris, but commercially we could not get together the rights to let his film be shown in the countries where the rights are protected.

Please take this occasion to explain to our countrymen how dangerous it is for us to think that the copyright in Washington is an international law. In France domestically all the Latin countries of hope the rights are automatically protected 50 years after the death of the writer, except who the Musketeers with Hind, died in 1888.

With the war pro-ted means that all Dumas’ books are protected to 1941, inclusive. We pay high taxes to the term and of course without money for any one are obliged to defend us ourselves. I am very sorry we are actually to do so with Fairbanks, who is a tax artist and personally a friend.

Cordially yours,
W. DIAMANT-BERGER.

Newsprint Opinions
"The Old Homestead"—F. P. L.

Capitol

TIMES—They've applied the directorial skill of James Cruze to getting ability of Theodore Roberts, George Fawcett, T. Roy Barnes and quite a number of others, and all the technical facilities of the Paramount studios, to turning out "The Old Homestead," and of course they have a picture of many fine points and considerable popular appeal as a result. Then the storm comes. And it comes and it hits it up in that motion picture, in that storm as a whole, and separate parts of it. Violet's room, and it all makes a splendid deal of it. And it is about the most complete and conscientious attempt to reproduce the actual atmosphere and screen. As a piece of cinematography in itself, regardless of the story and everything else, it is thrilling.

TRIBUNE—"Way Down East" has its snowstorm and "The Old Homestead" has its hurricane, and it makes the ending of that stage classic quite as exciting as the Griffith pictures.

WORLD—This is a sturdy, workmanlike film version of a great old melodrama. Mr. D. W. Griffith has selected a drama which would not have gone wrong in it. Theodore Roberts is the only one we know of in pictures. * * * It takes its place in the middle given picture.

DAILY NEWS—Whether or not you have ever been on a farm, you really ought to see "The Old Homestead," as it is more than merely a farm incident turned into motion pictures by James Cruze and the Paramount forces. All the sentimental things that have ever been written or sung about being down on the farm, and the old homestead and chickens, have been crowded into this film. * * * The big idea is supplied, sent and, let us tell you, it is some storm.

HERALD—"The Old Homestead" in pictures with this trend that it is little like the name of an express train rather than a famous homestead. Here is the deliberate pace of the average big 'goop' play but rather the tempo of a George M. Cohan musical number.

MORNINGS TELEGRAPH—"The Old Homestead" promises to be one of the most successful audience-getters of the year. Technically, and from the standpoint of cast, it is a most successful production in spite of the fact that it is a well worn rural narrative.

WORLD'S TROUBADOR'S just a single illusion loose. "The Old Homestead" in pictures is just as good as it was as a play. Who can ask more?

MAIL—"The Old Homestead" is a well made picture. It comes very near being the great American picture. It tells its story with conviction both story and performance. It is based upon a successful stage piece written by the husband of the world-famous Florence Lawrence. It is a splendid job by the studio and director. It is not without its faults. It is in the directorial and it is in the acting. It is a story that might have been a much better, but it was as it was played. Who can ask more?

EVE.—"The Old Homestead" is a technical failure. It wants a great deal of polish and courage to agree with the audience. There is no great fault in the directorial and acting performances. It is weak in its treatment of the story. It is inexcusable that it did not carry over the spirit of the stage play.

THE BOND BOY

"The Bond Boy"—First National—Strand

TIMES—It is generally accredited that Henry King, as director, has made many genuine motion pictures, and "The Bond Boy" is the work of a poor country boy who is bound out to an old skinflint and later accused of his murder, and it is a picture that is often arouses a responsive sympathy in the spectator.

AMERICAN—All the advantages of the screen are undeniably attained in "The Bond Boy." The picture has everything in its favor—Richard Barthelmess's splendid direction, emotional appeal and an entire lack of that flip panache seen in the background of the Kentucky mountains offers an appropriate and picturesque setting for the dramatic situations.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Richard Barthelmess is the one concern of the production from the screen, decidedly so, for his "The Bondboy" is without question one of the finest motion pictures of the American screen. It is the finest kind of drama. There are touches of deep pathos, expertly acted scenes that tug at the heartstrings and scenes of genuine humor that relieve the tenses of the excellent story. "The Bondboy" is an added credit to all concerned in its making.

WORLD—In "The Bond Boy," Richard Barthelmess is a poor young farm hand who, though innocent, is convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence and who refuses to defend himself because by doing so and, and blacken the name of a woman. He wears his usual get-up of overalls and trowsers. And he makes of his own character at times a rather moving and human thing.

HERALD—One indebted impression that can be made from the screen "Are You a Failure?" Newbolt, wrongly condemned to death for murder, watching the shadow of his own heartstrings on the gawters. * * * King, who generally is able to surmount the commonplace methods of directing, manages to make this story one realistic, occasionally amusing and supremely appropriate, whose very success had advantages that this one by half a dozen soles.

EVE. WORLD—Richard Barthelmess is in his greatest work of any of the outgoing pictures. "The Bond Boy" has reached heights that even he did not dream of.

GLOBE—"The Bond Boy" is another "Tenable David." Richard Barthelmess has hardly the richness of that film from which it has drawn its force, but it is a very good melodrama with plenty of human interest. If you do not grab your seat and stay for the success of the show your seat is a pretty hard part of film land.

MAIL—Here is a story that undoubtedly contains real beings, and it is almost painless true to life with no extraneous interludes, as a portrayal of life, is worthy of attention. But there is a certain sagging of the atmosphere, always a lowering shadow, reality is completely surmounting all the emotion that was astounding. * * * Richard Barthelmess' work alone would have made it a splendid film.

SUN TELEGRAM—That excellent alliance, Richard Bartheleimess the star, and Henry King, the director, has outdone itself with the production of "The Bond Boy."

SUN—Despite minor faults, Director Henry King has kept one more of his Southern stories on a very high level, and Barthelmess again gives a performance that entitles him to a place among the screen stars who hold the altitude record for lofty acting.

POST—Richard Barthelmess has done consistently good work before the camera. But in "The Bond Boy" is made to tell a story: it is true that it holds the interest of the spectator throughout, but it is due more to the acting of Mr. Barthelmess, and two or three of the other principals than the scenes of events that go make up the story.

Allen & Von Herberg Reported
In Clash With Independent Exhibitors

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Portland, Ore.—Booking competition has brought about a serious con-tion here.

It is stated that the Allen &

Ray Herberg theaters, through

J. G. Herberg, resident manager, has six months protection on features played in West side houses and days on East side showings.

This policy has a decided effect on attractions shown by small, independent exhibitors, and it has forced the Allen Herberg to contribute so that many are reued to refusing to book any movies so restricted and are considering changing to a first run policy in the interest of maintaining their theatres.

The United Theaters Corp., controlling 10 exhibitors conducting 12

theaters, has delegated committees to confer with Allen Herberg twice with J. G. Herberg, but it is believed that nothing is being accomplished so far.

J. G. Von Herberg is expected to turn shortly from a trip to Europe.

The Post said in part:

“For two hours it kept an interested audience in suspense as to the outcome.”

“One Exciting Night!” is not the Griffith of “Broken Blossoms” nor yet of “Orphans of the Storm.” As Mr. Griffith explained in a little speech at intermission, his latest pictorial effort is simply to entertain. It is a story of romance, love and mystery, principally mystery.

There is a most realistic storm near the end, which is a miracle of photography. “Exciting Night!” is compactly designed to furnish a thoroughly enjoyable evening’s entertainment.”

Blackton’s Next

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—J. Stuart Blackton has started on another costume production. Blackton will not make “Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall,” as originally planned, because of the obvious reason that the picture will be made by an American producer.

Newspaper Opinions

"The Face in the Fog"—Paramount—Rivoli.

WORLD—The plot itself is regular detective fiction stuff, but it is first rate material in its own field, and from the fifth minute of the picture onward, as we are happy to state, the incidents are thrown upon one another into a logical climax. * * * An entertaining picture.

TRIBUNE—Lionel Barrymore is just about as effective as when he is on the screen as he is to be used. He is especially good in the part of Boston Blackie Matty, a reformed crook. The story is excellent for the screen and has been presented in such a way that it holds your interest to the last frame. Of course the cast is made up of stars, and one, the director has left no loose ends anywhere.

AMERICAN—There is something doing every minute—and then something else. The action never halts for a moment, and nobody could possibly complain of dullness. Lionel Barrymore showed once again what an excellent actor he is.

HERALD—"The Face in the Fog" is engaging. * * * It is a very fascinating carnival of crime, and well done, of course, in a refined and inoffensive fashion, according to the best standards.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Lionel Barrymore does some of the best screen work of his career.

DAILY NEWS—This is melodrama thrilling and entertaining. * * * Barrymore is delightful as the sure-handed, versatile crook, and the production and direction of the film leave little to be desired.

EVE, WORLD—Any picture graced by Lionel Barrymore is worth seeing.

GLOBE—The producers of "The Face in the Fog." probably because the author let no other source open, are too generous with their thrills, fights, and suspense. There is enough of these, however, to make a couple of Pearl White serials. * * * The story is splendidly cast and lavishly produced. It is in a Boston Blackie story, and Lionel Barrymore plays the leading role as only he can.

SUN—The picture aimed, we believe, to be partly a mystery story, in addition to being wholly a violent melodrama. The melodrama ambition was certainly achieved, but the mystery was—well, rather childish.

POST—What photography! Rarely has anything been thrown to the camera so beautifully on the screen. One regrets turning to indoor scenes and a plot. And the plot is as thick as the fog.

EVE, TELEGRAM—The force of the motion picture as a whole for dramatic storytelling is pointedly shown in "The Face in the Fog." * * * The excitement keeps up to the final fadeaway.

JOURNAL—Cosmopolitan has hit another bull's-eye with "The Face in the Fog." This remarkable film version of a remarkable story, cast with a magnificent cast of actors, sets the pulse thrilling with its succession of tense, thrilling moments. Lionel Barrymore, as Boston Blackie, discloses his skill as an interpreter of subtlety and suggestion.

Church Competition

Bullock Says It Is Menace To Industry—Expressions Are Replied To Sharply

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cleveland, O. — Closing of church competition, and the theater stirred up a debate at the meeting held of the Cinema Clubs of Ohio, in which Samuel Bullock, of Will Goldwyn, and new Raymond G. Clapp, of Cincinnati, took issue with each other.

I believe that churches and schools should be made available to the open market, but they should not take educational films," said Bullock, "but they should obtain them through the proper channels and should not offer legitimate motion picture theaters commercial competition."

"The non-theatrical picture is a menace to the industry," and he continued, "this type of picture is growing to such an extent that we feel we shall have to take drastic steps to protect the theater owners' interests."

Surety Bonds

The announcement also says:

"The production and distribution of a picture necessarily requires a much longer turn-over than most other lines of manufacture. This is an additional handicap of serious moment, especially so with the better grades of pictures. Any industry which has to contend not merely with a long slow turn-over but also with difficulties in securing borrowing facilities from the banks will always find it hard to show a normal profit on invested capital.

"The proportion of capital invested to bank credit extended, is probably higher in the picture industry than in any other industrial field—a fact which many bankers do not fully appreciate.

"The motion picture producer has the reputation of being always "hard up," because he has to do virtually all his own financing, either on his own capital or on loans secured at high rates because bank credit is seldom available. Such conditions obviously are reflected in higher production costs."

"Insinuation" New York Distribution

First National's New York exchange has acquired distribution rights for this territory "Insinuation," Margery Wilson is both star and author.

The first, "Crash," will be released early in November. Releases will follow two each month, there being twenty-four subjects in the series. Jimmie Adams heads the cast.

Smith to Home Office

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—Cresson Smith, who has been manager of the United Artists office here ever since its inception has been transferred to the New York office.

Harry Eichenlaub, who has been manager of the First National exchange, succeeds Smith.

At the New York offices of United Artists it was stated that the exact nature of Smith's future activities here have not been settled.

"LAWFUL LARCENY" Film Rights

The matter of screen rights to "LAWFUL LARCENY," current stage success, is in dispute. It was recently announced that First National had bought the rights and this statement was confirmed at the Al Woods offices at 504 Broadway, where Harry Revens is a broker and producer, announces that he holds the rights and disposed of them to J. E. Burtatour for Hope Hampton. The Woods office now announces that Revens holds the rights. Meanwhile First National officials know of no reason why their claim to the film rights can be forfeited.
KATHERINE MAC DONALD

Congratulations, Miss Mac Donald!

We have seen your latest picture, "White Shoulders," and we wish to congratulate you on your finest picture from an artistic, dramatic and entertainment standpoint. Much as we have liked your work in previous productions, we believe that this excels anything that you have ever given First National.

We also wish to congratulate Mr. B. P. Schulberg, of Preferred Pictures, Inc., on the beauty and artistry of this production. Never, we believe, has there been a picture so adapted to the artistry of the American Beauty as this one.

With Miss MacDonald's beauty, her fine portrayal of this character, and with the advance advertising received through the prominence of the author, George Kibbe Turner, and its wide circulation as a novel in the Saturday Evening Post, this picture should prove one of the big winners of 1922.

And not forgetting the excellent direction of Tom Forman and the intelligent adaptation by Lois Zellner.

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, INC.
Announcement TO THE MOTION PICTURE

Consider now with us in crowning achievement of reproduction in motion "THE DRAMATIC LIFE"

After more than a year of intensive research, directed by Dr. Gilbert Ellis Bailey, Ph.D., of the University of Southern California, in co-operation with Ray R. and Albert L. Rockett, and Miss Frances Marion, the ROCKETT-LINCOLN FILM COMPANY announces that the preliminary work for the production of the dramatic life of Abraham Lincoln in motion pictures has been completed and that actual shooting will begin upon final O. K. of the working script, a product of the matchless genius of MISS FRANCES MARION.

This research, covering a period of two hundred and fifty years, from the origin of the Lincoln family in England to the present time, embraces hundreds of interviews with relatives, friends, neighbors, associates and acquaintances of our Martyr Chief Magistrate; also authors, educators, government officials, army and navy officers and the custodians of all the great collections of Lincolniana in America, thus exhausting every imaginable remaining source of contact with Abraham Lincoln and his times.

The last word forever in Lincoln Lore and Expression. Supreme in entertainment and educational value.

The broad scope of this picture will compel the most sumptuous production and the largest cast in the history of the cinema, while the quality of the cast will be limited only by the genius of the American screen.

"THE DRAMATIC LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN"

will be told with the WAR BETWEEN THE STATES as a background and with the strictest historical authenticity.

The producers believe the time has come to make history live again in action and to tell in animated scenes the great stories of the progress of humanity in order that the lessons may be better understood by all the people and that a sick world may be made to feel the healing inspiration of America's undying ideals.

Of this NEW ERA in pictures this Lincoln film is the herald and archetype and you are invited to share with us in the fruit of it, for no conceivable subject can more quickly or more largely be transmuted into box office returns.

Church Competition
Rev. Dr. Clapp followed with a statement designed to show discrimination against churches showing films.

"When I assumed the pastorate of my church in Cincinnati," he said, "I felt that the use of an inspirational or educational film was a legitimate amendment to the Sunday evening service. It proved successful and, as our attendance grew, the manager of a nearby theater objected that we were hurting his business.

"The situation grew more involved until I discovered I was having difficulty in obtaining films. One exchange, in an attempt to meet the demand, had been turned down. Pictures I had booked were cancelled. I called it an unfair restraint of trade which is forcing the churches to establish non-theatrical exchanges of their own."

George J. Zehring, director of the Y. M. C. A. motion picture bureau, said that exhibitors who are continually being prodded by committees on better films to select high class pictures are seriously handicapped by the method by which they must book pictures.

"Few exhibitors have the choice of programs," he concluded.

American Films in South America
John L. Day, South American representative of Famous Players-Lasky, who has just returned from a three months visit to Rio de Janeiro, reports that American productions are the most popular in South America. Foreign competition, principally German, has made no serious inroads upon this market according to Day.

Day made arrangements for increased Paramount distribution and reports that the offices in Rio de Janeiro and San Paulo show an important increase over last year's business.

New York, N.Y. October 10th, 1922.

Mr. Ben Schwartz, Wgr., Apollo Exchange, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sir:

You will undoubtedly be pleased to know that your picture "More to Be Pitted Than Scored" which has just completed its run at our BELMONT THEATRE is indeed a wonderful attraction and my only regret is that my other booking arrangements did not permit me to run it for a long period.

It has broken some of our best house records for attendance, having played to approximately eight thousand people on each day of its run. Of course the attendance would not have reached these figures unless the picture had been properly exploited; in fact, no picture can be a strong attraction unless it has been given plenty of exploitation. MORE TO BE Pitted THAN SCORED more than justified the exploitation we gave it, as our audiences were more than pleased with it and were lavish in their praise.

Very truly yours,
BELMONT THEATRE

Emphatic Denial

In making public his and Lasky’s denial, Zukor was vigorous in his declaration of what he termed was the shameless trickery which would foment such rumors and the irresponsible of newspapers which would print them without verification.

“I have no doubt that this story was inspired by men in this industry,” he said. “In support of my original belief that the rumor was inspired I wish to cite a telegram which I received from Cecil B. DeMille: "Received wire yesterday from New York producing firm saying they had definite information I was leaving Famous Players, and last night representative of another big firm called on me making same statement positively, both firms of course laying position before me. What is all about it? Kind regards.""

To this telegram Zukor asked DeMille for the names of the firms which approached him.

Berlin Theaters May Close
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Berlin, Germany—All German motion picture theaters may close by voluntary action of the Asso. of Theater Owners and the Berlin Asso. of Film Distributors in protest against the present high amusement tax imposed by the government in such a way that the theaters are obliged to pay it and can not pass the burden on to the public.

Stereoscopic Pictures Planned To Open On Broadway In December Given First Showing

First showing was held yesterday of "Mars Calling," a five reel feature photographed by the Teleview stereoscopic process at the experimental apparatus conducted by Lawrence Davis. Mr. Don-with and Wm. P. Cassidy.

"Mars Calling" was directed by R. William Neill, with a cast including Grant Mitchell and Margaret Irving. Pictures have been taken on a Broadway theater where it is planned to present the production in December.

Stereoscopic pictures made by the Teleview process are photographed on a standard stock by two cameras with the lenses separated by 2½ inches, the normal distance between the average person's eyes. The pictures are separated by two synchronizing machines, each running a normal rate of speed.

Spectators view the screens through the teleview, an instrument containing a shutter which is synchronized with the shutters of the projection machines and cuts off the screen so that the left eye sees one picture and the right eye sees another, thus giving the spectators a sense of depth in picture and that is stereoscopic.

The films as shown yesterday attained a remarkable degree of perspective without strain and without going out of focus.

More Excerpts From What Boston Newspaper Critics Say About "One Exciting Night"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Boston, Mass.—Extracts from the six Boston newspaper reviews of "One Exciting Night," the new D. W. Griffith production now at Tremont Temple, in addition to those already reprinted from the Herald and Post follow:

The Daily Advertiser said in part:

"The audience nearly lost its dignity and cheered. * * * It (the plot) races along so fast and contrives to include so many suspense-lifting episodes that only a foolhardy person would test his powers of description by trying to put it in mere words. * * *"

"It may be said safely, however, that never did ladies go so brownly, nor strong men wonder more, dazedly at any screen mystery fail.

"Griffith said he hoped that the second act would be a bit exciting. And it was. A typical Griffith big screen, visualizing a hurricane, came as a surprise climax." (Continued on Page 4)

Yellow

Someone so proud of his name that he refused to sign it, soon the following to THE FILM DAILY relative to the review of "The Man Who Played God," which appeared in last Sunday's issue:

"I am a neutral, and have no interest in this production, but this is the damnest piece of petty faulting of a big picture that I have ever seen in your columns. If your reviewers don’t know a big “ditty” theme when they see it, and can only understand a wind storm or a sawmill, you’d better hire some new reviewers. There are plenty to be had who would recognize the weight of this story, and if your paper doesn’t appreciate such productions, you are doing a — of a lot to keep the film business where Collier’s Weekly thinks it is. You have some responsibilities, you know."

THE FILM DAILY has in the past, does now and will continue, to criticize productions as it sees them. Our reviewing staff is not infallible but it gives its best. Over 5,500 Reviews have appeared in THE FILM DAILY since its inception with a compelling number of bulls eye hits—a record to be modestly proud of.

Goldwyn-United Cigar Tie-up

Goldwyn has effected a tie-up with United Cigar stores whereby each store will display a card advertising "Remembrance." The card contains a picture of Claude Gillingwater as "Pop" Grout in "Remembrance," holding his grandson's face up against his. "Pop" is smoking a cigar. Above the head of Gillingwater are the words, "Hello Pop," while underneath, running clear across the page is the title of the picture, "Remembrance," in red letters. The text underneath runs as follows:

"That's the title of Rupert Hughes' perfect picture now playing, and one of the things that Old Pop Grout in 'Remembrance' never forgot was to smoke his Ricora, Old Pop's choice," followed by prices of the cigar.

This tie-up was engineered by W. R. Ferguson who has also arranged a national tie-up with the Victor Talking Machine Company by which "Remembrance" is to be exploited in windows of stores selling Victrolas and Victor records.

Newspaper Serial Helps

Seattle Wash.—The run of Guy Bates Post, former Seattle stage favorite in "The Masquerader" at the Coliseum, was tied up by Manager Frank Steffy with serial publication of the story in the Post-Intelligencer.

Want Ad Stunt Draws

Eric, Pa.—The management of the Perry executed a clever newspaper stunt in connection with the run of "Monte Cristo" working with a local daily at an expense of twenty-five pairs of seats for the show. In the want-ad columns of the newspaper extra letters were inserted which, when located and assembled, spelled the words t-i-m-e. The first, twenty-five contestants to solve the problem received the passes. More than 5,000 answers were turned in and all attendance records were broken.

Trailers Supplanting Slides

The Export & Import Film Company, in cooperation with the Republican Laboratories, have prepared a special "stunt" trailer of about three hundred feet for advance announcement of "Jungle Goddess" screenings in theaters.

The reel is made up of thrill shots from the fifteen episodes of the animal chapter-play and its use as a serial business getter has already been proved by many exhibitors. It is gradually supplanting the use of slides for serial advance announcements. Due to its fast action, exhibitors have been able to pack their houses on the premier showing of the first episode.

St. Louis Notes

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis, Mo.—The Majestic has been sold by the McKinley Amusement Co. to Sam Lewis and H. R. Hamburg for a price said to be approximately $20,000. Hamburg and Lewis have also taken a five-year lease on the theater building which is owned by A. D. Pappas. The house seats 1,100. Hamburg and Lewis also control the New Shenandoah and the Bridge.

Mike Newman has joined the Paramount organization and has been assigned to the Southern Illinois territory.

The St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors League has voted to place a float in the Armistice Day parade fostered by the American Legion.

The Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. has been awarded the contract to make an official moving picture for the city of St. Louis to be known as "The Spirit of St. Louis."

The Committee of Fifty, the Church Federation and similar organizations interested in censorship are canvassing candidates for the state legislature. There is every indication that when the new body of lawmakers convenes in Jefferson City next January the old efforts to enforce censorship and blue laws in Missouri will be renewed.

Unusually Powerful Dramatic Entertainment In Film Version of Stage Play

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . About 6,000 feet

It has been conceded that "A Bill of Divorceament," the play in which Allan Pollock starred last winter, was one of the most powerful dramatic pieces that the stage has ever seen. It is more than likely that the film adaptation, made in England by Denison Clift, for Ideal, will occupy the same position here upon the screen. For sheer dramatic entertainment, minus the sugar-coated trimmings, "A Bill of Divorceament" can hardly be surpassed.

All credit is due Denison Clift who made the picture

You Can Promise the Most Unique Self-Sacrifice Theme They Have Ever Seen

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is doubtful if you have ever had anything as strictly or powerfully dramatic as "A Bill of Divorce-ment." And it is a fine picture, one that is going to start them talking because of the wallop that it contains. If ever there was dramatic punch, this has it and for those who favor dramatic entertainment, it is going to prove a great success, undoubtedly.

The best angle to play up is the remarkable self-sacrifice of the daughter. If you can give them an idea of what it is about without letting them in on the whole story, do so. Let them know that it has to do with a young girl who sacrificed her own happiness to make her mother happy and to protect her father.
The picture will probably be well patronized wherever the stage play has been seen and you might play up the title prominently.

You could also interest them from another angle if you see fit. The question which the story raises relative to a wife bound by the marriage law to a man declared incurably insane. It is more than likely that you can start some interesting discussions by raising this point. Use the name of Constance Binney, the best known of the players, but promise them fine work, giving Fay Compton the mention she deserves.
The woman whose name is soiled with scandal finds herself the idol of the press and public. Women crowd about her; men fall at her feet.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..........6,902 feet

With those who like Richard Barthelmess and will be satisfied with any picture in which he appears,
"The Bond Boy" will undoubtedly have a favorable reception. On the other hand if they want a good story and original, interesting situations they are likely to be disappointed because George Washington Og-den's story does not provide anything new in the way of screen entertainment. Nearly all of the situations have been used before and because they are so obviously familiar, the director has found it difficult to build up any suspense.

Even when the shadow of the rope that is to hang him, reflects in pendulum fashion on the wall of his cell, you are certain that hero Dick will never feel it against his neck. And sure enough the last minute confession once more brings about the happy ending.
Probably it isn't altogether the director's fault that you anticipate things so much but he doesn't lessen that condition by prolonging the "agony" and dragging the climax. It would have been just as effective to have had the woman weaken at the trial and tell the truth. She had nothing to lose because it is quite evident that her "good name" didn't bother her very much when immediately after her husband's death she goes to live with her lover. The author has made his characters inconsistent in this respect.

Director King provides an ample production for the most part although there are a few things that he has not handled very well. The introduction of comedy touches, regardless of the fact that they are very slight, is out of place. Just why the defendant should be given a lawyer with a sense of humor is not clear.
And in just what part of the country do they make a picnic out of a murder trial? It would be interesting to know where they carry on like this. Another touch, that of the shadow of the rope, is not attractive to the spectator.

Barthelmess does very good work but the story is not worthy of it. He needs to overcome the very common "movie" idea of registering nervousness by chewing his finger nails. Barthelmess is too good an actor for this.

The cast is adequate.

Story: Isom Chase believes that his wife is about to run away with a farm hand, Joe. Chase is accidentally killed by his own gun. To save Chase' wife, Ollie, who had planned to elope with a drummer, Joe remains silent and is convicted. Later Ollie confesses.

Depend Upon Star's Popularity to Satisfy Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It depends altogether upon the popularity of Richard Barthelmess whether or not you want "The Bond Boy." His many admirers will probably consider his performance sufficient to entertain them and if you know they like him, you won't have to worry about pleasing them. Or if you think there's a chance of them liking such a story with conventional situations and the regulation ending, you can go to it. It is up to you to give them what they want regardless of what it is. And you know best what goes with your particular crowd.

Of course the star's name should be the pivot of your exploitation. Mention his previous releases and there is a good selection of stills that can be displayed in the lobby. Stills and catchlines will give an idea of the story and a trailer shown in advance, if you use that method of getting them interested in coming attractions.

SUPPORT ...... Marjorie Daw a pleasing heroine; others adequate but unimportant

DETAIL ................ Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Cowboy hero saves girl's father when he is trapped by a flood in his own mine

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,570 feet

Universal selected such appropriate and interesting stories for the last few Hoot Gibson releases that it is probably all the more noticeable that the material in "The Lone Hand" is weak and not as actionful as the others. It is a comedy drama that would have made a suitable two reeler but it isn't weighty enough for a feature, even as short a one as they have made of it.

The comedy business is typical of the short reeler and not very funny. The dramatic situations are the best but they are all in the last reel and make the climax which is first rate and very well handled. The flood scenes are fairly vivid and register a thrill in which the hero and the girl's father are trapped in a mine which the girl floods, not knowing that her father's life will be endangered. Gibson has to work hard in this bit to save the unconscious father. It seems just a bit unconvincing, however, that the father didn't regain consciousness as soon as the water struck him. But, of course if he had, Gibson wouldn't have had to save him and he had to be a hero.

Another fair thrill is where Gibson traps the gang scheming to get the man's mine by rolling a huge boulder down the mountainside and demolishes the cabin in which they are hiding. There is a big crowd that likes this sort of thing. Gibson's admirers will like what he has to do and they'll be satisfied with the picture too in all probability.

Reeves Eason fills the early reels with unimportant bits of business, comedy mostly, at the same time introducing his characters. The development is slow at first but it speeds up toward the close.

Story: Laramie, a cowboy, meets Jane Sheridan whose father owns a mine which a certain crowd is trying to steal from him. Jane confides the secret entrance of the mine to Laramie. Later, one of Sheridan's enemies tells Jane that Laramie is planning to steal the mine. Jane sees him enter through the secret passage and not knowing her father is also in there, she floods it. Laramie saves Sheridan's life and then traps the thieves, claiming Jane as a reward.

Depend On Last Reel's Thrills and Gibson to Get It Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have been satisfying them with the recent Hoot Gibson you will probably be able to please them with "The Lone Hand" although the story is not as good as those in his recent releases. It is a fairly good title and will attract the men and boys of your crowd in particular.

For the women, let them know that Marjorie Daw is the heroine. Display stills showing the flooded mine and if you usually show trailers of coming features, use a bit of this to interest them. It will probably serve to bring them back. Refer to some of Gibson's recent releases such as "The Galloping Kid," "The Loaded Door" and "Trimmed." Catchlines will also give an idea of what "The Lone Hand" is.
Crook Melodrama That Will Bring a Big Crowd to Many Box Offices

SCENARIO BY ............ John Lynch and Jack Boyle CAMERAMEN ............. Harold Wenstrom and Ira H. Morgan

AS A WHOLE...... Good suspense in crook melodrama that will appeal to many; should reach a big majority

STORY...... Of the dime novel variety but the right material for a picture of this kind

DIRECTION...... Secures fine suspense at first but allows things to become too much involved before he begins explaining

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Very good
LIGHTINGS ................................ Good

PLAYERS...... Lionel Barrymore capable, of course, and does good work; a well assembled cast including Seena Owen, Lowell Sherman, George Nash, Mary MacLaren, Macey Harlam, Louis Wolheim and Gustav von Seyffertitz

EXTERIORS .............. Night street scenes good
INTERIORS ......................... All right
DETAIL .................. Usually ample

CHARACTER OF STORY...... A reformed crook becomes involved in mysterious death of beggar who possessed smuggled Russian jewels sought by Government

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 6,095 feet

Exhibitors who cater to a crowd that like crook melodrama with plenty of mysterious situations and hair-raising thrills will have a treat in store for them in this latest "Boston Blackie" story which Cosmopolitan is releasing. It is by Jack Boyle and probably contains as much, if not more, excitement than Boyle usually finds for one story. He certainly crammed this one full of crooks, detectives, smuggled jewels and all that goes for making a thrilling melodramatic entertainment, the kind that pleases a big majority—the crowd that still reads dime novels and like pictures of the same type.

Alan Crosland certainly creates an effective suspense right at the start with a mysterious murder and follows it up with equally mysterious events which gets the spectator's interest fastened on the development of the plot at the very beginning. In this respect it may strike some that Crosland has been a trifle too solicitous for suspense when he keeps piling it on, but shows no signs of solving the mystery. There are two fights in the picture that are great: one between Louis Wolheim and Lionel Barrymore that is going to go big with the men and another between Lowell Sherman and Macey Harlam. Crosland has gotten speed into his film, undeniably, with one possible exception, where a flash-back explains the mystery of the smuggled jewels. This bit seems a trifle anticlimactic but it has apparently been cut down considerably.

Lionel Barrymore fills the role of Boston Blackie splendidly and his many admirers will like him first rate in the part. He is better cast in a straight dramatic role but they will like the variation. He has been given a strong supporting cast which includes Louis Wolheim, drafted from the legitimate for the time being. Wolheim is a fine type for the part of Petrus. George Nash and Mary MacLaren are the next in importance with Lowell Sherman, Seena Owen, Macey Harlam and Gustav von Seyffertitz following.

Story: Boston Blackie, a reformed crook, suddenly comes into possession of certain famous jewels sought by U. S. Government. Blackie permits himself to be trailed by the crooks who seek them; he traps them. There are a great many complications following in which a Grand Duchess tells a story of having been forced to flee from her native country and of the loss of her jewels which are a curse against her happiness. How Boston Blackie hands over the gems to the detective, brings about the Duchess' happiness and retains the faith of his wife completes the story.

Where They Like It Go After It and Get Results

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Once more you will have to consider your audience. If you have the right crowd for "The Face in the Fog" you should be able to do big business with it. It is one of the best crook melodramas that you have had a chance to get lately, so if you know this type of picture brings them to the box office, go after "The Face in the Fog" and boost it.

Be sure to let them know it is a "Boston Blackie" story and use Jack Boyle's name. Of course give Lionel Barrymore plenty of prominence. He isn't given stellar credit on the press sheets but his name is the biggest bet of those in the cast, although you can mention the names of them all for that matter. Seena Owen and Lowell Sherman are co-featured with Barrymore. Mention Barrymore's other releases and play up the title with catchlines or whatever exploitation gets the best results.

AS A WHOLE: Unbelievably amateurish and poor; nothing to recommend it but horse race climax that has already been done to death

DIRECTION: Poor; production is way below the average and there is no attempt at sustaining the interest

LIGHTINGS ...................... Very bad on interiors
STAR: Given too many close-ups; tries to be too "cute"

EXTERIORS ...................... Adequate
INTERIORS: Unattractive sets badly lighted
DETAIL: They didn't bother about it very much

CHARACTER OF STORY: Girl, in love with foster parent, finally wins a proposal after she has convinced him that she does not love the "other fellow"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION: About 5,000 feet

This is about the most amateurish attempt at picture producing that has been seen lately. It is a downright waste of time to try and pass this off as an entertainment, not to say anything about a waste of money to make it. In the first place the idea has served as the basis of so many screen stories already that it is getting to be impossible to keep track of them; the same old race track stuff with the heroine riding the horse to victory. Incidentally the same distributors released a picture only five months ago with the identical situation, the same star and the same director. It is impossible to believe that the situation is popular enough to warrant using it over and over without some obvious new twists or something to offset the hackneyed situations. Of course the race furnishes the climax which is all right of itself and supplies a fair enough thrill. But the material that precedes it is weak and certainly works up no suspense in anticipation of the climax.

Francis Ford directed and also plays a leading role. That you cannot do two things at once and do them well, once more holds true. Ford's acting certainly won't attract much attention but it is likely that his poor direction will. If he had given his whole effort to making a picture that would at least measure up to present day production standards, the commonplace plot would undoubtedly have been less conspicuous. There has been some attempt at humorous touches but they will hardly be recognized as such. The titles are very poor. The settings are ordinary and usually the lighting is too dark. Peggy O'Day fulfills requirements of the heroine satisfactorily although she is not sufficiently attractive to warrant continual close-ups.

Story: Betty returns from college after an absence of seven years and learns from the man she calls Daddy Bill that he found her when she was a baby and is not her father at all. Bill's sister insists that Betty marry her son, Phil. Betty has fallen in love with Bill but when he says he thinks she better marry Phil she agrees until she overhears Phil telling the other girl he loves her. A title tells you that if Phil had money he would not have to marry Betty. Betty rides Bill's horse, Dona, to victory in a race and wins the money for Phil so he won't have to marry her. Finally Bill proposes and Betty is happy.

Pretty Poor Picture But It Is Up to You

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you don't mind giving them a weak one and do not have to depend upon regular patronage to keep your house open then you may take a chance with "Thundering Hoofs." Otherwise you can promise yourself they'll do some complaining. Any place where they expect at least, an average picture, they are going to kick on this one.

Of course it is sometimes possible to slip in a weak one with another good feature but if you know they are going to balk at it, don't do it. A transient house, where they don't have to worry about pleasing or displeasing them, is the safest place for "Thundering Hoofs." In case you showed the feature, "They're Off," they are likely to think this is the same picture so assure them it is a new one.

Gets Humor Out of Ladder Superstition. Will Please a Majority

“THE LADDER JINX” Vitagraph

DIRECTOR .................................. Jesse Robbins
AUTHOR ..................................... Edgar Franklin
SCENARIO BY ............................. David Kirkland
CAMERAMAN ............................... Irving Ries

AS A WHOLE........ Will keep them interested, especially the “fan” crowd for whom it holds fine appeal.

STORY........... Pretty far-fetched and improbable but makes for some rather effective comedy; will amuse.

DIRECTION....... Good for the most part but drags the story occasionally; could have done it in less footage to better advantage.

PHOTOGRAPHY .............................. All right.

LIGHTINGS .................................. Satisfactory.

PLAYER............. A good cast with Edward Horton giving a good characterization; Tully Marshall, Margaret Landis, Wilbur Higby and Otis Harlan and others.

EXTERIORS .................. Appropriate.

INTERIORS .................. Suitable.

DETAIL .................. Ample.

CHARACTER OF STORY.... Bank cashier walks under ladder and gets into all kinds of trouble, nearly losing his fiancee in the bargain.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.... About 6,000 feet.

The second Jesse Robbins picture for Vitagraph will undoubtedly appeal to a good majority of picture goers, the typical “fan” crowd in particular. It is a fairly live comedy piece with events occurring in rapid succession to keep them interested. The theme is a novel one and there are so many people who believe in the various superstitions which it involves that they will probably get a good deal of enjoyment out of the film.

The director has developed good action and for the most part the story moves rather rapidly. There are a few instances where it could be speeded up; cutting would take care of this adequately. The picture would have been better in five reels, however. For some the story will probably be too improbable but there is a chance that the action it contains will make up for the fairly wild situations. The complications pile on quickly and there are good comedy touches throughout that help to make it interesting.

The idea of incurring bad luck by walking under a ladder is what the story is based upon and hero certainly gets his share of it even after he has gone back to retrace his steps at the command of his fiancee who claims that by so doing he will avoid the ill luck that would otherwise follow him. The things that begin to happen to hero are the far-fetched bits but they offer amusing twists that will appeal to many.

Edward Horton, who played the bookkeeper-hero of Robbins first Vitagraph production, “Too Much Business,” is the cashier-hero of “The Ladder Jinx.” Horton fits the part very well and gives a satisfactory performance. Tully Marshall hasn’t very much to do here but his admirers will like him. Margaret Landis is the heroine and others are Wilbur Higby, Otis Harlan, Colin Kenny, Tom McGuire, Will R. Walling and Tom Murray.

Story: Arthur Barnes becomes cashier in place of Peter Stalton who resigns thinking his nephew, Richard Twing, will get the job. Helen Wilbur, daughter of the bank’s president, is to announce her engagement to Arthur that night but insists that before he comes to the party he go and walk back under the ladder he had come under during the day so as to prevent any ill luck. Arthur does so but is taken for a burglar. The complications that ensue are too numerous to go into detail but eventually Arthur is happy with Helen and Stalton and his nephew are accused of robbing the bank.

A First Rate Number For Your Hallowe’en Program

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors will probably find it very easy to get them interested in “The Ladder Jinx” if they use some of the exploitation possibilities that the title and picture suggests. You could have a man going about town carrying a ladder bearing the sign: “Mr. Arthur Barnes walked under this ladder. Go to the blank theater and see what ‘The Ladder Jinx’ did to him.” Make use of any superstitious omens which might attract attention. Incidentally the picture will make a fine number for your Hallowe’en program.

If you showed them Jesse Robbins first picture, “Too Much Business” and they liked it, they will undoubtedly be pleased with “The Ladder Jinx.” Play up the title with catchlines and it should not be hard to secure good business if you take advantage of the exploitation possibilities in connection with it.

"White and Yellow"—Tales of the Fish Patrol—Universal
Type of production........................................2 reel drama
Jack London's "Tales of the Fish Patrol" are excellent screen stuff, being replete with action and thrilling episodes. In selecting these stories, good judgment has been shown and to the credit of Universal, it must be said that good use of the material has been made. In this initial offering of the series, there is action and a certain amount of suspense which will enable it to get over, but there is slight anti-climax at the conclusion. On the other hand, one must bear in mind that a certain amount of introductory material must be inserted in the opening issue of a set of pictures and that perhaps slows this up a bit. Incidentally, the title is not entirely appropriate, for the Chinaman in the offering is not quite as important as he might be and probably will get a greater opportunity for his villainy in forthcoming numbers. In houses where they want short-length dramas, this is almost certain to register well in spite of a few flaws. Karl Coolidge wrote the scenario, Edward Kull directed, Arthur Reeves cranked the camera, while the cast includes Jack Mulhall in the featured role, Louise Lorraine, Alfred Gronell, John Wallace, Robert Gray, Jim Wang and others.

"The City Chap"—Al St. John Comedy—Fox
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
This one may please a few but it is the "mussy" kind of comedy that tries to get laughs by the worst sort of slap-stick tricks. Such stuff as playing around with limerick cheese and putting shaving cream on the comedian's ice cream is likely to prove nauseating, rather than amusing. Al St. John can be used to much better advantage than in material like this. His old bicycle comedies were great and he is more adapted to clowning than straight stuff. "The City Chap" isn't a strong number but if you think they like this kind, give it to them. They'll probably find it amusing. There is one touch that will get a laugh if they catch it. It refers to the old saying of "a town where they take the sidewalks in at nine o'clock." They show Al taking up the sidewalk in front of the store and taking it inside.

Graphic 2542—Educational
Type of production........................................1 reel magazine
This, the third issue of Educational's new screen magazine, opens with some footage showing how some armless men get along in the world. While extremely interesting, this feature of the reel may not go over so well with those who are a bit squeamish. This is followed by a section entitled "Which is Worth More—Face or Feet?" in which New York booties exhibit both in the effort to supply the answer. The footage demonstrating what is called, "plug bait" fishing is interesting and the Ollendorf cartoon is sure to get more than one laugh at the finish. Altogether the reel is good.

Pathe Review No. 176
Type of production........................................1 reel magazine
This reel opens with shots of summer landscapes in which the goddess of summer floats gracefully. The scenes of the N. J. State Game Farm, dealing with pheasants and showing the newly hatched chicks should be liked, as should the scenes of the Chinese "Djinn Maker," his produce and eager audience. A novelty in clay and a bit of colored footage showing the Grotto of Lourdes complete this interesting issue.

"Some Family"—Century—Universal
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
Lee Moran's latest comedy is funny in spots and pleasantly entertaining all the way through. It deals with Lee's troubles with his sweetheart's family who range in size and age from an infant baby to a big brute of a brother. They all sleep in one big bed that slides into the fireplace in the daytime. There is a funny situation when Lee proposes to the girl and his hand gets stuck on some fly paper and a good laugh at the finish when the Ford that Lee has paid for and the family appropriated suddenly separates, one half going one way and the other half another. Good, average offering.

Felix, the Cat, in "Fifty-Fifty"—Cartoon Comedy—State Rights
Type of production........................................1 reel cartoon
The Felix cartoon series is one of the most interesting of this form of screen entertainment. The material is novel and the cartoons splendid. The issues are genuinely amusing and the latest, "Fifty-Fifty," shows the Cat at some new stunts in the way of association with a tramp. Felix promises to split fifty-fifty with the hobo. His first deed is to get his pal a pair of shoes. Felix secures them by sending up a serenade which is greeted with a storm of missiles, including the necessary shoes. The number is a first rate one of the kind and will fit in on any program. It can be relied upon to amuse, as well.

"Love Drops"—Universal
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
Neely Edwards is starred in this one reel comedy which is only mildly amusing. Fainting upon hearing of his inheritance from his uncle, Neely is restored by a flask of Love Drops which make all the women in sight fall in love with him. Unable to shake off the ladies, he dives into the sea, where he is immediately vamped by a mermaid. In desperation he turns salesman and peddles Love Drops for a living.

Screen Snapshots No. 11—Pathé
Type of production........................................1 reel fan magazine
Views of stars on vacation instead of "location" make this a very pleasing reel. Most audiences like to see their favorite players "back stage" and this offering should prove popular. Florence and King Vidor, open the reel. Babe Ruth and Eva Novak demonstrate the art of batting a ball. Little Peggy Cartwright shows us how to take a hurdle. The screen stars at the opening of "The Prisoner of Zenda" are introduced informally and Billy Dove who is learning to swing a golf club closes the issue.

"Once to Every Boy"—Universal
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
Lewis Sargent is starred in this comedy and is very likeable as an always-on-the-job messenger boy. Mary Philbin, who incidentally will be starred in Von Stroheim's new one, "Merry-go-round," plays the part of Sargent's sweetheart. She hasn't very much to do, but is very good-looking and one wants to see more of her. Jimmy, the messenger boy, is knocked down by a burglar coming out of a house. Jimmy runs after him, thinking he is the owner of the telegram. A policeman arrests Jimmy and takes the burglar with him to appear against him. They are about to convict Jimmy when the lady who was robbed comes in and accuses the burglar. Jimmy receives a reward and buys a Ford.

DETAIL .................Ample; some titles not very good

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Sheriff-hero recovers from blow that affected his mind, clears his name and gets the man who killed his father

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION............4,587 feet

Jones is a good cowboy actor and he is best suited to the regulation western characters, minus the straight dramatic acting that he is required to do in “Bells of San Juan,” a not altogether appropriate vehicle for the star. It gives Jones too much straight stuff and not enough of that which makes him popular with his admirers—riding, rescue stunts and fights. Of course the story includes some of this but not enough. And it is this that Jones does best. He is not a convincing dramatic actor and it is especially obvious in the scene where he is supposed to be out of his mind.

The title is a bit off. The story isn’t anything that you might expect it to be and after they introduce the bells they forget to ring them. The title at best isn’t very pertinent especially for the type of picture which you usually associate with Jones’ name. The plot is not an unusual one except for one angle—the heroine is a doctor. This is a fairly new twist but otherwise it follows along familiar lines with Jones, as the sheriff, seeking the man who killed his father.

The director has not succeeded entirely in keeping things convincing. It appears to the spectator that Jones might readily have secured the necessary evidence to convict his father’s slayer early in the picture when he captures one of the gang. The production is all right and the cast adequate.

The picture contains a fair amount of action with Jones’ capture of one of his enemy’s gang offering a fair thrill and the fight at the finish, as well as the one in which Jones is injured, offer other exciting bits. The star does good work throughout, with the exception of the bits requiring heavy dramatic acting and he isn’t well suited to this. Fritzi Brunette looks very nice and handles the role of heroine capably.

Story: Dorothy Page, a doctor, is called to attend a man who has been injured. The men refuse to allow her to return for fear she will tell the sheriff where he can find them. Rod Norton, the sheriff, is after the men to make them tell who killed his father. Rod rescues Dorothy and declares his love. She goes away to continue her studies. Rod is injured by his enemies and Dorothy returns to take care of him. She succeeds in restoring his mind and after Rod captures the man who killed his father, the two go off on a honeymoon.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The average audience will probably be satisfied with Charles Jones’ latest, “Bells of San Juan,” and it will get by with his admirers although they will probably want to see him in pictures with more action and less acting. Fox has been pretty fortunate in securing the right material for Jones, but this is just a bit off.

Better use catchlines with the title to let them know what it is about because it won’t give them a very definite idea of itself. Use the star’s name and if Jones has a following you can be quite sure it will satisfy. The Fox press sheets contain plenty of suggestions for exploitation, lobby display, ballyhoo and a book store tie-up—all that you need to get them interested.

Cubberley Wires Suggestion to Hays
For Relieving Exhibitors in Northwest
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis, Minn.—F. Cubberley, of the F. & R. Film Co., has sent the following telegram to Will Hays:

"The Northwest has millions of bushels of potatoes, part of which will never be due on account of the market price being only about 30 cents per bushel. Potatoes are one of the staple crops of the Northwest. In the South, a few years ago, a similar condition existed with cotton and, as a result, everybody in the South bought a bale of cotton."

"What is to prevent each man and woman in the motion picture industry from buying 50 bushels of potatoes immediately? That is to prevent theaters from immediately getting behind a move of this kind."

"Business continues terrible in the Northwest and immediate action of this nature would attract nation-wide attention and, at the same time, indirectly reflect itself in box office receipts. If the thought is worth anything get busy at once."

At the Hays office it was said that it was necessary to turn down Cubberley's proposition, although the Hays organization is in sympathy with any proposition to aid exhibitors. It is understood that the reply was to the effect that it is not possible to announce purchases of potatoes which are perishable, while the purchases of cotton mentioned by Cubberley are an investment in a negotiable staple.

Big Turnout
Biggest Crowd Yet Expected to Appear at Fall Film Golf Tournament Thursday

At the end of a perfect day yesterday there were close to 120 entries for the Fall Film Golf Tournament which is scheduled for Thursday at Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, Long Island.

It would not be surprising if there were a large number in addition to this, because many of the golfers of Famous Players are yet to be heard from. So with good weather on Thursday everything is "set" for a great day.

The Handicap Committee of which E. Kendall Gillette and G. B. Gallus, Jr., are the active heads will be working well into the night getting the players set up. The prize committee will spend all of today selecting trophies and the Food Committee has completed its task with a royal setup for both lunch and dinner.

A number of important film folk who cannot get away for the play—and some who do not play—will be on hand for the dinner at which Felix Feist will preside. Harry Reichenbach will be on hand to add to the gayety of the event.

The usual trophies and cups will be awarded. New trophies are offered this year by the Motion Picture News; Warner Brothers; Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Reuben Samuel's and the big trophy of THE FILM DAILY will also be in the running. There will be special prizes for four winners and other specials for non winners and others.

Marcus Loew, Adolph Zukor, Jack E. Mastbaum, Will Hays and other prominent executives promise to be on hand.

Another Trophy
Reuben Samuel's, who insures nearly everybody in the film business, has offered a special cup for the Fall Film Golf Tournament.

Remembrance—Thursday, at Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, Long Island. And pray for good weather. Nothing else needed to insure a great day in the open, and a great time at night. Harry Reichenbach will assist in the speech making.

Screen Closely Scrutinized for Possible Infringement Of Stage Plays

Theatrical producers are closely watching all motion pictures with a mystery theme since the success of several stage plays of this order. "One Exciting Night," the new D. W. Griffith feature, furnishes a case in point.

Griffith first tried unsuccessfully to buy screen rights to "The Bat" or "The Cat and the Canary." When Griffith decided to produce "One Exciting Night," the story was read to Avery Hopwood, co-author, and to Kemper, of Wagenhals & Kemper, the producers, before production was begun. This was done to avoid any possibility of the theatrical men claiming an infringement. Both Hopwood and Kemper felt at that time that there was no vital similarity in the two stories.

Writ Denied
U. S. Supreme Court Decides Against Binderup in $750,000 Suit Against Pathe (Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Washington—The United States Supreme Court has denied the petition of Charles G. Binderup, asking for a writ of certiorari to have the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals review his suit against Pathe Exchange, Inc., at Omaha. Film Board of Trade et al asking $750,000 damages. It is still possible for Binderup to seek review of the case by a writ of error.

Binderup brought the action in Omaha to recover three-fold damages in the petition, and the suit was filed due to an alleged illegal combination and conspiracy and combination in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

It was claimed that the respondents, with the motive of destroying the petitioner's business, and securing control of the motion picture industry, refused to lease, sell or deliver to the petitioner any motion picture films upon any terms or conditions whatsoever at any time. The petitioner alleged that he was unable to secure films from any other source and that, by the acts of the defendants, his business of conducting motion picture theaters was totally destroyed.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals held that the business involved in the suit did not constitute inter-state commerce.

Great Success
all Film Golf Tournament Brings Out Big Crowd at Sound View

Set with an ideal day, the Fall Film old Tournament held at the Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, L. I., yesterday, proved a tremendous success. This was the third event held under auspices of the Film Daily, and after 27 holes of golf, and a great roar, it was voted "the best of all." There was something like 104 players in the afternoon and about 200 turned out to dinner, at which Felix was the toastmaster, and as enlivened by many quips from arly Reichenbach.

There was a tremendous lot of fun when the prizes were distributed, especially when the boxes containing the special secret prizes were opened. A telegram following the tournament was received from Kenneth Webb: "Regret that business compels me cancel entry. Very disappointed, one tournament is biggest success ever."

Drives and Puts

"It's a shame to get a man up this early in the morning," said Marcus Loew, who arrived promptly at nine. "But I wouldn't miss it for anything in the world." Earl Hammons, of Educational, had with him as his guest over night at the club, Charles Christie, of the Christie Comedies, and mumble peg and other childish diversions killed the long hours of the night.

DIEBEL OF THE LIBERTY
Youngstown, Ohio, travelled all the way to see how well he could match his skill along side of Tom Moore, who is the greatest exponent of golf among the exhibitors. Diebel thinks they should have a tournament every other week.

Everybody missed "Butch," otherwise known as Warner, Warner Bros., whose genial good nature and winning smile have made him always welcome at these events. He had the sympathy of everyone, however, because he was way out in California, and all alone.

The Committee had great difficulty in keeping the players from breaking in and playing "tip-top golf," a diversion which can cost a lot of money if the top rolls wrong.

Mrs. Earl Hammons, when she saw the big collection of prizes and trophies—there were over 70—told her husband that if he wanted to have a happy home, he'd better turn with something.

Tom Moore, who shoots a mean ball, gave up the opportunity of being champion, choosing to play the District of Columbia, to play yesterday. The District championship was set for Thursday but Tom figured the golf championship was much more important.

Emmanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, not only was on hand to superintend the photographing of the special red, but did the best he could on the links. He had a busy day. Many of the crack shooters of the Famous Players outfit failed to appear, but A. M. Bottsford, who is one of their best, was out early.

Jules Masta BAUM brought a party over from Philadelphia including Al Boyd and J. O'Brien. Al Boyd said that he would never come over to New York if he didn't take a prize back to the Quaker City.

J. V. Ritchey of the Ritchie Lithographing Co., was disappointed. He gave the Daily's Earl Hurst the first prize, but wanted to give another one, but the offer came too late.

Harley Knoles who has been making pictures abroad, telephoned early in the afternoon that he was going to be on hand for the afternoon round, and show everybody how it was done in old England

Attached to the menu was a slip which many diners signed, indicating their desire to join the Film Golf Association. This organization which is to be formed, will hold two tournaments a year, and will also have a special winter-get together at one of the N. Y. hotels.

A telegram was received from Abe Warner of Warner Bros. who was playing yesterday at the San Gabriel Golf Club, Hollywood. For the course is 73, Warner Bros. is a score of 96. He announced he'd be missing "I'm sure Felix Feist will miss me but let him pick on somebody else."

Win, O'Hagen Hurst, of the Whitman Bennett Corporation, came all the way from Canada to play in the tournament. He turned in a fairly good score.

There was much favorable comment on the efficient way in which the tournament was conducted. Special praise went to the Prize Committee for the selection of special prizes and trophies.

Coast Stuff

Charles Christie announced yesterday that immediately upon his return from the coast, he would talk to all the film folk, the idea of having a West Coast Tournament played semi-annually on the same days when the New York tournament takes place.

Special prizes will be awarded for the best individual, club, and scores, and handicaps will be telegraphed.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Moves Style Show From Store

Elbridge, O.—H. Georncolde made the most of his opportunities during the run of “Nice People” at the Grand when he transferred the entire style show from the theater to the store. He then sent out a printed advertisement to the store to the stage of his theater every evening. The tie-up boosted business for theater and for the store.

Use Foreign Language Daily

Philadelphia, Pa.—Nine neighborhood theaters which draw from the Jewish section of the city, the Grand, Philadelphia, Jackson, Poplar, Grant, Park, Jefferson, Hippodrome and Franklin, decided to co-operate in advertising in the Yiddish World, the only Yiddish newspaper in Philadelphia, in return for publicity. The papers gave the theaters a column every day with a one column cut. On Friday the cut is two columns. The publicity is written by Eli M. Oryweit, Paramount exploiter at the Philadelphia exchange.

Taster Ad and Dolls

Springfield, Ill.—Attention was called to the man distributing dolls during the run of “The Masquerader” at the Palace, by Manager Harry Thornton, who inserted a taster ad in the dailies reading: “If you see a tall dark man of aristocratic bearing in a Prince Albert coat and top hat, please notify Harry Thornton (address).” A man dressed to fit this description distributed the dolls. The ad served to keep people on the look-out for him, and many people telephoned Thornton, who had given the man a chance to tell them about “The Masquerader.”

“Rich Men’s Wives” Boost

Philadelphia—Five pretty blondes, chosen from 200 applicants, gave a special Philadelphia a thrill when, decked in rich costume, they toured the business section on foot, disbursing chocolate as a stunt for “Rich Men’s Wives” when that picture played at the Alhine.

The girls were dressed in bright gold costumes, with flowing capes and natty knickers, carrying baskets draped in gold cloth to match their outfits. The words, “Rich Men’s Wives” appeared on the baskets, and on ribbons around the girls.

Ben Amsterdam, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, arranged with the H. O. Wilkin and Sons Co., to cooperate by donating 25,000 bars of almond chocolate which ordinarily sell at five cents apiece. These bars were wrapped in a bright yellow folder on which was imprinted “Food For Thought For Rich Men’s Wives.” Under the wrapper was placed a smaller card announcing the engagement at the Alhine. The unusual success of the stunt was evidenced by the box-office of the Alhine, where the theater management stated, the first day receipts exceeded those for any other picture at the house in eight months.

Novelty Street Ballyhoos

Pasadena, Cal.—Has had its introduction to street ballyhoos, while “The Masquerader” was playing at the Strand. The manager constructed a comic board reproduction of the cover of the book, “The Masquerader,” seven feet tall, made of castors underneath so that the pilot, who was entirely concealed, could move swiftly. At first glance the ballyhoo had every appearance of an immense Dinosaurs, thereby attracting large crowds.

Aeroplane Distributes Teasers

Milwaukee, Wis.—Manager Weisfeld of the Strand had an aeroplane distribute teaser cards reading “S.O.S. Help. They’ve got me up in the Hurricane’s Gall!” during the run of “Hurricane’s Gall.” He made sure of his publicity by sending up Miss Mamie Downer, a favorite actress for a Milwaukee paper, in the plane. She wrote a column describing a thrill a day.

The aeroplane was provided free of charge by the Curtis Co. The entire stunt cost only 60c.

Public Painting Stunt

St. Louis, Mo.—Exploitation for “Blood and Sand” playing at three theaters in the city. A central, the West End Lyric, and the Capitol Theaters, held up traffic in the center of the town every day for a week and advertised the picture to at least a quarter of a million people.

A Mike Vogel, Paramount exploiter, tied the Shapleigh Building to erect a 24-sheet stand on the second story ledge. A scaffold was built in front of it, on which stood an artist who painted signs and the portrait of Rudolph Valentino taken from a model dressed as a toreador. The artist painted a bit of each letter with the result the crowd was continually wondering what it was all about. This served to hold them to the very last minute of the demonstration.

Red Auto Brings in $100.

Mt. Vernon, Wash.—R. K. Dunham, manager of the Rex used a simple, inexpensive means of exploiting “When Romance Rides.” He took his automobile, gave it a new coat of red paint with a sign painted on white in each side and on the back. The wheels were also painted white. On the rear of the car was painted the name of the photoplay and the name of the novel from which it was adapted. The ad on each side gave the name of the theater, the date of showing, and a descriptive phrase in addition to the title.

The red automobile was driven through the city for several days and attracted much attention. Mr. Dunham considers that, from the expenditure of $9, he added a hundred dollars to his receipts for the two day showing.

New Stage for Brooklyn Strand

A new stage setting has just been completed, for the Brooklyn Strand, and will be installed in a few days. Under the new regime a larger stage will be created, and new scenic effects constructed.

They'll Like "Clarence" and Reid So Let Them Have It
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Wallace Reid's performance as Clarence is undoubtedly the best thing he has done in months and it is certainly different from anything he has done recently and a pleasant variation from the romantic roles for which he is usually cast. In the ill-fitted uniform and rimmed glasses, Wallie's admirers will have a hard time recognizing him at first but they will probably all agree that the star gives an interesting and amusing interpretation as the ex-service man. May McAvoy is very pretty and does good work and Agnes Ayres is always appealing. The entire cast is well suited and thoroughly capable.

The adaptation adheres closely to the stage version and Director De Mille has used good judgment in not attempting any elaboration upon the original. The development is smooth and the story moves at a good pace with the laughs properly distributed. Wallie's introduction is one of the best comedy bits—where he sits in Mr. Wheeler's offices and unknown to the others is the sole spectator of the family row. Later Clarence's kidnapping of Wheeler's daughter from the secretary with whom she elopes, offers a good laugh and the finale in which the governess wins his heart much to the sorrow of the other feminine admirers, is another good bit.

It is a bright, amusing picture and offers a first rate entertainment. It is not composed of weighty situations or particularly strong ones, but it makes for a genuinely amusing picture and that is all that is necessary.

Story: Clarence, an ex-service man, is employed by Mr. Wheeler for odd jobs about his home. There is general disorder in the Wheeler household with Mrs. Wheeler complaining about her husband's neglect, the daughter, Cora, planning an elopement with her father's secretary and the son, Bobby, in trouble with the maid because he kissed her. As a side line, Mrs. Wheeler is jealous of the pretty governess, Violet. How Clarence's entrance into the household changes things, will have to be seen to be appreciated.

Here is one that you will surely want to get so put it right down on your list before you forget it. "Clarence" is good entertainment and when there is one like it available don't let it get by you. You can make promises for it. Tell them "Clarence" is Wallace Reid at his best and let them know it is different from the usual Reid pictures. Do your best to get them interested and you won't regret it. It should draw a full house.

Use Booth Tarkington's name prominently and let them know that the picture is an adaptation of his stage play which ran last winter in New York. Use plenty of stills in the lobby and catchlines to let them know what the story is about. The title itself is not sufficient so you will have to use publicity means to let them know about it.
Should Bring Charles Ray Back Where He Belongs

Charles Ray in “A TAILOR-MADE MAN”
United Artists

DIRECTOR ...................... Joseph DeGrasse
AUTHOR ...................... James Henry Smith
SCENARIO BY ................ Albert Ray
CAMERAMEN ................. George Rizard and George Meenan

AS A WHOLE........... Good entertainment though it could be cut to advantage STORY............. Not worth the tremendous price paid for it, but offers good picture material especially after they get it going DIRECTION.......... At times very good but allows interest to drag through excess footage
PHOTOGRAPHY ............. All right
LIGHTINGS ................. Good
STAR........... Sure to please his admirers; works hard to make you like it SUPPORT.............. A big cast; all pretty well suited EXTERIORS............. Not many except those around docks
INTERIORS .................... Suitable
DETAIL ....................... Occasionally overdone
CHARACTER OF STORY......... Young tailor’s apprentice wins place in society and business through unusual faculty of “getting there”
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 8,469 feet

Except that it takes too long to get going, and too much is made of trifling incidents “A Tailor-Made Man” is a mighty good picture. It will probably do more to bring Charley Ray back to where he once stood than anything he has had for a very long time. It is full of good stuff after the first two or three reels, which only tend to drag the story, haven’t very much to do otherwise, and could easily be trimmed a lot. Once, however, the young pants presser gets going in social circles the picture moves splendidly to a real finish, which is heightened by a very clever chase with a lot of Doug Fairbanks thrills in it.

This picture should prove one thing to Ray and his associates—that the quicker they get to earth and use a good director, the better Ray will go. When he was directing Charles Ray wasn’t as good an actor as when someone else directed. Perhaps Joseph DeGrasse was the right man for this production. At all events, it is a big improvement in the right direction.

The start is too slow. It is very annoying. But when Charley gets going in high social circles there is a lot of good stuff. The way he handles the strike situation first with the financiers and then with the workers is also good, and the chase of the villains to get him and stop the strike going into effect is well worked up. There is a wallop at the finish when the men go back to work. The story runs a bit rough here because even if the papers did print that he was a pants presser no real ambitious man would allow that to stop him. But it works out all right, anyway. The closing clinch is shot from a new angle, for which Director DeGrasse deserves many thanks. It’s about time they got something new for the clinch.

Story: John Paul Bart, a presser in a tailor shop, aspires to greater things so he attends a fashionable party, uninvited, and manages to meet a man of great prominence, Abraham Nathan. Bart’s favorable impression wins him a responsible position with Nathan. Later, through Bart’s efforts, a great strike is averted. Then he wins further advancement and marries the tailor’s daughter.

Should Prove a Winner—Make Unusual Comparisons

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should be a winner. Ray hasn’t been going so good of late but at that this should bring him back with a wallop. The play should be well known—it was one of the best comedies of the year. Then, too, you can say that it cost $100,000 to buy the picture rights for the material. For once you will be understating something about pictures—and this is also worth thinking about. Because Goldwyn paid $105,000 for it and later sold it to Jack Pickford who in turn let it go to Ray. This is also something you can use to advantage. Make comparisons of how Jack Pickford might have done it; how Doug might have done it and how Ray does it. This is an unusual slant but it should be worth thinking about.

Ray’s admirers will surely like this one and if your crowd includes a lot of Ray fans by all means go the limit on this one. Where he hasn’t been pulling so well make your advertising extra strong. He is entitled to the come back. This one is there. Much of the play has been pictured and a lot of stuff thrown in to make it exciting. But it will get by nicely.

Use stills of Charley and Ethel Grandin. She’s pretty and cute.
Adaptation of Stage Melodrama Offers Good Thrill in Race Sequence

"THE KENTUCKY DERBY"

DIRECTION......Gives an adequate production and provides fine atmosphere for racetrack sequence

PHOTOGRAPHY ............................. Good

DETAIL ................................. Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY......Son, disowned by father, is shanghaied aboard vessel, escapes in wreck and returns in time to prevent father from losing Kentucky Derby

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..............5,398 feet

Evidently there is a big demand for this type of melodrama if you are to judge by the number of them that are on the market at present. Charles T. Dazey's stage play, "The Suburban," has been retitled "The Kentucky Derby" in the film adaptation which Universal is offering, and as melodramas go it is a good picture, will undoubtedly appeal to a good majority of picture goers and will reach the "fan" crowd particularly. They seem to hold on to this sort of hokum and like it thoroughly well.

There isn't much in the way of familiar meller hokum that they've forgotten in making "The Kentucky Derby." It includes about every situation that has ever been used with the exception of a fire—the villain, a hero and heroine, a shanghaied sequence, a shipwreck, fights, horse race and a happy ending. These are the ingredients of the plot, one that doesn't differ greatly from the many other racing pictures that have been releasing lately.

The production is a good one, however, and on a somewhat larger scale than some of the others similar to it, but the thrills are chiefly in the race in the climax. The shipwreck is poorly handled. Miniatures are used that never appear even barely realistic. The episode in which hero is shanghaied aboard a sailing vessel offers a fair enough thrill and there are a couple of good fights. Director Baggot has secured fine atmosphere for the race sequence, the scenes being shot at the last Kentucky Derby.

There are several unconvincing and illogical twists in the development, such as hero's return to civilization. You see him on a deserted island and the next shot shows him in New York with no explanation as to how he did it or how long it took. Another twist that is illogical is where a title tells you the ship when wrecked is three months off the coast of China, but for all you know it is the next day when the survivors drift toward land. Some additional sub-titles might clear up these vague bits.

Story: Donald Gordon is disowned because he married Alice Brown. Ralph Gordon, who presents himself as a cousin of the elder Gordon, wins Donald's place in the Gordon home. How Donald returns in time to convince his father that Ralph is an impostor who had him shanghaied and had planned to prevent the Colonel's horse from winning the Kentucky Derby completes the story.

Will Go Over All Right if Your Patrons Like This Type of Meller

Exhibitors who know their folks like pictures of the type represented by "The Kentucky Derby" will undoubtedly be able to do a good business with this one because it has everything in it that they want and you can make promises for the racing sequence. You shouldn't have to do very much to let them know what it is about because they all know what the Kentucky Derby is and it shouldn't be necessary to tell them anything else.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have the right crowd go in for all the exploitation which the title and subject affords and make use of whatever stunt stuff you can to advertise it and get them interested. Your ushers dressed as jockeys would be a good stunt and a jockey riding a horse about town would be a means of advertising it. It will do good business with the right crowd.

Rogers Does Fine Work In Vivid Picturization of Popular Irving Story

Will Rogers in "THE HEADLESS HORSEMAN"

STORY ........ A faithful reproduction and amusing screen material; contains fine atmosphere

DIRECTION ........ Has given story a careful production and maintains good interest despite its narrative form

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Excellent
LIGHTINGS .................. Very good
STAR ........ An amusing and convincing Ichabod Crane; will delight everybody with his work in this

SUPPORT ........ A well selected cast with Lois Meredith and Ben Hendricks Jr., all well suited types

EXTERIORS .............. Many beautiful shots
INTERIORS ................. Good
DETAIL .................... Well taken care of

CHARACTER OF STORY ......... Yankee school teacher is accused by Dutch settlers of being a doctor of witchcraft; he disappears and is not seen again

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,000 feet

C. S. Clancy’s production of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" should arouse a good deal of interest since it is one of Washington Irving’s best known works and a highly popular one. There are not many people who are not acquainted with the school teacher hero of the legend.

The adaptation follows the original closely, starting with the coming of Ichabod to Sleepy Hollow. Director Venturini has provided a splendid production. There is color and fine atmosphere to it and in spite of the narrative of it, and lack of plot, he has succeeded in sustaining the interest very well. His presentation is realistic and the pictures are just about what you imagine them to be when you read the story. The locations are very good; some of them the actual scenes identified with Irving's story. There is the old church at Sleepy Hollow and the graveyard where Ichabod used to entertain the choir between services by reading the epitaphs on the tombstones.

Detail throughout is well taken care of. The interiors are true to the period and the various types of villagers are nicely portrayed by players suited to the parts. Lois Meredith is a pretty Katrina Van Tassel although she is not the buxom coquette you might expect. Will Rogers, while not as lanky as Irving’s Ichabod, is the right one for the part. His humorous touches never fail and he makes Ichabod a likeable fellow regardless of his appetite and bad proportions. Rogers gets the most out of the role and never misses a chance for a comedy bit.

Besides careful attention to production values, among which must be mentioned the excellent photography and beautiful shots including some exquisite cloud effects, Venturini has brought out the humor of the Irving tale pleasingly. The ending, while logical, is a trifle abrupt for the screen. It is somewhat unsatisfactory to end a picture with a title.

Story: Ichabod Crane incurs the enmity of the villagers through his apparent familiarity with witchcraft. "Brom" Bones, Crane’s competitor for the hand of the wealthy Katrina Van Tassel, bribes one of Crane’s scholars to say that the teacher has bewitched him. Old Van Tassel saves Crane from being tarred and feathered. After Katrina refuses to become Mrs. Crane Ichabod is chased by the headless horseman ("Brom" Bones in disguise) and is never seen in Sleepy Hollow again.

Should Draw a Good Crowd If You Make Use of the Exploitation Afforded

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors should have very little trouble to induce their patrons to see "The Headless Horseman." Everyone is familiar with Irving's story, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and they have probably all read it whether they wanted to or not—in school. You can promise an interesting presentation of the story and a good wholesome entertainment in C. S. Clancy's production.

Be sure to let them know Will Rogers plays the role of Ichabod Crane. That should be one reason why they will want to see "The Headless Horseman." It will be a fine number for the Hallowe'en program and affords great exploitation possibilities. The feature will do nicely on any program and it should have a big field for showings in schools. The title, the star and the author’s name should be enough to let them know what to expect.

In "The Headless Horseman" you have six reels of the inimitable Rogers at his best!

Forty-eight publishers have issued this book in one form or another, and it is available in fifty-three different editions. Hundreds of thousands of copies have been sold; it is justly considered "The best known short story in the English language."

Here you have a ready-made audience that includes every man, woman and child who has ever languished with Ichabod over the charms of Katrina, or felt the goose-flesh creep at the weird and ghostly night-riding of "The Headless Horseman."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

The first three reels of "The Better Man Wins," while leading one to expect no more than the average western, with beautiful scenery, swift riding, and the average amount of fighting, still hold the attention and interest, for Dorothy Woods is pretty and the story makes no great demands on one's imagination or credulity. With the entrance of the vamp motive, however, and the hero actually deserting his sweetheart and going to the city the story is cheapened considerably.

The final scenes in which Morrison rides a horse into a cabaret to save his country sweetheart and then proceeds to fight single-handed all the patrons, throwing them into the artificial lake in the middle of the floor as he overcomes them, instead of lending dramatic value, get a laugh. And then for a finish the vamp instantaneously reforms and offers the escaping lovers her car. It is beyond belief.

Morrison works hard and tries to please but the story handicaps him in places, especially when they put titles in his mouth to the effect that, "You can have your gentleman's outfit. I'm going back to the West where a man's a man!"

Story: Bill Harrison, cowboy, is in love with Nell whose father is ill and has had to shift the burden of the ranch upon her. While touring Dick and Grace meet with a motor accident and Grace's leg is broken. She is attracted to Bill and when going East persuades him to go with her. Nell, broken-hearted over the death of her father and the loss of her sweetheart, auctions the old home and comes to the city at Dick's persuasion to work in his cabaret. Bill, discovering Grace's true self, goes back West, where a telegram from Grace informs him that Nell is in the city. Back he goes and riding into the cabaret where she is working, he carries her away.

If They Like Thrills This Will Satisfy

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors catering to the type of audience that like thrills in spite of their implausibility will make no mistake in booking this. The thrill are there. You can tell them about the fight on the cliff, the overturned machine that falls down the mountain, and the hero's ride into the cabaret on horseback. However, if they demand high-class productions, this will hardly do.

You can talk about Pete Morrison in case they like him and you can safely feature the exteriors as there are some very fine western shots. The picture could be used with another on a double feature day.

CHARACTER OF STORY.......American girl, mistaken for Princess, is held captive by Prince who falls in love with her and marries her
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,955 feet

"If I Were Queen" is the first picture starring Ethel Clayton to be released by Film Booking Offices. Ethel Clayton is always an interesting player and her personality does a lot for any picture in which she appears, but the weakness of the story in this prevents "If I Were Queen" from rising above the average line. Although the theme has not been used lately it is a quite familiar one in which an American girl falls in love with a Prince.

The situations are far-fetched and the characterization of the heroine sometimes inconsistent. She is pictured as a fearless American girl who is afraid of nothing, but when it comes to her being imprisoned by the man who loves her she seems at a loss to know what to do or how to escape even though you are given to understand that she wants to reach her destination.

Coincidence plays a prominent part in the development with the girl being rescued at the opportune moment by the man who had fallen in love with her at first sight. They never make quite clear the connection between the real Princess and the Prince who takes the American girl for a Princess. In a vague way you understand that he probably refuses to grant his permission for the Princess to wed because he believes she is the woman he loves, but it is not clearly brought out.

The settings and the star are the best features of the production. There are a number of unusually attractive sets that make the picture really good to look at. The unreal exterior shots, those of the train wreck and the flood, fail to provide thrills because they are so obviously artificial. The idea of the nun acting as a servant in the Prince's household is false and the marriage ceremony confuses with regard to just what religion is practiced in this house. You are told that the clothes the heroine wears while held a prisoner belong to the Prince's sister, but the lady never puts in an appearance.

Story: Ruth Townley, an American girl, falls in love with Valdemir, a Prince, but believing that he is in love with the Princess for whom he mistakes her, she refuses him. Eventually the real princess appears, clears the mystery and the two are happy.

Trust to Ethel Clayton Satisfying Them—Be Careful of Promises

Film Booking Offices have a good possibility in their new star because she is appealing, has personality and an ability to win her audience, but they will have to give her the right material—worthwhile stories. "If I Were Queen" is not especially well suited to her, although her admirers will not find fault because they'll undoubtedly be pleased with her appearance.

The title is a fairly good one for the box office and might do very well to bring them in if properly exploited. Give the most prominence to Ethel Clayton's name, telling them this is her first for Film Booking Offices. Don't make any promises for the story or the thrills in it. The latter are too unreal and your folks will know it. Stills of the star in the lobby will attract attention.

CHARACTER OF STORY........ Son of aristocratic Southerner runs away believing he has killed a man; returns later to find man did not die

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,465 feet

"Wolf Law" doesn't contain as much action as some of Frank Mayo's more recent offerings but for those who are satisfied with a fairly intricate plot with the hero combatting a whole army of villains, it will supply adequate entertainment. The story is slight and, if analyzed, quite unconvincing. It has to do with a fairly familiar twist in which a man disappears after a row in which he believes he has killed his opponent.

And the ending is the same. He returns and finds that the man was only wounded.

Of course there is by-plot to round it out and it is in this that most of the action occurs with hero Frank held as an involuntary member of a desperate band whose dare-devil reputation is defined only in the sub-titles. That they are as bad as the titles would have you believe, must be taken for granted, unless you are satisfied that they look the part, because they are not shown in action. In connection with sequence they do not make clear the reason why this gang is holding Rodney and his daughter as prisoners. Their position enables hero to do a bit of rescue work which is another good bit of action.

Most of the action is left to Mayo and it will please his admirers. The incident of his escape from the gang offers a mild thrill that will register with those who like this type of picture. It would have been better if Paton had shown the escape in its entirety
but probably it was best to get to the climax faster.

Mayo does good work but he deserves better material than this. Some of his previous vehicles such as
"Out of the Silent North" were much more appropriate and gave him much better opportunities. Sylvia Breamer is not an important heroine. She has little to do. The male characters are capably handled by good types.

Story: Jeff De Croteau leaves his home town after a row in which his opponent in a race accuses him of winning it falsely. Jeff believes he killed the man so disappears. Later, in hiding, he learns that he is wanted for the theft of money from his employer. He returns to clear himself of the charge. He is informed that the man did not die and that a large sum of money disappeared at the same time he did. How Jeff proves that another stole the money and cast the blame upon him completes the story.

Will Please Star's Admirers and the Average Crowd

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With Frank Mayo's admirers and the general average audience "Wolf Law" will probably receive a favorable reception. It contains enough action and plot to satisfy them and the hero stuff will go big with the right crowd. You can't promise them very much romance but there is a slight twist which gives the picture a finale, in the marriage of hero to the girl whose life he saved.

Use the title with catchlines to give them an idea of what the story is about because the title itself is not over definite. Where Mayo is popular use his name prominently and say that Sylvia Breamer is his leading lady. The usual exploitation should be sufficient and if you use trailers secure the bit showing how Mayo escapes his captors who are holding him prisoner in the hut.
Short Stuff

"The Electric House"—Buster Keaton—First National
Type of production.................................2 reel comedy
Here is a winner. Buster Keaton’s new one is a series of laughs from start to finish and then some. Besides his inimitable tombstone face he has the funniest gags in the world to help him. When the two reels come to an end you’ll wish there were more. Don’t miss this. It’s a sure bet. Buster is taking a course in botany from a correspondence school. At the graduation he secures the diploma of an electrical engineer by mistake. Through another misunderstanding the father of the girl he loves hires him to fit his home with all modern electrical appliances, while the family is away on a vacation.

The family returns and Buster displays his handiwork. There is a laugh in every move. Electrically moving stairs take them upstairs when they want to go down. An attachment on the billiard table sends the balls to the racks unassisted. A button brings the bathtub out into the bedroom. Sooner or later every single appliance works when it shouldn’t and doesn’t when it should. Finally, the fellow who got Buster’s diploma instead of his own, comes to take his revenge. Entering by a window he finds the room in which the batteries are and mixes the wires. From that point on, the picture is one howl. Through it all Buster doesn’t lose his facial expression for a minute. Finally he is ordered to go. Mournfully he ties one end of a rope to a rock and the other end around his throat and jumps into the swimming pool. But even this watery grave is denied him, for his sweetheart comes along and pulling the electric switch he has installed, lets the water escape.

Type of production.................................1 reel magazine
Beautiful and varied scenic shots form the main portion of this issue of the Pathe Review. Hy Mayer’s always interesting travelogues, this time on “Dear Old Summer Time,” make most entertaining material. Illustrations on Longfellow’s “Daybreak” come next followed by some footage showing puppies of Scotland. The colored bit dealing with the peasants and fisherfolk of Old Brittany rank favorably with the most beautiful tinted photography seen in quite a while.

"Starland Review"—F. B. O.
Type of production.................................1 reel magazine
This interesting reel contains a great variety of subject matter ranging from James Watts’ female impersonations, to Coney Island and its weird novelties including footage showing a glimpse of the Theatre Guild Production of “He Who Gets Slapped,” Taps the child drummer of “The Pin Wheel,” and Hamtree Harrington of “Strut Miss Lizzie.” The material is varied and interesting.

"The County Fair"—Urban Popular Classic—Kineto
Type of production.................................1 reel novelty Kineto offers a fairly amusing one reeler in “The County Fair,” wherein “Maw Plunkitt” describes her impressions of the big day. There are a great many sub-titles that help to furnish the laughs. The old lady’s enthusiasm about small matters and her excitement over the horse race where “Paw” gets reckless and bets two dollars will please. Some of the titles are a little too long.

"The Skipper’s Sermon"—Toonerville Comedy—Educational
Type of production.................................2 reel comedy
Here is another Toonerville comedy centering around the old trolley and its skipper originated by Fontaine Fox. The story is very slight and ambles along to its finish at a quiet pace. However the old skipper and the trolley are most amusing and the comedy will doubtless please the majority. The story deals with a slick bank robber who enters the bank and holds up the teller, locking him in the safe. Just then the bank examiner comes in and the crook takes his card, using it to introduce himself to the president of the bank. After shaking hands with the town minister who comes in with his attractive daughter, the crook decides to go straight and releases the teller, who persuades him to stay in Toonerville. Next Sunday finds the minister unable to preach and the skipper preaches the sermon, much to the enjoyment of the congregation and the audience.

"Two of a Trade"—Aesop’s Fables—Pathé
Type of production.................................1 reel cartoon
This series of cartoons is on the whole very good, and this reel is up to the usual standard. The opening scenes showing the two room apartment of Dickie Bird will hold the attention and get a laugh right at the start. Tom Cat steals Dickie Bird’s fishing worms, and in turn Farmer Alfalfa does the same. Tom Cat swims after him and diving to the ocean’s bottom puts a bottle of hooch on the farmer’s hook. The farmer drinks it and then the fun begins.

"Starland Review"—Film Booking Offices
Type of production.................................1 reel fan magazine
This interesting issue of the Review contains a wide variety of subject matter ranging from “Don,” the clever dog, to scenes from “From Morn to Midnight,” the stage play starring Frank Reicher. The material used is interesting and the different subjects do not run too long. Scenes at Coney Island complete the issue.

"Giants of the Open"—Timber Tales—Universal Type of production.................................two reel drama
This is the initial number of a new series of two reels called "Timber Tales." It deals with the activities of the forestry service. The scenery is very beautiful all the way through. Roy Stewart is starred and makes his first appearance floating unconscious down the river on a log. Being rescued by Dorothy, daughter of the foreman of the Lumber Camp, he recovers and goes to work at the camp. Taking charge of the next raft he goes down the river, he surprises and - captures a band of log pirates after a good fight on the moving logs. He then makes known his identity—that of an agent for the U. S. Forestry Service.

Type of production.................................1 reel magazine
Jimmy Syracuse, two year old baby raised entirely on raw food opens this issue very bravely, showing how he lives on raw corn, lettuce and grapes in a private park in New York City. Then William Tilden, tennis champion of the United States demonstrates some serves and strokes. A little excitement is injected in the footage showing a duel between a U. S. destroyer and an enemy submarine which is particularly good, as is the Ollendorf cartoon which closes the issue.
Highly Improbable Story Makes For Ordinary Entertainment

Milton Sills in
"THE FORGOTTEN LAW"
Max Graf Prod.—Metro

DIRECTOR .......................... James W. Horne
AUTHOR ......................... Caroline Abbott Stanley
SCENARIO BY ................. Joseph Franklin Poland
CAMERAMAN ........................ John Stumar
AS A WHOLE......Will chiefly appeal to those who do not object to highly fictitious material in their entertainment

STORY.........Artificial; seldom rings true to life
DIRECTION......Tries hard to make you believe in the situations but does not succeed

PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... All right
LIGHTINGS .............................. Good
STAR .............................. Has done much better things SUPPORT......Cleo Ridgely sincere but not the right type for role; Muriel Dana, a delightful youngster; others Alec B. Francis, Jack Mulhall

EXTERIORS .......................... Few
INTERIORS .............................. Good
DETAIL .............................. Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY......Man wills daughter to his brother by right of old law
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 6,000 feet

Where they like highly exaggerated and un lifelike stories "The Forgotten Law" will please them but the educated picture-going public will in all probabilities have plenty to find fault with "A Modern Madonna," Joseph Franklin Poland’s adaptation of Caroline Abbott Stanley’s novel. The situations almost without exception are fictitious and as artificial as the wildest imagination could conceive.

They claim that the point around which the story is built was a law actually in existence in an Eastern state—that a man might will his offspring as he would his personal effects. That in itself is unconvincing despite the title which establishes it as a fact. The situations with which the author has built up the plot seldom, if ever, ring true to life. The man who adds a codicil to his will, leaving his baby daughter to his brother, is shot. The coroner gives a verdict of accidental shooting committed by the man himself. The man’s brother believes his sister-in-law is guilty when the dying man says “she did it.” The wife herself accepts the accidental shooting theory without investigating her husband’s words.

The brother, therefore, takes the child from the heartbroken mother. Meantime the judge, a lifelong friend of the family, persuades him to give back the child to her mother. After much footage is devoted to showing the mother in her anguish and the man in possession of the child, the family friend finally decides to prove that the dead man had not been worthy of his wife. There follows some thoroughly unwholesome touches in which the man is given proof that his brother was a cad.

The death verdict is a most inconclusive bit since there were people in the room adjoining when the shot was fired. Later, in explaining how a jilted woman killed the man, they fail to clear up this discrepancy. The idea of the widow taking a strange woman into her house and nursing her during an illness is another ludicrous touch and it is also a bright bit of coincidence since it was this woman who murdered the man.

A compensating feature of "The Forgotten Law" is the appearance of a delightfully refreshing youngster Muriel Dana, who is the bright spot of the picture. Milton Sills has had so many better things to do and has done them so well, but his work doesn’t amount to very much here. The cast is adequate and the production good.

Better Be Sure They Won’t Kick Before You Decide

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you don’t think they will kick at a story as improbable and unreal as this, you are safe in playing it. If, on the other hand, you cater to folks educated to better pictures and those who want sensible, entertaining stories, you had better see the picture and make your own decision. Where they are at all critical you are likely to get some comebacks.

It should not be difficult to arouse interest in the production if Milton Sills is popular with your patrons. He is the best known of the players. The idea of a man “willing” his child to another might be a good point to work on where you want to get them in. This might attract some attention if used in catchlines or through your regular publicity channels. The theme is not one that will make the picture especially suitable for family trade.

In the Courts

A default judgment for $113,300 has been entered in the Supreme Court against Frank G. Hall, by Emanuel M. Leibowitz, who alleges that an agreement was made between Hall and Hallnaar Pictures, by which he endorsed 48 notes for $120,000 in connection with the sale of four pictures, filed in a W.P. Work, "For Love or Money," "Discarded Woman," and "Common Sin." It is alleged that $92,000 remained due on the notes and that collateral given on the notes was sold for $15,000. The judgment is for the balance due with interest.

An answer has been filed in the Supreme Court by the Clark-Cornell Corp., in a suit of Al Tra in which Clark-Cornell presents counterclaims for $40,000 damages. The answer asserts that the defendants hold twelve pictures from Smith on his representation, that they were marketable and would be worth the price charged for them, and that the defendant enlarged the defendant did not examine them. It is alleged that the films proved to be unmarketable and inferior, and no sales contract could be made for them.

MAYBE

You can figure this out. Bob Vignola. Finished Marion Davies last one. Saturday. Adam and Eva. Will tour the world. For five months. And maybe. Will return to Cosmopolitan. Just maybe. Because if you look at the 24 sheets. Maybe you’ll find his name. And maybe you won’t. About making “Knighthood.” And maybe this is the reason. And maybe it isn’t.

WORDS OF PRAISE

From Manchester, England. For the new Bruce series.

Says the Guardian (one of the most important papers in England):

“The Surprise—America has certainly sprung a surprise on us at last. When we look at ‘The One-man Reunion,’ ‘And Women Must Weep,’ and ‘Nights of Many Shadows’ grouped together under the generic title of ‘Wilderness Tales’ and produced by Robert Bruce we are forced to withdraw at least one favourite statement: that progress in the cinematic is not coming, and cannot come, from the West. These short impressionist pictures have cut away all that is inessential, all that is popularly merely pretty. We wait for the little more to spoil the beauty—America has taught us to expect that little more—and it never comes. Their incompleteness is strangely and completely satisfying. * * * America does not seem conscious herself of what she has done. * * *”

BEAUTIFUL STUFF

Beethoven’s “Moonlight Sonata.” As presented by Prizma, Rivoli last week. With special score. And piano accompaniment. What a beautiful thing it was. Got the biggest hand of all. Boosting out the feature. Inspiring. Especially if you happen. To love music. As well as pictures. One or two. Of the shots. Looked like paintings. In an art gallery. May not be the trick. For the crowd. That likes mellers. But for real. High class audience. What a feature. For any show!

TOMMY’S BROTHER

THANK YOU, HARRY

Harry Rowson. And his associates. In Ideal. Of London. Thank you all. For that production. Of “A Bill of Divorcement.” Which, without doubt, and barring all others. Is the best thing England has ever sent over. It’s a production. That any company. Here. Or anywhere. Would well be proud of. Thematically, a question. Whether it will make a great deal of money. Yet it might. Although the somber idea. May block a bit. But—and this is the point: The company releasing. The house showing; and all identified with it. Gain prestige. And something else. For bringing these worth while things. To the screen. And to the people. Again, Harry; thanks.

P. S. Make some more.

Film Delay Suit Compromised
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Oklahoma City, Okla.—The Supreme Court of Oklahoma has handed down a decision in the suit brought by W. S. Billings, of the American, Enid, holding that Billings cannot collect damages for admissions lost by the failure of a film to arrive for an advertised exhibition and also collect damages for money spent in advertising.

In the trial court Billings won a verdict for money spent in advertising and for the 3,000 admission which he claimed he lost because of the non-arrival of the film. The Supreme Court has allowed Billings $721 for the forfeited admissions, but refused to allow any claims for advertising expenses. The picture in question was Arthur Guy Empey's "Over the Top," released by Vitagraph in 1918.

Mexico City—Bernard Woodle is here as special representative of the Hays organization, conferring with high officials of the Mexican government in an effort to secure the admission to Mexico of certain American-made motion pictures which have been kept out of the country because they were felt to represent Mexican characters in an unfavorable light.

Woodle has already had a conference with Pres. Obregon and is quoted as expecting the Mexican chief executive to lift the ban soon. It is understood that Obregon told Woodle that repeated appearances of Mexican villains in American-made pictures presented harmful and false characterizations of the Mexican people. In behalf of the American producers Woodle assured Obregon that Mexicans would not be misrepresented in the future.

First National Directors So Report—Routine Business Taken Up

Directors of Assn. First National started arriving in town yesterday for the annual meeting of that organization. Practically everyone was on hand when routine matters were taken up yesterday morning, although E. V. Richards, New Orleans; Nate Gordon, Boston, and Col. It was stated that only routine affairs would be considered, and it is expected that the important work of the directors will be reached either tomorrow or Thursday.

While important officials of the organization declared there was nothing to the reports circulated as to possible changes in the personnel of the organization the reports were kept alive by the discussion. It should not be surprising if certain resignation, or changes, occurred, and there may be some changes on the Executive Committee as well.

President Robert Lieber said business was not so good in Indiana, but Sam Katz reported excellent business in Chicago, and Abe Blank said things were moving fairly well in the West.

Newspaper Opinions

"Skin Deep"—First National—
Strand

TIMES—Despite its undigested incredibility in some of the situations in which exiled Mrs. Bellow is pursued, "Skin Deep" is not uninteresting. If it were not for the occasional burlesks, one might be exasperated by the fact that you don't take it seriously.

HERALD—It is tailored to order for Miss Swanson, which means that the central character is a beautiful, vivacious and vastly overwrought lady who is incessantly misunderstood.

TRIBUNE—It ought to make a lot of money, but the audience is seen as a mass of impressionable, impressionable minds and many of its scenes, though pieces of a meaningless nature, are stimulating in a depressingly motion picture way.

WORLD—It is a film of tricks and melodrama wherein the tricks are applied in a brand new fashion and the rhythm is maintained by a tremendously energetic and melodramatic. As motion pictures go, "Skin Deep" is not a top grade effort. "Skin Deep" is tremendously real as the thing, and Miss Vidor's work as the nurse is commendable. Here is a picture too which owes a great deal of its appeal to the clever work of the director. It is an adaption.

HERALD—It is a succession of fierce thrills tied together after a fashion and presented as a continuous story. * * * Milton Sills plays the leading role in this boisterous melodrama and is making a real character of the oppressed Bud.

MORNING TELEGRAM—The film starts out with the premise that glory like beauty is only "Skin Deep," but soon loses its effect in a dramatic line. It is not connected with the underworld, some of them going about it like an underworld. Undoubtedly patrons of the cinema will find it to their taste.

AMERICAN—A capable cast, headed by Milton Sills and Florence Vidor, presents this propaganda for pulchritude.

EVE. WORLD—The picture has a real money feeling to it. Milton Sills is first rate as the underworld Cyanon. His makeup accidentally with the huge crooked nose in the first part was a triumph of illusion. And the picture is very well put on. It is definitely entertaining, although it is unusually long.

GLOBE—If you are determined to be entertained and will not struggle against inconsistencies or improbabilities the picture will undoubtedly prove enjoyable. On the other hand, if you are inclined to be exacting, I don't think you'll like it.

JOURNAL—Another of those crook plays in which scenes of the underworld furnish the background and for an hour of uninterrupted thrills. * * * The weight, and it was a heavy one, of the play was born by Milton Sills, whose performance of Bud, the reformed 'ganger', was perfect.

EVE. TELEGRAM—If you are an adherent of the finer melodrama that has been purifying the American screen, you will find good entertainment in Thomas H. Ince's production of "Skin Deep." It has a tenseness of action, logical situations, and the thrills are not manufactured or wedged into the story.

"The Impossible Mrs. Bellow"—Paramount—Rivoli

TIMES—It seems designed for the special exploitation of Gloria Swanson, who can wear clothes and look injured and be married. * * * It's well photographed, too; its settings are fine, as the characters are to be, and its marionettes wear the clothes and make the gestures expected of them.

HERALD—This is a beautifully photographed film, which, though it expresses varying emotions, part of them in close-ups, a sinister and gripping wrap. No film drama, it is true, nix.

MORNING TELEGRAM—An excellent vehicle for Miss Swanson. The film is to be seen.

DAILY NEWS—On the strength of the costume pictures and also because we know nothing, we pass this picture along to the ladies. There is a lot of pretty movie revelry in it, if you like them.

M. P. T. O. Franchise
St. Louis Exhibitors Ask Separate Organization Covering Eastern

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. Louis, Mo.—Exhibitors of St. Louis and the Eastern section of Missouri, who are members of the M. P. T. O., are awaiting action on their request for a separate franchise which has been promised consideration by Sydney S. Cohen.

Cohen stopped here on his way to New York from the Missouri convention at Excelsior Springs and addressed a meeting of the St. Louis body.

Under the plan said to have been approved by Cohen, Missouri would have two distinct M. P. T. O. organizations; one in St. Louis and one in Kansas City. The Eastern Missouri claim that, with the headquarters of the state organization in Kansas City, it takes too much time to get action on complaints.

"There will be no friction between the two organizations if the second charter is granted," said Jos. Mogler, a vice-president of the local body.

"If arrangements can be made with the Chicago headquarters of the Illinois M. P. T. O., Southern Illinois may also be included in the St. Louis district, while Eastern Missouri may be added to the Kansas City territory."

Sydney Cohen could not be reached for a statement yesterday.

One Exciting Night—Griffith at Apollo

TUESDAY—Clouéd figures steal about, murderers are committed, frightened women run and scream, while armed men rush out from secret passages and two terrified negroes are always trying to escape from it all. When the storm is over at the end there is a storm. This is the opening scene of the film, and it is a magnificent piece of work. Griffith has returned beyond his ice scene in "Way Down East." In his next a thrilling thing is going to watch. It would be if there were no story attached to the picture to give a whirling, whirring end.

WORLD—The plot of the film that has a speaking interest with the ''Bat'' possesses all the mechanics, and all the characteristics go to make mystery thrillers and despite this equipment the picture is teneous and weak, and runs a great risk of the audience there is anything about this picture that is worth while it is the storm.

HERALD—Griffith has connected a slapstick farce which is well worthy of Mack Sennett at his best. "One Exciting Night" is very much on the order of "Bulldog Drummond." It is a mystery melodrama, so elaborately developed and entwined that even the casual spectator never quite knows what is going on, and at a time with Mr. Griffith. Just when the action begins to terrify the audience, it is restrained with a smile patrimonied in self defense, Mr. Griffith in and out with characters over the line which separates ham melodrama from the screen, and the audience suddenly realizes that it is not amused. "One Exciting Night" is in reality a pot boiler, and a very successful at that. It will do well in the box office wherever it goes.

AMERICAN—There is a storm, or rather a violent thunder, in this new screen production which is indescribably dramatic. * * * He (Griffith) shows here what he is able to construct a thrilling and harrowing technical skill as skillfully as he can build an epic of history.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—For sheer blood curdling inventiveness, it is going to snatch a lot of royalties away from Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart and put them into the film industry. If there is one single spinster-dog or goose flesh inducer that Pickford, Doyle, Jack Boyle and the other mystery spinners have gashed out, a picture like "One Exciting Night" will probably be as great a money maker as Griffith ever released.

GLOBE—Griffith, all things being carefully considered, is the world's greatest producer of motion pictures; there is no doubt about that. This new film is not as outstanding a production as others; however, hardly be proven by "One Exciting Night." In no time during the action does the picture impress one as real. Yet it has everything Figuring how it is all going to come out, and judging by last eight nights, this is the third thing of it is really better entertainment than anything to say a lot of alleged realism. In addition, Griffith has in the picture a supposedly fancy hit which was unreasonably received by the first nighter. The same scene which comes as the climax of the second act, is the directorial genius at his best.

SUN—This new product of the man who has been called the master of the screen is a mystery play in the manner of Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart. It's just as exciting as the "Bat," the "Cat and the Canary," and other late terror wrecks which have held the American stage in recent years. It is a comedy drama, and at the same time a mystery, because the continuity is full of deception. In fact, this is its chief charm. * * * We have seen numerous mystery dramas, but Griffith's offering is eminently superior to anything of the sort that the American screen has known. Throughout the story, the director's art is evident, most tellingly evident. There are tense moments when one's heart just cannot last another yard and a quick change of comedy that cements the theater. If you do not die of fright you will laugh yourself to death.

EVE TELEGRAM—A mystery drama, just enough to relieve a tense situation when the plot begins to thicken. While Mr. Griffith has departed from the heavy and spectacular, he has produced a picture that will live among the immortals of the silver screen. It is one of the best photographs ever shown and has a well-balanced cast of characters which is headed by Miss Carol Dempster who shares the honors with Henry Hull. The producer has left nothing undone to make the "One Exciting Night" a real thriller. Spooky hands, secret panels, shadows and darting figures all have their play, while Peter Strong and Miss Harrison, playing servants, are humorous throughout. The identity of the mysterious villain becomes known is a storm scene, which is about as realistic ever produced on the screen.

EVE WORLD—"One Exciting Night" is emphatically not the best thing he (Griffith) has ever done but it will probably prove one of the best money getters. After all, that is not enough for a picture. There is no lavish display, no melba, no "over- the-top" scenes in fact, "One Exciting Night" is not even advertised as "$1,000,- 000 picture." But it's mighty good entertainment.

England Happenings

More west end theaters go over to pictures every day, and one of the oldest music halls in this country, the Holborn Empire, is definitely taking to pictures on Monday. Their first attraction is "Where Is My Wonderful Boy Tonight," a sub-stuff drama from America.

English companies are turning out a remarkable number of good pictures. Soots has completed "The Prodigal Son," a big dramatization of Sir Hall Caine's well known work, while the British & Colonial Kinematographe Co. have begun a really remarkable series of History films. The greatest attention has been paid to "Frederick," with the result that these films are historically accurate and make very acceptable showing propositions.

Business on the stage is brisk with exhibitors, and there is every sign that this winter will be one of exceptional prosperity.

Some theaters are shortly going up. One big building has already been commenced on the Tivoli site in the Strand, which is the most populous square in the world. This building will hold 3,000 when completed and will have a great ball room and restaurant. Another theater has been opened in the outskirts of London, holding over 3,000, with tea rooms in addition, whilst many other important cinemas are in the course of erection.

Neilan Busy
He Will Film "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "The Rear Car"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Culver City, Calif.—Marshall Neilan has three pictures in view to produce in association with Goldwyn as soon as he finishes cutting and titling his first production for Goldwyn, "The Strangers' Banquet," by Donn Byrne. Neilan's second and third coming features will be Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "The Rear Car," by Edward Rose, now in its twelfth week on the speaking stage in Los Angeles.

Because of the vast amount of research and preparation necessary for "Tess," Neilan will produce one other picture, not yet chosen, before he starts work on the Hardy story.

"Tess of the D'Urbervilles" will be filmed in England and at the Goldwyn studios here. Neilan has already sent Frank Urson, staff director, and David Kessner, cameraman, to England to take some of the scenes for "Tess." They sailed from New York on the Berengaria with other members of the company. The scenario of "Tess" is by Dorothy Farnum.

"Tess of the D'Urbervilles" has already been filmed. It was the second production made Famous Players. At that time Mrs. Fiske played the title role.

"The Rear Car" is a mystery melodrama. When first produced in Los Angeles, Richard Bennett was star in the leading role as a crime detective with a sense of humor.

What They Want

Cohen, After Trip, Says Exhibitors Seek Honest Information and Chance to Play Bigger Pictures

The chief anxiety of exhibitors all over the country is to learn the truth about coming pictures and a chance to play the bigger pictures at a price which will show a profit, according to the analysis of theater conditions made by Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the American Theatre Owners of America, who has just returned from a four-weeks tour carried him as far West as Kansas City, Mo.

"Everywhere we visited," says Cohen, "we found exhibitors keenly desirous for honest information about the merits of pictures, both in advertising and in reviews, and for practical suggestions of real exploitation and presentation of advertising matter to the public."

"They want an opportunity to play the bigger pictures at a price which they can afford to pay and secure a proper return on their investment, and the arduous labor connected with the operation of their theaters. They found, in many instances, that they were refused the right to play these pictures, or that the pictures were placed out of their reach by high prices.

"Theater owners, thus treated, expressed the conviction that this process, which kept these bigger pictures away from them, was a gross injustice to them as they had popularized the names appearing in the pictures. Also, the products of the companies involved."

"We found a growing appreciation of the value of the theater as a community center on the part of leading ladies in all the towns we visited.

"The State conventions in Flint, Mich., and Excelsior Springs, Mo., were especially well attended, and the big meetings of theater owners in Chicago, Kansas City, Milwaukee and St. Louis."

"Theater owners highly commend the activities of the A. T. O. A. and definite plans were made for the extension of the public service work of the organization. This direct contact with the public and co-operation with the people in advancing community interests, we believe will operate to the mutual advantage of all concerned."

Cohen added that general opinion favored opening a separate franchise to the exhibitors of St. Louis and the Eastern section of Missouri.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Red Type Front Page Extra

Troy, N. Y.—When the Lincoln was in play ”The Masquerader,” it was learned at the last minute that a rival theater was playing up an opposition attraction with display ads. It was then learned that a regular ad in the Troy Record, then going to press, but arrangements were made to have several thousand copies run over with the ad “The Masquerader will appear at the Lincoln theater today,” printed across the first page in red type. The last minute ad saved the day.

Accident Stunt Starts

Peoria, Ill.—Bill Danziger, Paramount exploiter, got Peoria an ex¬
cluse over the run of “Masquerader” at Asher’s Palace by tying down in the street and letting an auto run into him. The take accident always attracted attention. As the crowd gathered each time, Danziger got up and delivered a lecture on reckless driving.

“This is the way the accident happened in “Masquerader,” he said. You can see it for yourself at the Palace.”

A Peoria daily ran a three-column cut of the stunt.

Distributed 20,000 Copies

Louisville, Ky.—The Mary Anderson being the first house to show “The Eternal Flame,” Manager George A. Sine made copies of a telegram, apparently from the coast, announcing that fact. A tie-up was affected with the Postal Telegraph to handle the wire, and 20,000 copies were mimeographed. These were distributed around stores and in the theater lobby, and as a matter of civic pride, the newspapers reproduced it.

Two large candies placed in the lobby made an interesting display and in addition there were other aids used in a well-rounded campaign.

Several Stunts for “Suzanna”

An extensive exploitation campaign has been launched by E. M. Asher, of Mack Sennett Productions, in conjunction with Mabel Normand’s latest picture, “Suzanna.”

Asher secured the co-operation of the Columbia Record people, by tying-up Columbia’s latest dance success, “Suzanna” with the picture. The star’s portrait with an announcement of the picture, was pasted on the reverse side of the dance music.

Several hundred of these records were distributed throughout the film industry. A portrait of Mabel was also put on the front cover of the sheet music, published and released by M. Witmark and Sons of the city.

The Showell Mfg. Co., well known candy makers, inserted different scenes of the picture in the “Suzanna Bar,” a chocolate confection, placed on the market during the release of the Sennett production.

Unique Police Lobby Display

Philadelphia, Pa.—With the aid of the police department, the Victoria showed a unique lobby display during the run of “In the Name of the Law.”

Handcuffs, leg irons and weapons taken from notorious criminals were hung on a folding screen. Various identification cards and advertisements for the arrest of criminals completed the display.

Tie-up with book dealer

Philadelphia, Pa.—A tie-up with a leading book dealer was the exploitation feature during the run of “Monte Cristo” at the Stanton. The stunt consisted of joint newspaper advertisements of the work of Alexandre Dumas and the pictured version of “Monte Cristo.” A neat arrangement of stills, lobby water-colors and council work was shown in the theater lobby. Placards advised readers both to buy the books and see the picture.

Bakers and Laundry Aid

Dallas, Tex.—When “Monte Cristo” played at the Washington, arrangements were made with the leading local baking concern and laundry whereby each loaf of bread and package of laundry contained a slip bearing a “Monte Cristo” message.

The slips issued by the bakery read:

“Best Food For Body—Butter Krust Bread.”

“Best Food For Thought and Pleasure—Monte Cristo—the mighty drama of the hour at the Washington theater.”

More than 60,000 of these announcements reached Dallas homes. The cost of the campaign was simply the printer’s bill for the slips.

Stages Girls Track Meet

Newark, N. J.—D. J. Shephard, manager, directed at the Cranford, gained free publicity for two weeks in the sporting pages of the Newark papers. A girls track meet was tied up with the showing of “The Eternal Flame” and Norma pearls were the prizes awarded instead of medals; no sooner had the idea of a girls athletic meet been formulated than the Star-Eagle sponsored the campaign.

With more than two hundred ent-trants, including Camelia Sabie holder of two world’s records there was enough news to fill the sporting pages several times. On the day of the meet the Star-Eagle gave the attraction: the whole front page, naming all the entrants, and the fact that Anita Stewart made a personal appearance at the Cranford when the awards were made added many more lines to the story. The paper also spoke glowingly of the co-operation of the theater folks in the putting up of the meet, mentioning the Cranford Theater exclusively. Shephard obtained bundles of publicity that, in ordinary courses of commerce, could not have been bought at any price.

Three Capacity Weeks on Broadway

at the Rivoli, Rialto and Broadway

Scheduled for one week at the Rivoli, this vivid, thrilling melodrama was so enthusiastically received that, after packing the house there it moved down to the Rialto and there repeated its success. Then another record-breaking week at the Broadway. "A Nick Carter story in a Tiffany setting" one paper called it. It's the most vital, engrossing, mystifying, tense and fascinating photoplay ever filmed. It's to the screen what "The Bat" is to the stage.

"We are not going to tell you a thing about the story. It's too good to tamper with," says Harriette Underhill, in the New York Tribune.

We'll tell you, however, that it is Jack Boyle's greatest "Boston Blackie" story faultlessly acted by a cast of stars, wonderfully produced, with the greatest fight ever staged and filled with action from the first reel to the final fadeout.

Swift Mysteriously Says “There Is Nothing to Say”

“Tod Swift, general manager of the A. B. C. Booking Corp. (the local booking organization of members of the O. C. C.), was very mysterious yesterday. A report was published in a theatrical paper carrying a big head that the A. B. C. had hired “Tess,” the Pickford feature, for its fall line.

When Hiram Abrams was asked relative to the report he declared it was untrue, and added that A. B. C. had booked no product of the United Artists.

When Swift was questioned relative to the matter he said that there was nothing to be said at this time, and then informed that his answer left a question in doubt as to whether A. B. C. had “Tess,” he said he would say nothing else at this time, dinging that when there was something to be said he would issue the statement. When informed that his swer left the impression that some right believe his organization had “Tess,” regardless of Abrams statement he said he could not help that.

Gross Income and Subsidiaries Show $2,267,871 Profit

Full figures of the financial statement of Loew’s, Inc., and its 100% owned subsidiary companies for the fiscal year ended Aug. 31st, show an operating profit of $2,267,871 as against $1,800,550 in the previous year. Total current and working assets are listed at $5,854,732. Profit and loss surplus on Aug. 31st was $545,997 as compared with $100,413 on Aug. 31st, 1921.

The statement follows:

Coogan’s “Oliver Twist” Shown
Jackie Coogan’s “Oliver Twist” was shown yesterday to critics of the trade press and the metropolitan newspapers at Wurlitzer Hall following a luncheon at the Knickerbocker grill, as it is expected that attendance at the Strand next week will make it hard to take care of the reviewers properly.

An added feature was 500 feet of old “Oliver Twist” production with Marie Doro and Nat Goodwin. James Young, who directed Marie Doro in another “Oliver Twist,” for Lasky was among the spectators.

An Important Event
A daughter, Jane Constance Loew, was born Thursday night at the Knickerbocker Hospital, to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Loew. Mrs. Loew is the daughter of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players, and Loew is the son of Marcus Loew.

The Statement
“Mr. J. D. Williams has found it advisable, in view of his plans for the future, to resign as manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the Directors of First National have regretfully accepted his resignation.

“Mr. Williams’ association with First National, as manager from the time of its organization, and his prominence in the starting of this company, as well as in the motion picture industry generally, are so well known that little need or can be said.

“Mr. Williams leaves the office of manager of First National with the best wishes and kind regards of all of his former associates. It is probable that Mr. Williams will take a considerable vacation before announcing his further plans.

“Mr. Richard A. Rowland, who has been associated with Mr. H. O. Schwabhe and Mr. Williams for the last six months in directing the affairs of First National, has been appointed by the Board of Directors, General Manager of First National.”

From all indications, everything will continue as heretofore at First National. There have been many “wild” rumors and reports circulated. They have included everything imaginable, and some that were not.

There have been reports of First National buying studios and entering production on a huge scale. There have been reports of resignations of various members of both the directorate and also the Executive Committee. There have been reports of other officials holding important posts resigning. You could hear most any-ing, but the statement clarifies the situation considerably.

William Future

While it was impossible to secure any statement from J. D. Williams about his future plans, it has been understood in some circles that he will either enter production, or may start in the distribution field.
In fact, it is not far from the mark to say that he has been connected with a large company now in operation. From Wall Street reports we have "leaked out" that Williams concluded a deal with the organitation of important stars and handling the sales end of their business.

Williams, who was treated very liberally by the directors on his resignation, and it is said that he was voted a full year's salary. He also owns a 20 per cent interest in the New York First National franchise which will doubtless be taken over by his former associates, and this will probably net him a neat sum.

Within the Organization

The air of unrest that has permeated the home office in the past few weeks has set at rest yesterday. All of the heads of the various departments were informed by President Robert Lieber that so long as their work proved satisfactory they would cheerfully be retained, and he hoped that they would remain with the organization for a long time to come. There are several important posts filled by men brought into the organization by Williams, and there has naturally been much interest as to what would occur in these quarters in view of Williams' resignation.

The Feeling Towards Williams

J. D. Williams was one of the sponsors and orignial promoters of the idea upon which First National developed. Coming from Australia with an idea of big co-operative movement between producers and exhibitors, the details were finally worked out up until the present highly successful system. Today is one of the most important organizations in the industry.

None of the original franchise holdings are of the type to admit the value that "Jim" Williams has been to the organization. Indeed, in view of the political conditions which developed within the organization during the past few years, those who have favored Williams have done so as much because of his responsibility for the idea and growth of the property, as for any other cause.

And among those who have fought him the hardest, it is said that when Williams' resignation finally reached the directors, several of these men were overwhelmed with emotion and found difficult to divorce Williams from First National; this, despite that they had agreed that his resignation was for the best.

it was said at the T. O. C. C. offices, the two managements competed against

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"
Griffith Prod.

DIRECTOR .................. David W. Griffith
AUTHOR ...................... Irene Sinclair
SCENARIO BY ................. Irene Sinclair
CAMERAMAN .................. Hendrik Sartov
AS A WHOLE..... Good hokum; creepy mystery stuff with comedy well interjected, and big storm episode

STORY...... All about an African heiress mixed up with boot-leggers, loot, creepy hands, and spooky stuff

DIRECTION...... Good enough, but Griffith wastes his tremendous talents

PHOTOGRAPHY...... Uneven; some shots not up to Griffith's standard

LIGHTINGS...... Fair; at times smoke from carbons can plainly be seen at the edges

PLAYERS ...... Carol Dempster charming and cute as the heroine; Henry Hull fairly satisfactory, but Porter Strong as the colored Romeo carries off chief honors; others unimportant

EXTERIORS ............... Satisfactory
INTERIORS .................. Good
DETAIL ...................... Well handled

CHARACTER OF STORY..... The first real good mystery photo comedy drama shown in years

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........... 11,005 feet

A long time ago, back in the old days of the Bio-graph, when he was "Larry" Griffith, and not "D. W."
the accepted grand master of screen art, he might have made this one easily enough, and it would have been accepted without one-tenth of the criticism which naturally will come today.

This isn’t to say that "One Exciting Night" isn’t a good box-office because it is. As a matter of cold dollars and cents, this possesses a tremendous lot of box-office value. It has all of the tried and true mystery hokum. It is piled on in gobs, slabs, and extra slabs. There is everything from creepy hands with long fingers that mysteriously grope at nothing, to doors opening by trick buttons; moving book-cases, door-knobs, twisting from unseen hands, and all of the other sure-fire motives.

In addition, the musical department of the Griffith organization has thrown together a squeaky fiendish nerve tingling score, and a lot of people who laughed at the opening, did not realize that half of their laughter was due to sheer nervous tension.

Never in his long experience as a showman has Griffith played so definitely on an audience as he does in this mystery comedy drama. He not only pulls the strings of the marionettes in his cast, but reaches out far beyond the foot lights and miles away from the camera, and handles his audience with that certainty and sureness that has made him what he is today, the greatest showman producing pictures, in the world.

There is a mystery story and a lot of other stories in "One Exciting Night," and there is comedy galore.
It is hard to tell whether D. W. is laughing with or laughing at what he produces, but all in all, while this lacks many of the features which one expects or rather demands of Griffith, he has certainly put over a sure-fire box-office success.

A word in passing of the storm. It is not as effective nor as well handled as the "ice jam" in
"Way Down East," but it is very, very good indeed, especially that part showing the heroine directly in the way of a falling tree. The suspense at this point is excellent. Carol Dempster is cute and charming as the heroine, and Henry Hull has quite a likeable personality on the screen. Porter Strong was proba-ably the truest of all characters as the colored Romeo, although Morgan Wallace as the villain is fair. Others have little to do.

Tell Them Griffith Has Made a Great Mystery Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should be a clean-up. First, you have Griffith’s name to work with, in what is probably the best of all his "low-brow" pictures. Then you have a mystery story, and mystery stories have always been good and probably always will be. After this production gets through with a few pre-release showings at top prices in several of the larger cities, you will probably get it from Griffith’s distributing organization, United Artists.

One of the points you should carry out is that which Griffith uses effectively on his own programs.

He prints a line saying: "Please do not reveal the plot to those who have not seen it." This is very good stuff because it will naturally be betrayed by some people. Others, however, will bear out the suggestion and refuse to tell what they have seen, and this will add to the mysteriousness.

You can surely use some of the stills of the hurricane-storm to advantage, and this with the creepy hands and other usual accessories for a mystery production, should be sufficient to put this over in good shape.

"Dr. Jack" is the greatest comedy ever made.

But it is more than a comedy.

It not only arouses tidal waves of laughter but it sounds the depths of the human soul in the intensity of its pathos. The genius that conceived and created the picture realized that laughter is the greatest when it follows upon emotion; that pathos is sublime when it is preceded by laughter.
"Dr. Jack" is a triumph for Harold Lloyd; for Hal Roach; for the unique and wonderful staff that collaborated in its making. It is no less a triumph for the entire motion picture industry, for it shows the greatness of the motion picture.
There can be only one "greatest."
The public has determined, by its laughter and its dollars, its enthusiasm and its praise, the greatest box-office star before the public today. Phenomenal and unprecedented runs upon his recent pictures, ranging from three to nineteen weeks in the largest cities, with doubled and tripled time in the smaller, with attendance record after attendance record smashed with bewildering frequency, prove that there is but one greatest star—Harold Lloyd. He, the greatest star, is now presented in his latest and greatest picture—a feature—"Dr. Jack."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... About 6,800 feet

This looks like money in the box-office. It is true that there are several slip-ups in the production, notably that Director Kenneth Webb has failed to have his characters indicate that there has been a lapse of from 10 to 18 years, and the king might have had a much larger crowd at his wedding. Some of the titles could be improved as well, but despite these minor defects, the theme of the story is such that with the generally capable cast, a fairly satisfying production results, and it should get money because it is the type of story that appeals generally.

The theme is based upon Eugene Sue's famous old novel, the "Secrets of Paris," which in its day was one of the greatest sellers that publishers ever knew, and many years after it was also in great demand. The title is alluring, and will attract. If Paris had all the secrets that American picture fans think it has, it would be a terrible place in which to live. In fact, it isn't, but the average American audience likes to think that it is full of intrigue and mystery, and a lot of sinuous women who make love to everybody.

The producer has thrown a very satisfying atmosphere around the wine cellar, but none of the types appear the least bit French; excepting "Buster" Collier, although Dolores Cassinelli does resemble a French woman. But for the rest, they are sadly out of focus. Montagu Love is hardly the type for the French crook schoolmaster. Rose Coghlan's make-up is fair.

The production, however, will hold and will appeal, because it not only tells a tremendously interesting story, but there are fights galore, kidnapping, and finally the big thrill when the heroine and her royal lover, Lew Cody, are hurled into the dungeon under the cellar, and the waters of the Seine are turned upon these captives. They are finally rescued, soaked and drenched, and then comes the inevitable clinch and it's all over. Lew Cody hasn't a great deal to do as the king, but he does it well enough. He also has one real good scrap.

Stick to Your Title. It Is Your Best Bet

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The title is your best bet. Play up "Secrets of Paris" every way you can. Don't be afraid of electricity, and the bigger the type on the 24 sheets the more you are going to invite their curiosity. The chances are that many of your patrons will think they are going to see something entirely different, but when they get in they are going to be satisfied, and they are going to see a corking good melodrama well handled and a generally satisfying cast.

In addition, you have excellent names that should have box office value. Lew Cody surely has a following. Little Gladys Hulette is very sweet. The old timers must remember Rose Coghlan, and in addition you have Barney Sherry and the others whose names are found above. Do not overlook William Collier, Jr., otherwise known as "Buster," the son of the famous comedian and undeniably outstanding over all others in this picture.

If you think your people know Eugene Sue's famous story, remind them of the fact that this is based upon that famous old novel. Catch lines and teasers can effectively be used with this alluring title.

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Girl is placed in sanitarium by her ward who then proceeds to steal her property; she escapes, again secures her property and falls in love

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......About 6,000 feet

This latest William Christy Cabanne production contains the sort of material that will appeal to a large majority of picture audiences. Its situations are varied and include the sort most popular with the average audience. There are thrills, romance, some dramatic twists and a plot that holds the attention pretty well all the way through. Cabanne has succeeded in sustaining the interest throughout and in view of the complications it is especially comprehensive and easy to follow.

The picture has been well cast and includes some popular film players. Mae Marsh is always an appealing and winsome heroine. As the young girl who is imprisoned in a sanitarium by her ward who seeks to gain control of her property, she is convincing and sincere in her work. J. Barney Sherry is the only miscast member. He is not exactly the right type of villain. Martha Mansfield and Norman Kerry haven’t a great deal to do while Walter Miller will please as the leader of the band of crooks. Others in the cast are Tammany Young, who contributes some comedy touches, Dan Hayes, Dick Lee and Cyril Chadwick.

The story is made up of pretty fair situations as far as their suitability to screen purposes, is concerned. It is the sort of thing that many like even though it is rather improbable and obviously manufactured. There is only one twist, however, that is noticeably unreal. It is where the girl, after escaping from the sanitarium in which she is virtually held a prisoner, becomes housekeeper for some men who live in a deserted house in the woods. Just why a girl of her apparent intelligence should take such a risk and, on the other hand, fails to communicate with her friends, even though she feared her guardian, is not conclusive.

The thrills are somewhat mild but will get over with the right crowd. The girl’s escape from the sanitarium, the fight at the inn and the summoning of the police by radio are the most important. The romance comes in the protection and love of the brother of the girl’s friend and the dramatic bits in the accusation against her guardian.

Story: Montrose handles the business affairs of the wealthy Mrs. Carter as well as those of his ward, Marion Bates, whom he secludes in a sanitarium in order to secure control of her fortune. Marion escapes and seeks refuge with some crooks. Later she reaches the Carter home where she falls in love with Bob Carter who eventually shows up the illicit dealings of Montrose.

If They Like a Combination of Romance, Thrills, Etc., Take It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A good many exhibitors will be able to do a good business with “Till We Meet Again” because it contains good audience appeal and it is the sort of picture that goes very well with a good majority of picturegoers, the “regulars” in particular. They like the combination of situations and the variety of entertainment elements that it offers such as romance, thrills, etc. If you know that is what they want, you are safe on this one.

Mae Marsh is well liked and you can use her name prominently as well as William Christy Cabanne’s. Use catchlines with the title to let them know what it is about and you might attract considerable attention by announcing the part played by the radio in calling the police. The popularity of the radio at present should easily attract them.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....About 5,000 feet

Richard Talmadge hasn't very good story material in this one and if it were not for the stunts contributed by the star the picture would be a very tame affair.
As it is "Wildcat Jordan" is not nearly as exciting as the title might indicate. The director seems to have been at a loss for action and every time he thought it was about time to speed things up, he has Talmadge perform one of his spectacular leaps. This is very good at first but after a while you tire of seeing the star leaping all over the place despite the fact that he probably risks his neck at every jump.

They had a pretty fair idea in the fake initiation which hero's business associates stage for his benefit, but they spoil the effect of it considerably by keeping it up too long. The idea is not altogether original but it serves for a mild enough comedy sequence with hero dodging an army of ready-made ghosts in a supposedly haunted house. In the beginning the effect is good and it gives Talmadge plenty to do in protecting himself from the onslaught. His acrobatic stunts will probably please a good many. He makes some spectacular entrances and exits and there are a few rather exciting scraps, the one in the speeding auto particularly.

The director provides an ordinary production on the whole. The settings are all right but there is not enough variation and the cameraman shoots the same set always from the same angle. The supporting cast is adequate but not important for the performances contributed. Harry Von Meter overacts as the villain and is given too many close-ups. Talmadge is all right on stunt stuff but he cannot handle the straight acting bits convincingly.

Story: "Wildcat" Jordan arrives in town to sell his ranch. Gale and his crowd think that if they show Jordan an exciting time he'll be willing to meet their terms. They introduce Jordan to Miss Grant and later stage a kidnapping so that Jordan will follow to a deserted house where the Gale crowd has prepared excitement in the way of an initiation. Jordan gets into the house and starts searching for Miss Grant. He is visited with various ghost signs until he finally discovers that the "ghosts" are being played by Gale and his crowd. How Jordan turns the tables on the players and wins Miss Grant's hand completes the story.

Won't Do If Your Patrons Are At All Particular

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A none too critical audience or probably one composed chiefly of men and boys will be fairly well satisished with "Wildcat Jordan" in view of the stunts provided by the star and the fights presented. But if you cater to a particular crowd that wants good stories and pictures that offer original entertainment, don't depend upon "Wildcat Jordan" to fill the bill because you are likely to hear complaints.

If it happens that the star has gained a following with the preceding pictures in which he has appeared, probably it will get over. If you want to exploit the ghost sequence you might be able to attract them easily enough but don't make promises for anything outside of the stunts offered by the star because the feature won't bear you out.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Innocent woman is divorced by her husband and bereft of her son but later finds happiness with young author who loves her

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 7,155 feet

This is undoubtedly the poorest picture that Gloria Swanson has appeared in, in some time, due chiefly to the very weak and uninteresting story that has been selected for her. “The Impossible Mrs. Bellew” does not offer good screen entertainment. Probably it made a sensation as a novel but it is obvious that the situations which apparently made it so, have either been eliminated or toned down by the censor. The story quite evidently has been revised to meet requirements and the heroine’s deep love for her little son is what saves her at all times and tries for your sympathy.

Is Unintentionally Well Named

It isn’t likely, however, that sympathy for Mrs. Bellew will be far-reaching and the only extension of regret will be to those who saw possible screen entertainment in such impossible situations as those in “The Impossible Mrs. Bellew.” The plot is a succession of unconvincing and uninteresting situations evolving from a divorce in which Mr. Bellew is granted the custody of the child. Previous to this Bellew killed his friend in a fit of jealousy following a quarrel in which Bellew accuses his wife of being unfaithful. At the time Bellew is still under the influence of liquor served to him by the “lady” aspiring to fill the place of Mrs. Bellew, No. 2. Mrs. Bellew’s silence during the trial wins an acquittal through an “accidental shooting” verdict.

How the devoted mother sacrifices the boy, when they take him from her as she is smuggling him off to Europe, is another bid for sympathy and also another unconvincing touch. The remainder consists of an uninteresting series of events in which Mrs. Bellew indulges in a life of frivolity in Europe to overcome her grief but is rescued by a young novelist who loves her because she is “good” and who “knows a lot about books but little about life.” Of course there are shadows that threaten this happiness but Mr. Bellew’s aunt arrives in time to prove that Mrs. Bellew is really good and that she saved her husband’s life.

Director Sam Wood did what he could with “The Impossible Mrs. Bellew” but his efforts were considerably hindered by what he had to work with. The sub-titles are very poor and although there are several well known and capable players in support of the star they have roles that do not get them very far. Gloria Swanson could not be very human in a part such as Mrs. Bellew. Occasionally she is photographed poorly. Her gowns, usually extreme with the exception of sport costumes, will undoubtedly appeal to the women.

Even Star’s Admirers Will Have To Be Taken Into Consideration

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless you are quite sure that Gloria Swanson is popular enough to get the picture over regardless of whether or not they are satisfied with the story, you can hardly promise them very much in “The Impossible Mrs. Bellew.” And it will have to be a mighty faithful following who will be pleased with the picture no matter how much they may admire its star.

You know best how hard or how easy it is to satisfy your particular clientele. If you are at all in doubt see “The Impossible Mrs. Bellew” for yourself. Probably your women folks will like to see the star’s gowns. She wears quite a variety in this. Don’t misrepresent the story by using a trailer showing the wild orgies of a French fete because they are going to be disappointed if they expect any further sensation.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,300 feet

As the under-sea camera catches the varying beautiful scenic effects, with lace-like plants and waving trees growing at the bottom of the sea; with myriads of fish of various sizes apparently swimming directly in front of the camera, attention is held to a far greater extent than many of the so-called features do. It is all very absorbing; very interesting, and when to this there are added the thrills which come towards the very conclusion, it makes as a whole, a mighty well balanced worth while production of its own individual type.

The thrills come first when Williamson and "Jack" spear a poisonous animal, and a second later, one of them treads upon one of the tentacles of an octopus.
There is a real thrill when you see one of these men trying to pull the other from the hole in which his leg is being sucked deeper and deeper. Finally when this is accomplished, and with his weights cast off, he hurriedly rises to the surface of the sea, there was an audible sigh of relief from the Rivoli audience. A moment later the sea was clouded with an inky substance thrown off by the octopus as a means of camouflage. Through this inky blackness, "Jack" makes his way to the surface to be rescued by his comrades.
There was real applause sweeping through the audience at this point. Later there was another outburst when the camera caught the capture of a shark. There is an effective close-up of this at the end of the production.

Book This, Get Behind It, and It Should Satisfy
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will have to handle this with a great deal of care, because the story is very slight, indeed almost meagre. It tells of a photographer of under-sea life accompanied by a beautiful girl and a stowaway boy who find themselves in the West Indies. There the girl disports in front of the camera, and there is a hunt for frequenter of the deep. This is about all there is to it, so you can see just what you will have to do.
You had better get after your women folk particularly for what value the production will have, especially for the children.

It is full of good stuff, and you need not be afraid of it as not being entertaining. The thrills at the finish will satisfy any "hard-boiled" audience. They are very effective. On the other hand, this is a mighty valuable production to help educate youngsters as to what the bottom of the sea holds.
You have no names to talk of, but you can mention the charming and beautiful scenic effects, and don't overlook the thrills.
Fairly Familiar Theme But Makes Satisfactory Entertainment

EXTERIORS .......................... None
INTERIORS .......................... Adequate
DETAIL .......................... Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl, ready to sacrifice herself to protect her father, a crook, is saved by the man who loves her

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............. 4,961 feet

A foreword advises that actual police records served as a basis for this story by Harvey Gates but someone must have beat the author to the records, because the theme, almost identically, has been used before consequently, "Broad Daylight," while an interesting crook meller, is not a distinctive one by any means.

It does furnish a good entertainment for those who like this type of amusement and Irving Cummings has created an effective suspense and maintained the interest very well.

The plot is highly complicated with a number of characters involved and more situations than usual. It is a familiar formula, however, though rather well handled and for the most part the improbabilities and inconsistencies do not appear very prominent. There are one or two twists that stand out as especially inconsistent. One is in connection with hero's leaving the girl who saved his life merely because one man, who he had sufficient reason to distrust, infers that his relations with the girl are more than "friendly." In comparison, he would have had much better reason to forsake her when, three years later, she is trapped in his home accused of burglary and murder.

Coincidence plays a fairly prominent part in the development with the crooks locating the man they are after without any trouble. One of them bumps into a fellow tottering out of a cafe, the latter drops a wallet and sure enough, it bears the name of the man they are after. But the clever crooks never suspected that he might not be the owner of the wallet. And they are foiled. After they succeeded in getting him to marry the girl who thinks she is avenging her father's imprisonment by marrying the son of the man who caused it, they discover they have the wrong fellow.

There is a lot of double crossing and plotting but it is easy to follow in spite of the many complications. The romance is pleasing even if you do have to wait until the very last shot to see it consummated. This is the one thing in the story that you are sure of however, the clutch of the hero and heroine at the end. Lois Wilson does very well as the girl and Jack Mulhall is particularly good when he impersonates a "drunk." The types are all good and well played.

Story: The "Scarab," a crook, persuades Nora Fay to marry Percival Randolph, telling her that he is the son of the man who sent her father to prison. The man turns out to be a friend of Randolph's, Joel Morgan. The "Scarab" gets Nora's father, after his release, to turn crook again; Nora is accused of a murder which her father commits when he learns it was "The Scarab" who double crossed him. How Joel comes to Nora's rescue completes the story.

Should Prove Interesting For Those Who Like Crook Melodrama

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The above synopsis is a most meagre outline of the plot. It has many more angles and complications than intimated above so you can be sure to promise your patrons a highly involved crook melodrama that presents the adventures of the daughter of a crook who is almost convicted of a murder in protecting her father from being found out.

If they like crook melodramas you can be quite certain to satisfy them because "Broad Daylight" contains the kind of situations and characters that appeal best to those who favor them. Use the names of Lois Wilson and Jack Mulhall. Catchlines will arouse their interest and let them know just what type of a picture it is. The title of itself is not sufficient to give an idea. A trailer would undoubtedly bring them back.
The adventures of a Southern beauty who ran away to escape a loveless marriage and matched her enthusiasm against the speed of New York's business swirl.

A VERY SATISFACTORY PICTURE THAT PLEASED, is the verdict of Mr. Harry 'Neptune of the Electric Theatre, Robinson, Kansas.

CHARACTER OF STORY........Man assumes identity of dying pal at latter’s request; pal recovers and arrives in time to save man from hands of angry mob

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

For the average crowd that likes western pictures, "Another Man’s Boots" will give adequate satisfaction. As long as it has action they don’t care particularly whether it contains original situations or not. This story does not differ very much from the average western, the old assumed identity theme serving as the basis of it and the usual plotting of a villain against the hero providing the thrills.

Director Craft sustains the interest pretty well but he has not kept the development from being obvious. The spectator anticipates each step in the progress of the story and any chance for suspense leading to the climax is practically destroyed. It ends just the way you expect it will. It would have been better if the spectator had been allowed to believe that the man whose identity hero assumes, died. But a title inners that he is only wounded so when hero incurs the wrath of the people for posing as the man they know, you naturally expect the arrival of the man to clear hero’s name.

The action is of the usual order, fighting, riding and the familiar rescue stunt in which hero saves the girl from being rushed to death on her galloping horse. There are a few comedy bits founded on the regulation prohibition jokes—a western barroom serving ice cream cones and signs advertising drinks such as milk, etc. They were uncommonly conservative of negative in making this picture. When a second fight is required, they merely duplicate the scenes of the first fight.

Francis Ford is a satisfactory hero and the cast, on the whole, is quite adequate although there are no prominent names. Elvira Weil is a new comer and does not screen very well.

Story:  Ned Hadley is injured just as he is about to return to his father, who is blind, and his sister whom he has not seen since she was a baby. Thinking he is going to die he begs his pal known as “stranger,” to assume his identity and go to his home with the money he has saved. “Sly” Stevens, a town character, finally proves that the stranger is not Ned Hadley and the mob is planning tolynch him when the real Ned Hadley returns and saves him.

Will Do For Those Who Like Western Features Generally

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For the western admiring audience, "Another Man’s Boots" is all right. They’ll be satisfied with the action it contains and as long as there is a villain, a hero and heroine, with the usual plotting, they won’t mind that it isn’t anything very new as far as the story is concerned.

If you think Francis Ford’s name will mean anything at the box office, play it up but the best angle will be the fact that it is a western with some good action. Catchphrases should do to give an idea of the story. Say: “At the request of his dying pal he assumed the latter’s name only to risk being lynched as an imposter. See how he is saved at the last minute. ‘Another Man’s Boots’ gives the answer, at the blank theater.”

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Cowboy hero saves girl from wicked dance hall proprietor and restores a mine which belonged to her uncle

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 4,696 feet

"Peaceful Peters" is a true-type story with all that goes for making a western of average entertainment quality. There is nothing different in it, but it has about everything that is required to make a western—a hero, a villain and his thoroughly villainous band, and a heroine to be rescued by hero. Incidentally there is a mine for hero to retrieve, which supplies a slightly new angle to an already popular formula.

There is little to be said about "Peaceful Peters," other than that it is an average picture, capable of fulfilling the demands of an average audience or any crowd that likes western stories. This one hasn't as much action as it might, but there is more conspiracy on the part of the villain than usual. He certainly goes well out of his way to put hero out of the running, but naturally he is foiled in each attempt, until finally hero turns him over to the sheriff and claims the girl as a reward.

The director tells the story smoothly enough, and toward the close supplies some good bits of action in hero's capture of one of the villain's men. The fight, as usual, sends the combatants sprawling down a mountain side and continues it in the water below. A little more excitement in the early reels would have gotten the picture off to a better start. Hero's entree is a little tame compared with the things he does later.

There are some good exterior shots that contribute the right atmosphere. The interiors are very poor, with plain drops used in back of doors, windows, etc. Fairbanks is the usual type of cowboy star, though with less athletic display than some of his competitors. Evelyn Nelson plays the lead and the usual extras are adequate.

Story: Peaceful Peters buries Uncle Billy on the desert after learning that he had been wounded by Jim Blalock, who had also stolen Uncle Billy's mine, The Rainbow's End, staked by Uncle Billy for "Buddy's gal." Peaceful vows to retrieve the mine and give it to "Buddy's gal," though he doesn't know who she is. Peaceful's encounters with Blalock and his crowd are related in a series of events, in which Peaceful always has the upper hand. He finally gets back the mine and learns that the girl he saved from Blalock is "Buddy's gal."

All Right if Your Crowd Likes Westerns

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have a crowd that likes western features you will probably be able to satisfy them with "Peaceful Peters." This one isn't as actionful as some westerns, but it has a fairly good plot, though familiar, and a satisfying amount of action toward the close that will give it a good finishing impression.

The star's name isn't well enough known to bank on, so you will have to resort to catchlines or a more effective means of getting them interested—a trailer showing the fight in which hero and his assailant roll down the mountain side and battle in the water. In case you want to get them interested in the new star, it will be all right to use his name, but you can be the judge about this.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Country girl gives

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 6,603 feet

There are so many people who like pictures dealing with stage life that "Youth to Youth" has a good chance to prove popular and in view of the story, has some audience appeal that should bring it a certain amount of success. This isn't to say that it is an unusual picture or a special production. But it does contain the sort of material that is liked by a good majority of "fans" and should score its point on that angle sufficiently to put it across.

Those in the "sticks" depend upon pictures for their insight into things that do not come within their environs. Stage life is one that particularly fascinates them and they do not particularly object to, or consider as a serious fault, any improbabilities that the story may contain. They will probably be fully convinced that the pretty actress-heroine was absolutely innocent of the fact that her sudden luxury was being supplied by her elderly manager. On the other hand, it is these twists that will prevent the feature from being favorably received by the more cosmopolitan crowd. They just won't let it by without the usual comment.

The romance is the more pleasing angle of the story and the average crowd, women especially, will "love" the idea of the musical comedy beauty sacrificing riches and a career to live on a farm with her country lover. Billie Dove is quite pretty in some of the shots, and more appealing in the lighter moments.
She doesn't show much ability to handle dramatic bits. Cullen Landis is a good hero, and Noah Beery is the manager who is finally defeated in his attempt to win back the girl.

The floating theater which the girl joins after running away from luxury offers a rather novel twist, and the scenes showing the theater are realistic and interesting. The production, on the whole, is satisfactory and the direction quite all right, except that one or two sequences might have consumed less footage.

Story: When Eve Allinson learns that Brutus Tawney is supporting her she gives up her chances of a stage career and runs away. She joins a floating show and while playing in a Southern town falls in love with a farmer lad, Page Brookins. Tawney's search for Eve discloses her identity to Page, who refuses to believe that Tawney meant nothing to her.
How Page forces a confession from Tawney and takes Eve back to the farm completes the story.

Let Them Know It Deals With Stage Life and Exploit New Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With "Youth to Youth" it depends almost entirely upon the people you cater to. You should know, if you give the desires of your clientele intelligent consideration, just what goes best with them. If you think they will like a story such as the one contained in "Youth to Youth," get them interested. Let them know it deals with stage life, and you might use lines such as "She chose between happiness and a career. Which was it? See the answer in 'Youth to Youth,' a Metro picture starring Billie Dove."

They may not be especially acquainted with the star, so you might try to get them interested in her.
Also mention the names of Cullen Landis and Noah Beery. The idea of the floating theater also might attract attention. The atmosphere of the story is your best talking point, however.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..............6,400 feet

Following Johnny Hines' feature "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" in which Johnny Hines stepped from two reelers to stardom a lot of people are going to like "Sure Fire Flint" and a lot more are going to say they don't like it as much as "Burn 'Em Up Barnes."

But this one is pretty safe to book because when they get in they are going to like a lot of the new picture and the more they argue about how it compares with the other one, the better off you are. Nothing helps a show along so much as discussion. It is only when the gang says "it's rotten" and let it go at that that it dies on your hands and you know how many of them you have had.

Gerald Duffy is given credit for the story but it is a safe 495 to 1 bet that 105% of the gags and funny stuff come from the star. There are some very good ones and although some of those who follow the business carefully will recognize one or two, yet all told they get over very well. The poker sequence is well handled with colored cards to help out and when Johnny lifts a four of hearts over the trench and a bullet whizzes along making it a five, thus giving him a straight flush, will surely get a great laugh. All the way along Hines has insured this one with a lot of sure fire material so that it will give generally satisfactory entertainment.

The direction is pretty good and there is a corking good wallop in the last two reels where heroine is locked in a vault, the cute kiddie tumbles off a drawbridge, hero chases around at a 100 mile an hour clip in a racing car, jumps out of a moving train and rescues baby, and a couple more of those things that everybody seems to like and many producers put in pictures. But it is all good stuff and of course Johnny gets the Heroine at the end and the bank-roll.

There is a very good cast and this will help a lot.

You Should Have No Trouble With This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can put this one on safely and one of the ways to start them off right would be to have them argue about how much better it is than Johnny's former feature. You have two good names to play with, this one being called "Sure Fire Flint" and the former "Burn 'Em Up Barnes." Inasmuch as there isn't any war on in the East and the election is coming and everybody wants to argue anyway, let them use this.

You have a lot of well-known people in the cast, many of whom should bring money into the box-office including Doris Kenyon, formerly starred, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese and Barney Sherry. You can tell them that Billy Bitzer, one of the cameramen was formerly D. W. Griffith's right bower. Of course the star should come in for a share of attention because Johnny is getting better every day and while some may have missed his former feature still his name will be easily recalled by those who have seen his short reel productions.

If your crowd likes thrills you have so much to work with that you can promise them more than they need for one night's entertainment and you can add if they don't believe it they can come in and prove it.
Some Rather Novel Situations That Have Been Well Handled

DETAIL...................... Occasionally too stressed

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Rich girl seeking titled husband finds she is really child of her supposed father's cook; unusual will provides for her

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........... 5,986 feet

The situations that comprise "Women Men Marry," in themselves, are not altogether original but the combination is fairly new and quite interesting. It deals in part with the rich girl who is willing to exchange her wealth for a titled husband. It is in connection with this episode that things are somewhat exaggerated. Julia Swayne Gordon and Florence Dixon, as the aunt and heroine respectively, are allowed to overact considerably, making the characters appear in a very stilted light. There is too much precision in their movements and their air of arrogance is quite unreal. Incidentally a girl as presumably well bred as the heroine would not cross her limbs each time she seated herself. Minor details such as these tend to make the characters inconsistent.

Except in the first two reels, which are a trifle slow moving in that they are consumed in establishing a premise, Director Dillon sustains the interest splendidly and builds toward a climax that carries quite a force, or rather it is an anti-climax which has the most punch. But it was necessary in this case in order to furnish a surprise ending. Dillon has succeeded in keeping his development from becoming obvious and in this way holding attention throughout and increasing the interest as he builds toward the climax.

The story opens with a novel situation, that in which a rich man adopts the little daughter of his cook and butler to take the place of his baby daughter who died at birth, together with his wife. The understanding is that the child's parents will be retained in his employ but the child must be taught to believe that her foster-father is her real parent. There are some effective heart interest touches, one particularly in which the girl's real mother prepares a cake with "welcome home" upon her return from Europe and the offering is resented by the haughty girl.

The best of the story is the man's will which leaves everything to his young wife but after a certain length of time another will is found in which the girl receives her share, the explanation being that the deceased took this means of preventing the girl's marriage to a fortune hunting Englishman who he believed would not marry her when she was penniless.

Florence Dixon, the heroine, is quite pleasing when she does not overact and Margaret Hedden is sweet as the mother; Hedda Hopper does very well as the young wife of the girl's foster-father, and Cecil Chadwick is fine as the Englishman.

With Good Exploitation May Do Satisfactory Business

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Undoubtedly this will do good business in a great many houses because there is a class that enjoys stories dealing with the aristocrats and there is added interest in the story of "Women Men Marry." The title is good and offers many exploitation possibilities that will help you put it over. Play it up with catchlines and readers in your local newspaper.

You will have to depend upon the title and whatever exploitation you can give it to attract patronage because there are no names of players that will bring them to the box office. Properly handled the feature should do a satisfactory business, but you will have to get behind it because it requires more than the average announcements.
Short Stuff

Buster Keaton “My Wife’s Relations”—Asso. 1st Nat'l Type of production..................2 reel comedy
Buster Keaton’s latest is on a par with all his other stuff. The hatchet-face comedian never had better opportunity than in this. The gags are for a greater part new, and the situations are unusual, starting with Buster as a candy maker in a section of a large city where Hungarian families congregate. An energetic mail-carrier gets entangled with the taffy Buster is pulling, and it performs a “curley-cue” around his neck, and floors him. He disappears after overlooking a letter which Buster picks up. When Buster runs away from the postman he bumps into a large athletic Swedish woman who proceeds to take him before a police magistrate, and instead of being sentenced for assault, the oddly assorted couple are married, and from then on, the comedy consists of what happens to Buster with his wife’s relations—four husky “rough-necks.” There is a load of brand new material well worked in, and with Buster disappearing on the Reno Limited, you are left to imagine that he will be divorced.

Particularly effective are the shows showing Buster preparing to go to bed, and what happens among the relatives and friends as Buster disappears in the “home brew.”

Pathe Review No. 178

This issue opens with some artistic back-to-nature picture paintings, that are really beautiful in effect. The science section illustrating “The Life History of a Volcano,” is instructive and well developed. This is followed by some footage of dancing girls of the Dutch East Indies, a demonstration in the art of make up which is very good and the colored section which shows views of Avignon, France, the ancient city of Popes.

“Such is Life Outside London”—Hy Mayer—Film Booking Offices Type of production..................1 reel travel laugh
Hy Mayer scores again with this travel laugh. The reel is interesting as well as educational and the cartoons fading into the actual pictures hold the attention well, and are really amusing. Occasionally the subject matter does not refer entirely to the suburbs of London and might be found anywhere, but this in no way detracts from the entertainment value of the reel. Scenes along the banks of the Thames and a clever play on the top hats worn at Eton complete the issue.

“The Old Sea Dog”—Snub Pollard—Pathe Type of production..................2 reel comedy “Snub” Pollard is starred in this mirth-provoking comedy. In the introductory scenes he is a wooden-legged pirate with a wooden-legged crew. This fades out into the real story in which “Snub” is the owner and pilot of a comic ferryboat, which plies its way across a narrow pool. An enemy to get revenge informs the Harbor Officials that he has not paid his taxes for six years and they threaten to take away his boat if the tax is not paid in an hour. Marie Mosquini takes loving pity on him and she and her friends do some fancy diving on the other side of the pool. “Snub” gets a rush of business on this account and charges a fee to take the boys across, thus enabling him to pay the taxes. There are some clever gags in the picture and it should please the average audience.

“Such is Life in the Riviera”—Hy Mayer—P. B. O. Type of production..................1 reel travel laugh
As usual, this reel is very good. It holds the attention throughout and if your audiences like this sort of thing, it will surely please. Mr. Mayer has an excellent imagination and sees in the picturesque French Riviera things that only an artist’s eye would catch. Shots of Cannes, the mountains of Villefranche and scenes in Eze complete the issue.

“Fire Fighters”—Hal Roach—Pathe Type of production..................2 reel comedy
This, the second of the new kiddie and animal series, is one of the best of it’s type seen in a long time. Dressed up ducks, hens, goats, an almost human mule, and a dog combined with an irresistible gang of small dirty kids of a variety of ages and colors make up two reels of sheer fun. “Sunshine” Sammy accidentally finds a moonshiner’s still, and getting an inspiration from little Jackie Conlin’s fireman’s hat “agonizes” a fire department. How they find a supposed fire to be the steam from a kettle, squirt moonshine all over the barnyard thinking it water, to put the fire out, get all the animals tipsy, and generally play havoc with the neighborhood will surely “get them.” Children especially will like this one which should prove a most pleasing addition to any bill.

“The Priory School”—Sherlock Holmes Series—Educational Type of production..................2 reel drama
This picturization of the Conan Doyle story holds the attention all the way, and while not as exciting as some of its predecessors, in that it does not contain a murder, makes interesting entertainment. Ellie Norwood who plays the part of the famous detective has a most pleasing personality and gives an enjoyable performance. The story deals with the abduction of the young son of the Duke of Holderness from his room at school. The Duke offers a large reward for his return. After many complications, all of which are unraveled smoothly and logically, the Duke is found to be the abductor himself. The picture should make a good addition to any program.

“Shiver and Shake”—Hal Roach—Pathe Type of production..................1 reel comedy
This one is built around the old haunted house theme. Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston are newlyweds and Paul’s father-in-law rents them a house. During a storm some nearby campers are wrecked and wrapping their tent about them they seek shelter in the nearest house which belongs to the newlyweds. The white-draped figures are taken for “spooks” creating an opportunity for the usual gags. It is a fair, average, offering but your crowd may like it.

Ocean Swells—Christie—Educational Type of production..................2 reel comedy
This is a particularly entertaining two reeler with Neal Burns as the young husband whose wife’s family are the bane of his existence. Scott Sidney has directed very well and some of the gags are exceedingly funny. Baby Bebe Blackburn is one of the cleverest kiddies seen in a long time and her swimming is the best thing in the picture. Neal’s country home is beset by mosquitoes, so to avoid them he has the bungalow made into a houseboat. This sounds inviting to his mother-in-law and she proceeds to visit them with the whole family attached. How Neal gets rid of them, or tries to, forms the base on which the action is hung.
"Broadcasting"—Johnny Jones—Pathe
Type of production.............................2 reel comedy

Here is another of the Johnny Jones-Gertrude Messinger offerings, and those who saw "Makin' Movies" will be anxious to see this one. It is thoroughly enjoyable and will please any audience. Johnny Jones and his youthful supporting cast will enlist everyone's sympathies and little Gertrude Messinger is charming in whatever she does.

The radio craze has hit the town and an outfit is offered as a prize to the child bringing the largest number of new members to the Sunday school. Many and varied are the lures used by the kids to get members, but Gertrude and Johnny win out by advertising a picnic at which members are invited free. They win the prize and with a radio-equipped motorcycle they solve the mystery of a bank robbery and attempted murder and bring the crook to justice.

Type of production.............................1 reel magazine

This is the first issue of Educational's new screen magazine, "The Graphic" which will be released every week. Each reel has three subjects and an Ollendorf cartoon. The first section of this issue deals with a one-man factory at Tiger, Ga. which is operated entirely by Uncle Charlie Arnold who works his own farm with home-made farming implements. The next section is devoted to the waking-up exercises used by Mary Eaton, the well-known stage star, showing how she begins a new day. The third section introduces Becky Lanier, America's leading horsewoman and analyzes some jumps with slow-motion photography. The cartoon which is very good, closes the issue. Not having so much variety of subject matter, more footage is devoted to each subject than is usual and the reel doubtless will be liked.

It should be of interest to you to know that as a result traceable direct to the two advertisements published in The Film Daily October 16th and 19th, one of four and the other of five inches, we disposed of five substantial territories on our FAVORITE STAR SERIES of twelve two reel re-issued westerns and semi-western subjects.

First National to Enter Production
Franchise Improvements Considered

Ambitious Plans to Be Taken Up by Executive Committee Which Will Journey to California—Talk of a New Home—Nothing Definite But Plans Receiving Much Consideration

Associated First National has, it is understood, important plans under consideration.

These refer not only to the question of what extent First National may produce on its own, but also to finding means for improving the franchise plan. These questions, together with others, will be taken up by the Executive Committee which will journey to Hollywood within the next few months, or sooner.

By the first of the coming year, or shortly thereafter, it is anticipated that all of these matters will be settled.

As to Production
That First National intend to produce several pictures "on its own" is a fact. Just to what extent further production will result will depend upon the result of the investigation to be made in Hollywood. It may be that First National will make a number of pictures. If it is deed to do this, and if plans discussed materialize, there will be a unique and very unusual touch to this. The cost of production will not be held a secret, nor will there be any secret as to distributing costs. Exhibitors will be given the facts, and rentals will be based upon these costs. Some members of First National are confident that these operations cannot help but prove fruitful, and generally successful.

Harold Lloyd is coming East. He is scheduled to arrive in New York Thursday.

Hard Lines
Tears were in Joe Plunkett's eyes, and in his voice, Sunday night. He had to give his money—real American money—to a few of the immense mob which tried, until after 10:15 o'clock, to see "Oliver Twist." Ticket sale stopped at 9:45, but the mob wouldn't leave. Exactly 12 people asked for their money back, but were satisfied with tickets for another performance.

First Nat'l to Enter Production

Improving the Franchise

The Committee will also give much consideration to what is hoped to be an improvement of some of the clauses governing the sub franchise. Where these changes can be made it will be done. Where the changes are not acceptable to the sub franchise holder, he will be able to exercise his option and cancel the franchise privilege, with the usual notice to the organization. But there is confidence expressed that the expected changes will cement the organization tighter than ever.

Other Matters

There is a possibility of First National moving, and having a home of its own. This is also considered, but nothing definite has been determined upon. There has been some talk of a site on 46th St. being selected.

The directors are expected to complete their work this week, and then the program will be in the hands of the Executive Committee to work out. Not since the very early days of the organization has there been mapped out such an amount of work, and it is confidently expected that it will all be well in hand by the first of the year.

Col. Browne On Way Here

When Col. H. A. Browne, managing director of Wurlitzer, London, arrives from England the latter part of this week on a film purchasing trip, he will make his headquarters at the Plaza.

Ends Long Engagement

The final performance of "Monte Cristo" will be given tomorrow evening, having played 3 months at the 44th Street Theater.

"The Village Blacksmith," a new Fox feature, will open for an indefinite run Thursday.

Hays Red Cross Committee

The following film men have been appointed to the committee, which will Hays is chairman, to boost this year's Red Cross Roll Call from Armistice Day, Nov. 11 to Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 30.

Miles Bonds Warehouse

Josi. R. Miles has bonded the Lloyds film storage warehouse. This means that incoming film may remain in bond until it is convenient for the recipient to remove it. It also means that films may be projected in bond and the consignee may select the films he desires to purchase and return the others without paying duty.

Under the regulations embodied in the new tariff bill it is mandatory that film shipments be liquidated and removed from the United States within 48 hours after their arrival.

Famous in Germany

Another chance to get a return for the sums invested in Germany would be, according to Mr. Kaufmann, to send Lubitsch, the producer of "Fascination" and "Deception," to the United States and let him produce two films there. The rich means of American studios would be put at the disposal of Mr. Lubitsch, as well as a first-rate cast. The leading men of the E. F. A. hope to obtain better results with these American-made Lubitsch pictures than with those hitherto produced in the old country.

Kaufmann denies, however, that the E. F. A. will be wound up. The company still has a number of contracts running. Even if Lubitsch should make up his mind to go to America, production by other directors will go on.

It is even intended to send an American director to Berlin. The E. F. A. will continue to produce next year in Germany, in spite of the unfavorable conditions on the German market. Production became ten times as in the past year, so there is hardly any more inducement in it for Americans.

"Oliver Twist"—First National—Strand

TIMES—All things considered, they've done a good job, an excellent job, with Dickens in the picture "Oliver Twist" at the Strand and destined to keep the house full, if the crowds that packed the place Sunday mean anything. But whether it is Mr. Dickens or little Jackie Coogan that is drawing them in, of course, a question.

It is probably, or suitably, both, for both are greatly living present in the play. The picture is not unadulterated and unbridged Dickens, but there are many genuine fragments of Dickens in it and not much foreign matter. And Jackie Coogan's Oliver Twist is true, somewhat less pathetic, perhaps, than the original Oliver, but appealing, nevertheless, a characterization you cannot resist and have no desire to.

WORLD—We have never seen so lovable a figure in motion pictures as the Oliver Twist of Jackie Coogan. * * * The spirit of the author lives in it. In this instance we confess we see nothing which is glaringly wrong, and we see much that is unusually good. As an example of separate pictures events joined coherently and titled intelligently, rounding off and last into a complete story which is deeply moving at times and thoroughly humorous at others, it is a notable piece of work, * * *.

In the colorful and faithful finish of the characterization throughout the play is superb. You may take the word of one who is not always exuberant. See this picture!

AMERICAN—There was not too much of this little boy in the film. He was not made to usurp the entire story, due place being given in the eternal Fagin (a star character), Sikes (a star character). And both Nancy and Fagin are better, especially the star to work upon than the little workhouse lad. The picture was made with remarkable reverence and a Dickensian subervinance that may be commended.

WORLD—"Oliver Twist" was seen in months. Splendidly cast, wonderfully produced. It is superbly acted—the Dickens' story makes as much appeal to the one as to the child. And while we were dealing in superficies, we should not have missed the direction—so near perfection as any story that has been screened, and for once in Mr. Lloyd's responsible for this end of the production, is to be heartily congratulated.

EVE. TELEGRAM—"The power and beauty of the film are beyond question, but any doubt on this point could easily be dispelled by comparing this masterpiece with an earlier version of the story taken only a dozen years ago. Potent as Jackie is, he is congratulated upon having made it as short as it was. It might have gone on for two or three more.

DAILY NEWS—"Oliver Twist" is a good picture, first because of Jackie Coogan as Oliver and second because of the fine production. Pictorially, they have the Dickens we all love, whether they have accorded it a closer interpretation we were thoroughly captivated by Jackie. * * * What the picture lacked to us was a tremendous climax. * * * You and your children should surely see this picture.

HERALD—"Oliver Twist" as a movie is everything that an intelligent adaptation should be. Frank Lloyd, who directed it, has managed to retain the spirit, the flavor of Dickens, and at the same time has created a photoplay which possesses an identity of its own. He has told the story in terms of pictures that move, so that the spectator will understand and appreciate it whether he has read the book or not. * * * Little Jackie is marvelous. He brings Oliver Twist to life. * * * We don't know whether it is still possible for Mr. Dickson to go to the play, but if he can miss off from his angelic duties we feel sure that he will flees into the Strand this week—and we know that he will enjoy himself immensely.

EVE. WORLD—A screen masterpiece of human interest. All in all, "Oliver Twist" is the best picture we have seen in months. Splendidly cast, wonderfully produced. It is superbly acted—the Dickens' story makes as much appeal to the one as to the child. And while we were dealing in superficies, we should not have missed the direction—so near perfection as any story that has been screened, and for once in Mr. Lloyd's responsible for this end of the production, is to be heartily congratulated.

EVE. TELEGRAM—"The power and beauty of the film are beyond question, but any doubt on this point could easily be dispelled by comparing this masterpiece with an earlier version of the story taken only a dozen years ago. Potent as Jackie is, he is congratulated upon having made it as short as it was. It might have gone on for two or three more.

GLOBE—Is so far as Jackie Coogan is concerned, "Oliver Twist" is a better picture than "The Kid." Teamed up with Chaplin, we all thought him cute, but there was a suspection that perhaps without Chaplin he was a somewhat sporadic artist. We have no such suspicion here. The picture is a masterpiece and it is a thrill to see the child's genius meet the mature talent of the great director. * * * What the pictures lacked to us was a tremendous climax. * * * You and your children should see this picture now.

EVE. WORLD—"Oliver Twist" is a good picture, first because of Jackie Coogan as Oliver and second because of the fine production. Pictorially, they have the Dickens we all love, whether they have accorded it a closer interpretation we were thoroughly captivated by Jackie. * * * What the picture lacked to us was a tremendous climax. * * * You and your children should see this picture now.

"The Sin Flood"—Goldwyn-Capitol

HERALD—Here again Lloyd demotes the fact that he is one of the few movie actors who really understand moving pictures. In "The Sin Flood" he is even delicate in treatment than in "Oliver Twist." Perhaps he is a bit too subtle. That criticism that may be made justly, for intelligence can be carried too far. Whether or not "The Sin Flood" money is a fine picture and a distinct success to the Goldwyn corporation, which scored it.

WORLD—Here is a cooking good idea in the screen. And a title writer did every in his power to ruin it. "* * * However, "The Sin Flood" will strike a great many as gripping film melodrama.

AMERICAN—A valuable, Naipaulia o nonsense and wrongdoing is "The Sin Flood." The photography is magnificent, certainly the pictures of the river in flood is storming turbulently through the countryside.

AMERICAN—Everybody said "I did done" when we heard that "The Deluge" is to be made into a picture, but it has done, and in a way that we consider reasonably satisfactory. Frank Lloyd has regarded it with marvelous understanding humor and the cast is fine.

MORNING TELEGRAM—A perfectly unpretentious and unpretentious play made into a decided successful motion picture. The picture is one of the most outspokenly successful of the year, it is unreasonably fast above the ordinary, a fact that does not take away from the excellence of the picture itself.

EVE. WORLD—Even more gripping the screen than it was on the speaking stage. "The Sin Flood" is an acceptable feat of imitation has been accomplished in "The Flood." * * * It is likely to draw floods of attention from the theatre; more in the pitch of comedy then the drama. It is a good film, though he handles the realistic flood like a Miss Rice overs reassure.

MAIL—A surprisingly strong picture. Something new in screen life. "The Sin Flood" revealing what a triumph they can win "the speakers" with the production by two experienced screen playmakers. "The Sin Flood," which was produced here on the Strand as "The Deluge," will every bit as gripping in the silent drama

Williams' Plans?

Talk of a Huge Concern With Large Capital for Production With Distributor Affiliation

There is considerable talk that before long J. D. Williams' plans for the future will be definitely announced. Williams refuses to discuss his plans publicly for the Famous but he expects to be found in the picture industry, and that any statement at this time would be premature.

While Williams refuses to talk, some of those who are believed to be in a position to know, say that it can be expected that Williams will be found operating a very large organization, the primary purpose of which will be the production of special features. These plans are said to be on a very large scale and, in addition it is said that the capital for the venture has been fully subscribed. It is expected that the organization will have an exhibitor tie-up.

Williams has no office at this time, but it is thought that this is just a reason for keeping his home. It is said he contemplates making a quick trip to California to discuss production and that, upon his return, he will probably go abroad for a brief vacation and in the Spring will return actively at work with regard to the new organization.

New Photoplay Department

Clayton Hamilton, scenario writer and authority on things theatrical, will write a photoplay department for The Theater Magazine. It will start in the January issue.

No Summons

But Chadwick Says F. I. L. M. Club Will Proceed

Isaac E. Chadwick, chairman of the Executive Committee of the F. I. L. M. Club said yesterday that he had received Senator Walker's letter with reference to the Grobe and Noble situation.

"The fact that the Senator has construed our communication to Grobe and Noble as a 'summons' when in fact it was an invitation and the rest of the political speech which came in this letter doesn't particularly interest us. We have always worked harmoniously with the T. O. C. C. We expect to continue to do so. We hope so, anyhow. We will not allow this to interfere with our relations. The F. I. L. M. Club will, in due course, continue this matter, and will probably reply to Senator Walker."

Chadwick further stated that an investigation into the affairs of Grobe and Noble had developed that conditions were not as unsatisfactory as had originally been believed, but he insisted that this in no way detracted from the importance of the F. I. L. M. Club checking incidents of this nature where they developed in fact.

Trade in England

From E. W. Fredman "The Film Renter"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—The principal attractions at the London theaters now playing to big business are "The Four Horsemen," at the Palace in its eighth week of showing; "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight," an American sob drama, at the Holborn Empire; "Cabiria," at the Philharmonic Hall; "Foolish Wives," playing to big business at the New Oxford, and "A Bill of Divorcement," a superb British film, is commencing a season at the New Gallery Kinema. Business with all these productions continues to be exceedingly good.

A new house at Iford, seating 3,000, opened with "Smilin' Through." It is doubtful whether any picture of recent months has played to the amount of business that "Smilin' Through" has. In every cinema that this has been shown big business has resulted. "The Bohemian Girl," produced by Harley Knoles for Alliance, was released last week and has been a tremendous winner.

The Morning Telegraph, speaking of "Shadows," calls it "a worthy achievement." That's only one of the many kind things that newspapers said about the picture. Discerning, discriminating and wise showmen might take heed—Advt.

Grave Situation

Marcus Loew Comments on Buying Conditions Throughout Industry

Marcus Loew is probably the largest buyer of film in this country. Incidentally he is president of Metro Pictures Corp. He said yesterday:

"We are reaching a serious and grave state of affairs. Something must happen. Otherwise there will be a lot of theaters out of business, and a lot of producing organizations. The trouble is that there is no balance to the business of buying pictures. Some exhibitors pay 10 cents on a dollar for what their pictures are worth, and others pay 1,000 cents on the dollar. Invariably the exhibitor who can least afford it pays the most. This is all wrong.

"The menace that exists is chiefly due to the development of booking agreements all over the country. Exhibitors are working together and buying jointly and during the past year this scheme has increased terrifically. The result is that the salesmen, in an effort to make a showing, soak the honest exhibitor to make up in some way the loss through being compelled to sell at ridiculous prices to these joint buying organizations.

"The producers in the business in this country who are making money can be counted on the fingers of one hand. This isn't to say that even these are obtaining a sufficient return on their huge investments, but the rest aren't even breaking even.

"How long this state of affairs can exist is a question. It cannot go on much longer, that is certain, and what I would like to know is what is going to be done about it?"

"The COVERED WAGON" is on the Way!

OUT in the American desert, the Paramount company under the direction of James Cruze is now engaged on the most gigantic motion picture undertaking ever attempted. This is the picturization of "The Covered Wagon," by Emerson Hough, which will in every way be epoch-making.

The following letter, from a man who spent two days on location with the company, gives some idea of the magnitude of this undertaking:

"I SAW things which I scarcely believed possible to be set up in a desert: a wagon train two miles long; a thousand people, including two hundred and fifty Indians; a camp of over two hundred tents; a complete electric lighting system; a commissary department as efficient as a hotel.

"I saw some night stuff taken which gave me more thrill than anything I have seen in the motion picture business.

"There will never be another picture like this. No one else would go to the expense of $12,000 a day for two or three months to make it.

"The company is ninety miles from the railroad, and we had to travel over the worst roads I ever saw to get there. The temperature at night is about 3 above zero, but nobody complains. They're all so enthusiastic about "The Covered Wagon" that they'll undergo anything to have it right."

LOU MARCUS.

Vidaver Patent expected to Revolutionize Present Methods of Film Inspection
It is understood that executive officials of several of the largest organizations in the industry have voiced enthusiastic approval over a film inspection machine patented by Dr. Inzerid Fairwell Vidaver. Dr. Vidaver is a brother of Nathan Vidaver, the well known attorney. The machine has been tested out for some weeks, it is said, by E. S. Porter, one of the oldest engineers in the industry, and Porter is very enthusiastic relative to the patent. Those who have seen it say that such a machine will do the work of 8 inspectors, and that one girl can operate two machines, reducing the cost of film inspection in various ranch offices 75 per cent of existing costs. It is said the machine automatically records where every bit of film is placed in the film.

Organize in South
New Orleans Exhibitors Form Booking Combination—Similar to A. B. C. of New York (Special to THE FILM DAILY)
New Orleans—Independent exhibitors operating 20 theaters in this city, have formed an organization to book productions for their individual houses, and pay for them on a pro rata basis apportioned on the seating capacity of their theaters. Officers have been elected to be as follows: Wm. Isseman, of Iberville, president; Wm. Ellison, of the Peters Ave., secretary and Rene Brennet of the Imperial, treasurer.

It is planned to increase the organization to include other Southern states, especially Mississippi. A central office will be established where the films will be allotted to the members.

The plan of action, as outlined at present, will do away with the first run system, as each picture will be allotted in rotation.

Exhibitors claim that the organization has been formed because it has been impossible for independent exhibitors to get first run bookings on important features.

The organization also proposes to buy new features for this territory, if necessary, or to handle programs if such action is considered advantageous.

A name for the organization will be selected and to be held early next week. Meanwhile the officers are busy with organization work.

It will be noted that the aims of the organization and its plan of action are parallel in many ways to the method of operation of the newly formed Associated Booking Corp., organized by exhibitors of New York and New Jersey.

You Can Duplicate These Successes
In the Courts

Arthur Olner, who was appointed referee to hear an accounting, ordered in behalf of Josiah B. Mullein in a suit against the Master Prod., Ltd., Edward Wertheimer, Arthur L. Fullman, J. Frank Brocchia, Inc., and Arnold E. Carrick, on the ground that he had obtained the exhibition rights in Great Britain for the film, "The Land of the Rising Sun," and the defendants held themselves out as possessing such rights, has filed his report. The referee found that the exhibition rights depreciated between 1918 and 1922 $2,500 because of the defendants' acts, and they must pay that sum. The referee found that Wertheimer wrongfully held himself out as having the British rights to the film.

In the suit of the S. R. F. Amusement Co., to compel Oliver D. Bailey as lessee of the Republic Theater, to carry out an agreement giving the plaintiff the right to use the theater for film shows and vaudeville on Sunday nights, at $10,000 a year, a judgment has been filed in the Supreme Court dismissing the complaint on the ground that a "high class theatrical entertainment" was not given in the theater as agreed, but that "small time vaudeville" was shown.

DIRECTED BY KING BAGGOT
Illuminated "Masquerader"

La Crosse, Wis.—An illuminated "Masquerader" walked the streets here during the run of the picture at the Rivoli. The man was in full dress with electric lights under the stiff shirt bosom which illuminated the advertisement printed on it. He attracted such crowds that the police finally stopped the stunt, but not until everyone knew of the picture and where it was being shown.

Novelty Candy Stunt

Phila.—Masterpiece Film Attractions secured 25,000 almond bars from the Wilbur Chocolate people, distributed by six girls in knickers and orange, capes for "Rich Man's Wives." Results were so favorable that the candy makers appropriated an additional 25,000 bars for other cities in the territory.

Interviewed Prominent Citizens

Peoria, Ill.—The Palace began its campaign for "The Old Homestead" with a series of five interviews with local celebrities, all speaking sentimentally about old homesteads. Wm. E. Danziger, Paramount exploiter, got the stories and the newspapers proved willing to use them. The title of the picture alone was used in the stories. No mention was made of the theater or of the date of the picture's run, but the stories did valuable missionary work for the picture.

Another good tie-up was with an insurance company which issued a cyclonic policy, which was printed in the dailies and connected with the storm scenes in the picture.

Police Parade Draws crowds

Augusta, Ga.—The most important feature of the exploitation of "In the Name of the Law" during its run at the Modjeska was the police parade staged by Manager F. J. Miller. When the parade had drawn the crowds to the front of the theater the police department band gave an hour's concert. The police patrol was decorated with an "In the Name of the Law" banner all week. Ten per cent of the gross receipts were donated to the police benefit fund.

Another stunt was turning loose 30 newsboys with heralds printed in the shape of a newspaper marked "extra," and bearing the bold headline "Raiders Rob Bank." The public scrambled for copies of the "extra." The boys were watched to see that no money was collected for the papers. This stunt received special notices in local newspapers.

For the first time in the history of the city, mounted twenty-four sheets were stretched across the sidewalks in front of the theater. A small passage way was cut through each sheet that pedestrians were forced to walk through the posters.

Life Insurance Tie-up

Ottawa—A life insurance tie-up proved an effective way of getting "Remembrance" before the public during its run at the Regent. The Life Underwriters Ass'n ran a three column, six inch advertisement reading: "See 'Remembrance' and remember a life insurance, policy is the sincerest love letter a man can write." Endorsed by the Life Underwriters Ass'n of Ottawa. The quotation is from one of the sub-titles of the picture.

Old Settlers "Remembrance" Contest

Jackson, Mich.—Manager Frank H. Payne of the Majestic and Earl H. Payne, Goldwyn exploiter, followed a press book suggestion during the run of "Remembrance" and interested the editor of the Citizen-Patriot in a contest which appealed to the remembrance of old settlers as to past events in the city. Two questions a day were asked for five days. The best answer earned $5 in gold. Tickets to "Remembrance" were sent to other contestants. The stunt got two columns of publicity every day.

Colored Icicles Win Attention

Duluth, Minn. — Manager H. Azine of the Lyric attracted attention to Buster Keaton's run in "It's a Frozen North" by two stunts he also created laughter. He decorates the canopy of the theater with b.ners notched and splashed like ice, and then colored the icicles blue, green and yellow.

A street ballyhoo man was put wearing Eskimo furs and a Panama hat. He carried a palm leaf fan one hand and lady's parasol in other. He walked on skis made in barrel staves.

If you crave excitement you will get it in "The Kentucky Derby." If you like suspense, thrills, and pathos, it is all there—enough of each to satisfy you.

But our mothers and fathers who trembled with excitement over "The Suburban" weren't fooled by the half sensationalism that we are given in "The Kentucky Derby," for they didn't have the big race. And it is some race in the picture—just the most realistic scenes you ever saw for they are real.

BY OBSERVER.

“Wonders of the Sea” would be just about the best picture in any film and which it helps to place in the sample of under water photography is a masterpiece of work as thrilling as most sensational melodrama and as beautiful as a visioned fairyland.

"Wonders of the Sea" made by J. E. Williamson's five-reel picture, actually made on the "floor of the sea" in the Hawaiian Islands, is an interesting story of adventure among the denizens of the deep. It is woven around a sequence of events and sudden moments as are some in some fascinating slow motion swimming scenes against the ocean's natural background. Then there are a series of episodes which take place in the scenes in which Williamson and his associates are engaged in the sea. The picture is a gripping story that Fox and his camera crew put together at a hair's breath safely behind the camera and the surface of the ocean to make the audience tremble. They are watching the "Wonders of the Sea" story, in which the Williamson's precious pictures taken on the ocean bed will perhaps be inclined to doubt the writer's veracity. But the story is a first for the screen and the world will see the first time for the wonders of the sea. The picture is taken through the apparatus contrived by Williamson for this special purpose. The inventor, himself, and after hearing all about him from the man who has worked at both ends of the camera, they work little room for doubt.

The picture shows Williams as the "skipper," starting off for the Bahamas, and then we seeing the next three days and three nights on the palm-shaded coral-reef island which looks much to Hermuda. We look you are introduced to an artist and his lovely model, and she volunteers to pose on the palm, as is the usual story. It is the submarine groves and dells. The picture shows her twisting and twining about the palms and fishes on the ocean bed. Again and again she diverts herself the pain of the teeth it is finished. "The skipper" herself goes down, wearing a diving suit and an umbrines, or "unwaters" as we should say, a shark, an octopus and a sea serpent to picture is fascinating and could easily run for five reels without boring anyone.

"Wonders of the Sea" is all that the title claims. Through the use of a submarine apparatus invented by J. E. Williamson, it has been possible to actually photograph the bottom of the ocean with its luxuriant plant life and multitudinous fish. The pictures are as much more beautiful than these views taken below the surface of the waters of the West Indies, nor have we seen pictures as remarkable as those of Williamson and another diver on the ocean bed this autumn. If we are interested in their escape from the grasp of an octopus and their native attendant of a shark. In this instance the motion pictures tell the story of a certain animal's escape. This film has been produced by the Bome and Fox and the picture is fascinating and could easily run for five reels without boring anyone.

"Wonders of the Sea" is the latest melodramatic offering, and is adapted from the Charles T. Nazey's old-time stage success, "The Suburban." This is a thriller of the new track and all the usual accidents we have been taught to expect in them.

All Old-Time Features.

There is the crooked jockey who wins the race, the horse that is tampered with, the poor but proud owner who will lose his home and everything if his horse does not win, the deep-eyed villain who is going to make a fortune and a getaway when the horse is tricked into losing the race, and the disinterested son, falsely accused of taking his father's money and returning just in time to discover the foul plot of the villain and win the race for the other.

If you have not seen "The Suburban," then you will find it in "The Kentucky Derby." If you like suspense, thrills, and pathos, it is all there—enough of each to satisfy you.

But our mothers and fathers who trembled with excitement over "The Suburban" weren't fooled by the half sensationalism that we are given in "The Kentucky Derby," for they didn't have the big race. And it is some race in the picture—just the most realistic scenes you ever saw for they are real.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Newspaper Page One Streamer

Arctic, R. I.—Striking newspaper co-operation was obtained by Manager A. H. Dolan, of the Strand, who bought a 3-column ad on page one of the Pawtuxet Valley Daily Times and the paper came back with a streamer across page one reading “Blood and Sand Extra.”

Music Week a Boost

Niagara Falls, N. Y.—“The Strand,” which has only been open a few weeks, is stepping out energetically in exploitation. When “The Eternal Flame” was shown at the Strand, the theater inaugurated a “music week” in cooperation with all department stores, and stationery stores handling music as well as music stores. The song, “The Eternal Flame,” was featured. The Metropolitan five and ten cent store carried a window display of the song for ten days.

In the lobby, an effective display was made of a three-foot candle with a 30-inch paper maske butterfly hovering near it.

Airplane Tractor Stunt

Hartford, Conn.—Harry Needles, manager of the Princess, used an original stunt in exploiting “Hurricane’s Gal,” which brought the crowds, though it almost cost Needles his life and Lieut. Stewart, air-plane pilot, declared he wouldn’t go through it again for a million dollars.

Needles and Stewart flew over the city in an airplane dragging a banner 30 feet long and seven feet deep about 250 yards away. In its rear, the newspaper called it the “airplane tractor” and readily used the story. The danger was in the risk of air currents with the large banner dragging. Later the banner was displayed in front of the theater with the caption the first sign to fly over Hartford.”

State Fair Competition Met

Richmond, Va.—Manager Jack R. ReVille, of the Broadway and Saul Silver, Goldwyn exploiter, met the opposition of the Virginia state fair during the run of “Remembrance” at the Broadway by energetic exploitation.

A private screening of the picture was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Price, critic of the News-Leader, which resulted in newspaper publicity.

Ten thousand cards were distributed, as follows: 2,000 hung on telephones, autos and door knobs; 1,000 distributed from a booth at the fair; 2,000 distributed from house to house; and 5,000 dropped from an airplane flying over the fair. Double-page newspaper ads were carried. A thousand booklets were distributed in book stores and at the high school. Many window displays were arranged and a town billboard was billed very completely. The result was that the theater triumphed over the unusually strong competition.

Hunt Norma Talmadge Double

Fort Wayne, Ind.—Manager John Daley, of the Orpheum, created a lot of interest in Norma Talmadge’s “The Eternal Flame,” which was advertised as a double for the stars. The girl chosen as the double danced in a floral window display for three days.

“Old Homestead” Realty Tie-up

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Greater West Philadelphia Building and Loan Association, through a tie-up effected by Eli N. Ornitz, Paramount exploiter, distributed heralds with a flap showing the recent Roberts in “The Old Homestead” during the run of the picture at the Ambassador.

The reading matter ran: “All the money in the world can’t beat a film to compare with the sentimental value attached to “The Old Homestead.” If you want that once-in-a-life-time thrill when you proudly say “I’ve got the h-o-m-e—I say—I’ve got the h-o-m-e all paid for, join the Greater West Phila. Blug. & Loan Assoc.”

Post Card Retraction Wins

Des Moines, Iowa.—An unusual post card proved a winner when “The Eternal Flame” was scheduled at the Des Moines. The post card read: “CORRECTION—and an Apology. It was not our intention to mislead you when we made the statement that ‘Smilin Through’ was all that the screen can give. We honestly believed it and so did the thousands of patrons who saw the attraction.

We are forced to retract our statement by announcing that what we believe to be the peer of ‘Smilin Through,’ ‘The Eternal Flame’ in which Norma Talmadge scores triumphantly, is coming to the Des Moines next week.”

Teaser Campaign Roused Interest

Dallas, Tex.—When “Flesh and Blood” played at the Old Mill, Southern Enterprises set all of Dallas talking about the picture by a smashing teaser campaign carried in the dailies and on cards.

The Times-Herald carried a neat and effective 2-column 8-inch ad nicely boxed which read: “To Whom It May Concern:

In your midst, and regarded as one of the shining lights of this city there is a man who is responsible for my present condition;—namely: Wrinkle.

Through his duplicity I have been railroaded to jail, from which I have luckily escaped. At present Detective Doyle is on my trail, but I am hidden from him. I will not be able to find me until I have accomplished my purpose. Then it will be too late.”

To this man, Fletcher Perron, I issue a fair warning—justice is blind, but justice is just. He has forbidden his son to marry my daughter. He has not played fair with the world and with me.

In flesh and blood is the kinship of love, it will remain until my purpose is accomplished.”

Shamrock, Okla.—The Garden, a 1,000 seat house, will open soon.

Magnificent Production Plus “Doug” Makes This a Bet

Douglas Fairbanks in “ROBIN HOOD”

DIRECTOR .................................................. Allan Dwan
AUTHOR .................................................. Elton Thomas SCENARIO BY ................................. Elton Thomas
CAMERAMAN ........................................ Arthur Edeson
AS A WHOLE....... Tastes like money, looks like money

STORY........ An adventurous tale of Merrie England when knights were bold and faire ladies beloved their knights, all cut, fitted and measured to Doug's personality

DIRECTION......... Very satisfactory, although at times it lagged

PHOTOGRAPHY ...... The finest outstanding feature of this tremendous production

LIGHTINGS .................................. Excellent

STAR. .................. When he is a serious knight he isn't Doug; when he is Robin Hood, he is Doug and delightful

SUPPORT ...... Wallace Beery could have been king of any old place. He is delightful as Richard. Enid Bennet is a beautiful Lady Mary. Sam De Grass is the willum. Others unimportant

EXTERIORS ...... Beyond doubt the most stupendous sets ever built for an American production

INTERIORS ....... Ditto. The money that has been spent!

DETAIL .............. Satisfies

CHARACTER OF STORY ........... Good for everybody and anybody anywhere and everywhere

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 11,000 feet

Douglas Fairbanks calls this “the greatest film show on earth.” Maybe he is right. If you swap a few adjectives in place of “greatest” you will pretty nearly hit it. Certainly it is a big show. After the intermission it is a regular Fairbanks show with Doug doing all of his spectacular and well-known athletic stunts. Before this he is a handsome, brave knight all messed up in armor and rarely showing his wonderful smile. But once he gets away from this brave knight stuff and takes off his fancy trappings and gets down to the Doug that the American picture fan loves, he is a knockout with a punch in either hand and he bowls things over in his own delightful manner until he wins the fair Lady Mary, the clinch arrives, and you leave the theater with a smile, happy in his triumph.

The less said of the opening, the better. Doug looks like a heavy, serious actor, and that isn't the Fairbanks American people love. He has spent a fortune on his production. It probably is the most expensive made—probably the finest of this kind ever attempted in this country. You can see where the money sticks out all over the place, but while those who know production values gasp, and are delighted at the pictures as they unfold in stately and magnificent precision, it is only where Doug is the nimble, light-hearted, lovable hero that the picture really gets into its own, thus demonstrating again, if it needed to be, that sets don't make pictures and that extravagance means little.

Fairbanks is to be commended, however, for his willingness to invest such a huge sum in one production. But the Fairbanks fans will be just as strong for him when he makes a “Zorro” type of picture and the exhibitors will like him just as much when they don't have to pay so heavily for the privilege of running his pictures.

Too much credit cannot be given Arthur Edeson for the magnificence and the simplicity of his photography. Allan Dwan has handled his large mobs effectively. Enid Bennet is beautiful to look at, but Wallace Beery, outside of Doug, is easily the outstanding figure in the cast. What a king among kings he is!

Why someone could not arrange to score DeKoven's famous melodies from “Robin Hood” to this production seems unanswerable. Just a bit of “Oh Promise Me” is used to the chagrin and disappointment of all who are familiar with this splendid composition.

Say “Robin Hood” is a Picture Among Pictures—It Is

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It may be some time before “Robin Hood” comes your way. It is being road-shown at this time and no one seems to have a definite idea when it will go through the natural release of United Artists. But if the chance comes you had better get this one. The first part drags a bit, but that can be excused by virtue of the gorgeous settings; and the second part shows Doug at his best.

You have so much to work with here—the cast and the sumptuous and tremendous production, the romantic old tale, and then Fairbanks. Some of his admirers may not like the make-up with the little beard, but they soon get accustomed to that. Some of them might want more of the real Fairbanks treatment, but they will be satisfied beyond doubt with what they do see and after all it is one of the biggest and most pretentious offerings of the entire season.

You needn't forget that it has been over a year since Doug gave them anything and they will be hungry. You can use this advantageously by saying that all this time he has been making “Robin Hood.” Get statistical costs of production if your people like that sort of thing. The figures are big enough to interest anybody.

Please, Dear God, Don't Let Jackie Grow Up

Jackie Coogan in "OLIVER TWIST"
DIRECTOR..........................Frank Lloyd
AUTHOR..........................Charles Dickens SCENARIO BY..........Harry Weil and Frank Lloyd CAMERAMEN........Glenn McWilliams and Robt. Martin

AS A WHOLE.....Charming, delightful, thoroughly Dickens. They will just “love” Jackie STORY......There may be one or two who don’t know their Dickens. You can forget them DIRECTION......Deserves a medal for this one. Kept it within bounds, refused to allow Jackie to clown, and the various types almost stepped out of the book, they are so real
PHOTOGRAPHY.........................Beautiful
LIGHTINGS..........................Excellent
STAR.........He hasn’t had such a chance since he made his debut in “The Kid.” What a trouper he is!
SUPPORT........Excellent. George Siegmann probably best as Bill Sikes. Lon Chaney overacts at times as Fagin. Several other important names, all good
EXTERIORS.....................Very good
INTERIORS........................Satisfactory
DETAIL..........................Well handled
CHARACTER OF STORY.......Good for any and every house
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........7,761 feet

Some day Jackie Coogan is going to grow up. He is going to lose his delightful whimsical expression. He is going to wear long pants. He is going to be an ordinary human being. But let’s hope that day is in the “Never Never Land.” Let’s hope that he never finds the elixir of youth unless he can drink sufficient to keep him what he is today—the most beloved, the most delightful, the most wonderful child that ever stepped before a camera. It is going to be a tough day for moving pictures when Jackie ceases to be Jackie and becomes Jack.

Somehow or other you can’t escape Jackie in “Oliver Twist.” You don’t want to. Frank Lloyd has made a masterpiece. He has opened the book and one by one dropped from the delightful old melodrama—because that is what it is—all of the characters that have helped to keep Dickens’ name foremost all these years. They’re there, from Fagin—at times too theatrically portrayed by Lon Chaney—to the least of them including the Artful Dodger and the melancholy Sowerberry. There is Bill Sikes and Nancy and all the rest, and they look as if they were alive.

It seems almost impossible to have been able to pull a scenario for a picture out of the tremendous detail of this work of Dickens. Many well-remembered bits are of necessity lost. Others are sketched almost too briefly, but as a whole it presents splendid entertainment. The kind that will not only bring money into your house but which will help motion pictures as a whole for many long days to come. And among all of this is Jackie—pensive, wondering, frightened, joyous, and the last shot of all showing Jackie with his unctuous grin is something that will warm the cockles of your heart and the harder boiled you are the harder it hits you.

This is a picture that the entire industry can well be proud of.

If You Pass This By—Close Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

They’re asking a lot of money for “Oliver Twist” but it’s worth it. You may be frightened and think it is a hold-up but you needn’t be. You cannot afford to let the other fellow get it.

Every once in a while—only too seldom—there comes a picture like this and the exhibitor who hasn’t a business brain sufficient to run a “Tiffany” when it comes along deserves all the kicks that he usually tries to pass to someone else.

You have so much to work with here that it seems a waste of time and energy to have to tell you about it. Every woman who visits your theater will just “love” Jackie and best of all, it will bring into your house hundreds of people who are Dickens fans and who usually do not attend picture theaters.

In addition you have besides Jackie and Dickens, the name of Frank Lloyd, a director of unusual importance and a list of stars and capable actors rarely matched in any one production. Lon Chaney has a tremendous following. Every one remembers George Siegmann from his Griffith connection. Gladys Brockwell starred; Lewis Sargent as well, and there are many others.

All you need to know is this—get it.
A superabundance of entertainment is to be had this week at the Lyric.

"Up in the Air About Mary" is a breezy little comedy with a farmhouse background, the "old swimmin' hole" and a country youth, portrayed by Joe Moore, who is by no means the beauty of the Moore family, but shares the engaging mannerisms of his brothers, Tom and Owen.

Louise Lorraine, a pretty girl, who is a blended likeness of Norma Talmadge and Mary Thurman, is the heroine, and a group of bathing beauties add to the scenic charms of the film.
"Shadows" An Artistic Production With a Splendid Cast

EXTERIORS....Good. Storm sequence inadequate INTERIORS ............................. Very good usually DETAIL ................................. Well handled

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Better see this and make up your mind how you can best put it over

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 7,040 feet

"Shadows" based on Daniel W. Steele's story "Ching Ching Chinaman" proved unusually interesting considering that the same producers' initial performance was "Rich Men's Wives." It is excellently done in the main and tells a powerful story of how a chinaman in his bland, naive, simple way proves a better Christian than either a minister of the gospel or the deacon of the church. And then, after straightening out these two and the minister's wife, and restoring happiness to the minister's home, he cuts the moorings of his laundry barge and drifts to sea to die.

Al Lichtman is commercial, if anything. Ben Schulberg has never achieved a reputation previously for desiring a place among the artistic producers but he certainly has joined the group. "Shadows" is one of the most artistically made pictures and based upon one of the most unusual themes that has ever reached the screen. Whether or not it becomes a great commercial success, certainly by their willingness to make and offer such a picture they deserve all the encouragement and support possible.

Except that the storm sequence fails to come up to what might be expected in this type of production there is little left for criticism in the production. The cast, though small, is noteworthy. Chaney as the great-souled chinaman gives a splendid characterization and Harrison Ford as the minister tormented in the belief that the former husband of his wife is alive and fearing therefore that his future and that of his wife is clouded, rises to heights that never before developed. He really gives an unusually fine performance. Marguerite De La Motte and the rest have comparatively little to do except that John Sainpolis presents a very unusual characterization as the villain, probably different from anything ever seen on the screen.

You could be told the story of this production. But to attempt this briefly would be wrong, therefore you must see it. Then you will understand just why this is an unusually fine and worthwhile picture, and then perhaps you will understand why you must be the judge as to how you will present it and what you will do with it.

Figure This One Out, Get Behind It and Get Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Some of the cleverest showmen in this business attended the premier of "Shadows." They included such exhibitors as Abe Blank of Nebraska, Sam Katz of Chicago, E. V. Richards of the Saenger Amusement Company and a number of exhibitors whose interests are not as large but who in their various communities are exceedingly important. Such for instance as Charley Hyman of Niagara Falls and others.

In talking with them as to what was best to be done with this production a variety of opinion resulted.
But it would seem that one of the best ways to attract them would be to use quotations bearing upon the theme of forgiveness because this is the punch of the picture. But you will have to see this to understand what it is all about and after you do, use your brains.

The old fashioned old time hokum won't do. The usual catchlines and cheap advertising to interest your crowd had best be forgotten. You will have to handle this one carefully.

DETAIL ................. Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Opera star wins back her husband's love by pretending to favor a divorce and his marriage to another

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

"Enter Madame," was such a thoroughly entertaining and interesting stage play that it is no wonder it was sought as a vehicle for the screen. But it does not appear that its possibilities were given a very careful consideration, otherwise it would have been rather apparent that it presented difficulties in the way of meeting the requirements of the screen. In the first place it has been given a too literal adaptation and it is impossible for the numerous sub-titles to hold the same interest that the spoken lines did, particularly those of the prima donna. It was as much Gilda Varesi's charming accent in the play, as her acting, that made her performance so completely interesting and entertaining.

Clara Kimball Yong puts considerable spirit and temperament into her work, but pantomime alone cannot make a role like this successful. Elliott Dexter has Norman Trevor's role and does not leave any unusual impression. There is no apparent conflict in his mind. It doesn't seem to make very much difference whether he remains with his wife or wins a divorce. Louise Dresser, as the other woman, is not well suited either. The cast, on the whole, works sincerely to make things convincing, but they labor under a handicap.

Wallace Worsley was supplied with a scenario that was nothing more than a direct translation of the play, almost scene for scene and line for line. In this case there should have been some elaboration or by-play to round out the theme. There is no plot and the climax, or what should have been the climax, carries no force or suspense. The last act of the play had a wallop, but they didn't get it in the picture except by the faintest suggestion. Undoubtedly the censor had to be taken into consideration.

The comedy business misses fire almost without exception, and the argument between the opera star's retinue of servants consumes footage that makes the picture drag badly at times. The film needs cutting which may speed it up somewhat.

Story: Prima Donna Lisa Della Robbia, in private life Mrs. Gerald Fitzgerald, returns from a concert tour to find that her beloved husband is planning to divorce her and marry Mrs. Flora Preston. Lisa is in love with her husband, however, and the remainder of the picture deals with her scheme to win back his love by pretending that she also has a lover and is quite a willing party to the divorce.

Star's Admirers and Those Not Familiar With Play May Be Pleased

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unfortunately "Enter Madame" is not good picture entertainment despite the fact that it was a successful stage play. At that it was not so much the play, but the way it was played, that made it good. The main trouble with the picture is that it relies mostly on sub-titles to acquaint you with facts and the sub-titles are flat in comparison with the spoken lines; some of the titles have been taken from the play.

Clara Kimball Yong's admirers and those who have not seen the play may be satisfied with the offering. Play it up with catchlines that give an idea of what it is about. You might use the angle of the opera star who won back her husband's love by pretending she didn't love him. Where they don't know about the play, better exploit the title with lines of explanation, for it is somewhat indefinite.

DIRECTION.........Fair; has not always handled situations to best advantage; production well mounted

EXTERIORS ..............Very good
INTERIORS ..............Appropriate
DETAIL .....................Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Man in doubt as to which girl he should marry looks into the future and then makes his decision
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,993 feet

The story selected as Thomas Meighan’s latest starring vehicle is a highly fictitious one that will best appeal to those who don’t object to improbabilities and such nonsense as a man seeing his life in the future as he would live it with each of the two girls he loves. Of course this is a very simple and direct means of deciding which girl it will be best to marry but the situation makes the picture one of typical “movie” concoction as far as the story is concerned.

Appeal to Star’s Admirers and Use Catchlines to Interest Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can undoubtedly satisfy the average crowd with “The Man Who Saw Tomorrow” and if Meighan has a strong following in your neighborhood, it will be a safe enough bet. Unless you know they want serious stuff and object to such highly fictitious material as that contained in this, you need not worry much about not pleasing them.

It might get a lot of attention if you use this angle of exploitation. Tell them that “The Man Who Saw Tomorrow” solves the question of “Which girl should I marry?” Use catchlines such as “Are you in doubt as to which girl you should marry? See ‘The Man Who Saw Tomorrow’ at the blank theater and find the solution to your difficulty.” Stills in the lobby, the star's name, and some of those in the cast will also be good exploitation.
For TWO YEARS George Beban and his splendid company have played in the biggest motion picture theatres of the country with an unparallelled attraction combining the art and appeal of the spoken drama with the spirit and action of the motion picture, to overwhelming business for all the nation's great first run showmen whose portraits are shown on this page.

Eight weeks for Marcus Loew; two weeks for Finkelstein and Ruben; four weeks for Balaban and Katz; two weeks this season for Fred Cornwell in St. Louis; first engagement in the last week in September; repeat engagement November 5th week.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Prime Minister of mythical kingdom attempts to oust Princess on the death of the King, but newspaper man and athlete friend rescue her after difficulties
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........6,500 feet
Made abroad Maciste's latest vehicle certainly abounds in thrills. It is full of tricks enabling him to show his strength to advantage and those who like this sort of thing will undoubtedly be pleased with this. It is the nearest thing to a serial that a picture can come and still be a feature, and while Broadway audiences may not like it, the neighborhood houses should find it a winner.

The picture, obviously foreign, seems to have been cut a good deal and the seven reels move very rapidly indeed. There is a wealth of incident, some of which could easily have been left out, but which has been dragged in to give Maciste another chance to show his strength. The story itself is of little importance to the star and his tricks which at times are exceedingly good.

A good deal of money seems to have been spent on the production, but no attempt has been made to give any of the players form or character.

Maciste does everything from lifting automobiles to pulling down a bungalow. At one point he is tied in a sack and thrown off a cliff into the sea. But even this doesn't stop him and he emerges from the sack with a knife between his teeth.

The story deals with the princess of a mythical kingdom whose Prime Minister endeavors to keep her from returning home, but a newspaper man and his athlete friend, Maciste, rescue her from situation after situation. The newspaper man falls in love and eventually marries the Princess, who gives her kingdom to her uncle, while Maciste marries her friend, the Countess.

Star and Tricks Should Please

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Use Maciste's name by all means and the fact that he was the star of "Cabiria" and will be remembered for his work in it. You can feature the thrills and the tricks because they are all there. There is plenty of excitement which should please the kids, but if your audiences like character work and story rather than serial stuff, this will not do.

If you think it will help to mention that the picture has been made abroad you can exploit this angle, as they may like to see it on this account, and also because Maciste is called the Italian Douglas Fairbanks.

CHARACTER OF STORY........Cowboy, mistaken for heir to Arabian throne, fights off an army of Arabs trying to kill him and saves an American girl's life

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION............4,400 feet

Tom Mix supplies the customary action and there is a rather colorful desert atmosphere in his latest release, "Tom Mix in Arabia." The story is not important as far as its plot is concerned, with some more or less familiar situations, but with the star providing plenty of thrills and action that is fast and mostly continuous, the picture measures up to the average, if not a little beyond, for this type of entertainment.

At the outset it looks to be a regulation western but the locale switches to Arabia where most of the action takes place. Besides some picturesque shots that make the film a bit spectacular, there is variation in the action that makes it a bit different from the usual Mix offering. Instead of the routine wild and woolly cowboy stuff, it is sheiks and desert tribes that contribute the action. There are some fine shots of desert riders and pretty locations. The one used in the climax, that of a castle at the desert's edge, is first rate. It is in this sequence that most of the thrills occur and Mix certainly works hard enough to supply them in this one reel to make up for the whole feature.

To mention a few of his stunts, there is his escape from the spot where his captors have buried him to the neck in sand, followed by his ride to the castle to save the heroine who the sheik has threatened to force into marriage with him. Mix makes a spectacular entrance into the castle, fights an army of Arabs in a series of leaps and bounds, finally exits with the girl through a window and reaches the ground by a rope. There isn't a slow minute in this part of the film and it provides a whirlwind finish. Mix is likely to take their breaths away with his speed here.

Lynn Reynolds has done good work in the production end of it and the cast is quite adequate. Claire Adams is Mix's leading lady. There isn't very much comedy business but there is action to make up for it.

Story: Ibrahim, heir to an Arabian throne, hires Billy Evans (Mix) a cowboy, to impersonate him. Billy is taken to Arabia where he is taken for Ibrahim and incurs the enmity of Hassan, a cousin, who also aspires to the throne. Hassan's band kidnaps Billy and holds him prisoner in the desert. Meanwhile Billy learns that an American girl he knows, Janice Terhune, is in the power of Hassan who intends to marry her. How Billy escapes, overpowers Hassan's band and rescues the girl completes the story.

Will Certainly Satisfy Them If They're Looking For Action

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is about the best of the star's most recent features and if they want excitement they'll be fully satisfied with "Tom Mix in Arabia." You can promise action and thrills for this one and feel sure they won't have occasion to doubt your word. Let them know that Mix offers a variation of atmosphere and action in his latest and get his admirers interested by telling them how the star outwits a sheik and his whole desert tribe.

A trailer showing a few of the stunts Mix performs in the last reel should be all you need to bring them back when you show the picture. They'll want to see more of his stunts and there are plenty of them in the last reel alone.

Very Weak Material That Gives Rawlinson No Opportunity to Make Good

Herbert Rawlinson in "ANOTHER MAN'S SHOES"
Universal

DIRECTOR ......................... Jack Conway
AUTHOR .......................... Victor Bridges
SCENARIO BY .................... Arthur Statter
CAMERAMAN ..................... Ben Reynolds
AS A WHOLE.............. Very unoriginal and too implausible to make a satisfying entertainment

STORY....... A peculiar combination of drama and comedy, neither of which will be taken seriously

DIRECTION....... Ordinary; rather helpless anyway with such material

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Average
LIGHTINGS ....................... All right
STAR............................... Adequate in dual role SUPPORT............. Fulfill requirements that don't ask much of them; Jean De Briac, Barbara Bedford, Harry Carter and Una Trevelyn

EXTERIORS ....................... Few
INTERIORS ........................ Suitable
DETAIL .................. Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Man sought by avenging band hires another to impersonate him but is finally killed while impersonator wins the girl avenger

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,700 feet

And again the old impersonation theme comes to the front in "Another Man's Shoes." Last week it was "Another Man's Boots," with very much the same idea. The story doesn't vary from the many others that have preceded it and again a man assumes the identity of another with the usual resulting complications. This time they bring in a slightly new situation—that of a Queen and her band seeking revenge for the death of the Queen's father. This is new only in its connection with the assumed identity theme. Otherwise it is the familiar vendetta business.

Incidentally this part won't be taken seriously and the movements of the vendetta band will get laughs where they are not intended. The players seldom appear to take their work of killing the enemy in earnest and when they finally do get their man there is little ado about the murder. It is a highly implausible story in which a very rich man hires another who looks very much like him (impossibly so) to take his place for a certain length of time. The idea is that the rich man is pursued by a vendetta crowd and he is in hopes that they will kill his "double" instead of himself.

The director saw fit to brighten this absurd situation with some comedy touches that are pretty poor. One bit is where the avenger, believing he is stabbing the enemy, merely punctures a water bottle the enemy had substituted in his place. You are expected to laugh when the water spurts in the assailant's face.

Herbert Rawlinson is the rich man and the substute. His work is satisfactory except that he forces smiles continually and there are too many close-ups that give him a chance to do this. Barbara Bedford is the leading lady. The double exposures where Rawlinson appears in both characters at once is very badly done in some shots.

Story: Queen Marcia Salano seeks Stuart Granger who killed her father. Granger realizes that he is being hunted so he hires Jack Burton to impersonate him. When Marcia attacks Burton, but is foiled, she falls in love with him and is then kept busy keeping her accomplices from fulfilling the vendetta. The real Granger returns unexpectedly and Marcia's men kill him. It is then that Burton tells Marcia who he really is, with the usual ending.

You Might Chance It If You Know They Are Easily Pleased

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you think there is a possibility of pleasing them with such a weak picture as this one, you can probably satisfy them with anything. Rawlinson's latest is the poorest picture he had made in some time; and it is due chiefly to the very weak material they have given him. Picture goers are tired of having the same plots handed to them time and again. They want original stuff and they don't care how the producers get it.

It may stand a better chance where they like Rawlinson real well. Don't try to strengthen his following by promises for what he does in this. Barbara Bedford is well enough known to use her name. Catchlines will let them know the story but you can depend upon the title to give the gist of it without much further comment.
Weak Story Suffers From Inefficient Direction

John Gilbert in
"THE LOVE GAMBLER"
Fox

DIRECTOR ......................... Joseph Franz
AUTHORS.............Lillian Bennet-Thompson and Geo. Hubbard
SCENARIO BY ................. Jules Furthman
CAMERAMAN ......................... Joe August

AS A WHOLE......A suitable picture for the average "fan" audience; slight and unoriginal situations

STAR....... Might do something worth while if they'd give him a good story

SUPPORT ........ Adequate; Carmel Myers, lead; others Bruce Gordon, William Lawrence, James Gordon, Barbara Tennant

EXTERIORS .............. All right
INTERIORS .............. Suitable

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Hero tames horse and woman by whistling a tune

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,682 feet

"The Love Gambler" is the sort of story that will probably be approved by the typical "fan" crowd but where they are the least bit particular and demand bright, original stories, this one isn't going to satisfy. With two authors it would seem that they might have conceived something more sensible than situations such as these: a man taming a wild broncho by whistling a tune and compelling a girl who hates him to kiss him merely by whistling the same tune. Instead of going over the way it should, this twist is going to register the wrong way. They'll probably laugh at it although it isn't intended to be humorous.

Another very brilliant situation is that in which a dying woman who hero has befriended, begs him to marry her in order to give her fatherless child a name. So far so good, but when the doctor says she will recover—then hero is in a tight place. The girl he is going to marry arrives on the scene. Complications and then some. There is no other way out. The suddenly acquired wife must die because the little child has overheard the conversation in which hero tells his sweetheart he cannot marry her because he has already sacrificed himself. The idea is quite ridiculous and two to one they won't take it seriously.

John Gilbert is a pleasing enough hero and displays a rather likeable personality. He might develop into a good drawing card if Fox would only secure some decent stories for him. Such implausible themes as "Calvert's Valley" and "The Love Gambler" won't get him very much of a following, at least where it will count.

Joseph Franz provides a satisfactory production and the supporting cast is adequate. He might have handled the twists previously mentioned in better fashion, at least in a way that would make them not as conspicuously nonsensical. The photography is of the usual standard. Gilbert is allowed too many close-ups and the director should not have allowed him to pose so frequently lighting cigarettes, even though he does it gracefully.

Story: Dick Manners wagers that he will not only ride Col. McClelland's wild horse but that he will also kiss his haughty daughter, Jean. Dick accomplishes both feats and gets a job on the McClelland ranch. He is ordered off when he declares his love for Jean. Later Dick marries a woman who is dying, in order to give her child a name. Jean admires him for it, forgives him and they are happy—after the other woman dies.

Star Can Be Exploited But Needs Better Material to Gain a Following

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There's one angle on this one that will probably attract a good deal of attention if you try to get them interested. Let them know about the tune Gilbert whistles, telling them it is a sure cure for taming either women or horses. The feature will do well enough in the second or third class houses but folks patronizing first runs will hardly accept such a story as this.

You might exploit Gilbert as one of the latest Fox stars although they'll have to start giving him worth while stories if they want to sell the pictures on the strength of his name. With a good strong story he could probably make a very good showing. The title can be played up with catchlines and the usual stills in the lobby and newspaper readers should exploit it sufficiently.

Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge Podge" No. 2600—Educational

Type of production..............1 reel scenic and cartoon combination

This is the first number of a new series released by Educational and made by Lyman H. Howe which is most correctly titled "Hodge Podge." The reel is a combination of animated cartoon cutouts doing different things and these are interspersed with scenic shots. A good deal of the material used is clever and the novelty of the offering is bound to appeal. The cartoons have been handled in an entirely new manner, fitting together like jigsaw puzzles. The first subject in the reel has not been so wisely chosen as an opening. It would have been better to have it come later in the reel. It deals with an animated cartoon of a cameraman who tries to photograph a cut-out shot of a waterfall which continually evades him, turning upside down, etc. Its novelty however is sure to be liked, and will make a pleasing short reel for almost any house.

"The Romantic Mouse"—Aesop's Fables—Pathe

Type of production.....................1 reel cartoon

This cartoon reel is entertaining as well as amusing and there is only one fault, if it can be called one. That is, that the moral quoted at the end of the reel does not apply entirely to the action and leaves one slightly confused at the finish. But the animation and the subject matter are altogether very good and the reel will prove a pleasing addition to any bill. In this fable Thomas Cat, roller-skating champion, proves a desperate rival to Milton Mouse in his wooing of Lizzie Mouse, with such effect that Milton resolves to kill himself. He jumps off cliffs, lies down on railroad tracks, shoots himself, but to no avail. However, through his bravery, he finally wins his love.

Graphic 2543—Educational

Type of production.....................1 reel magazine

This number of the Graphic is above the average in interest. One wonders how the shots of the moonshiners and their still in full force were obtained, and whether the authorities will not be able to recognize them. Glimpses of Manhattan at a lunch show interesting types of city dwellers making the most of the noon hour. Miss Adelie Gerig, America's foremost woman fencer gives some demonstrations of the art, and the Ollendorf cartoon which is especially good closes the reel.

"Blue Blood and Red"—Timber Tales—Universal

Type of production.....................2 reel drama

The opening footage of this series leads one to think that the pictures have been made under the supervision of some forestry service dealing as the titles do, with the conservation of trees, but after this the action moves smoothly up to the climax of a drama centering around Jim Allen the foreman of Frazier's lumber camp. A falling tree pins Frazier beneath it and Jim rescues him, thus antagonizing the superintendent, Archer. Jim's suspicions of Archer are aroused and Archer makes his getaway by jumping on a passing train, pursued by Allen, who overtakes him at the end of the run and in a thrilling fight on a swaying scaffold captures him. There is plenty of action, thrills and a bit of a love story to complete the action.

"The Haunted House"—Sunshine Comedy—Fox

Type of production.....................2 reel comedy

This is one of the funniest Sunshine comedies they've shown in quite a while because it is new stuff and will get a lot of laughs, dealing as it does, with the radio craze. It has some good gags and more weight than the average slap-stick number. The girl's father finds that the "busy" hotel he purchased has been idle so long that the last to register are "Abraham Lincoln and wife." That's a good laugh and the weeds growing in the lobby is another good bit that contributes a further laugh when the negro porter starts cleaning up with a scythe. They get some amusement out of the radio, including a marriage. Some of the spook stuff is familiar but it furnishes good amusement. It is a first rate two-reel comedy and they'll like it.

"The Golf Bug"—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production.....................1 reel comedy

This is another burlesque on golf and Paul Parrott is cast in the title role. He slapped golf balls around to the damage of everything and everybody in sight, both on the links and in his home. The slapstick stuff in which his father is trying to get into the room where Paul is practising and gets hit innumerable in the effort is too brutal to be altogether amusing, though it may get over if your audience likes this sort of thing. There is a laugh in the stunt which the villain pulls, putting a hop-load inside a hollow golf ball which jumps every time Parrott tries to hit it.

"Choose Your Weapons"—Christie—Educational

Type of production.....................2 reel comedy

Bobby Vernon is the star of this two reeler, which is influenced it seems by the craze for the costume picture. Not to be left out, "Choose Your Weapons" embodies a little bit of several "big" pictures of the year. There is Fairbanks' duel on the stairs, Von Stroheim's eye-glass and sneer, and court costumes from "Knighthood" mixed together with a bit from McCutcheon's "Graustark." Even the name of the kingdom is "Crowsfoot." Bobby, of course, is the dashing American who rescues the princess from a distasteful marriage. He has duels without number and is really funny at times. The picture is very entertaining and should prove a winner with most audiences. The dream stunt at the end has been done before but is funny. Bobby is to be shot when a bugle blows, but the sound of the bugle wakes him to find he is safe on shipboard and has dreamed it all.

"Hook Line and Sinker"—Pathe

Type of production.....................2 reel comedy

Fish of every kind and variety are introduced in Snub Pollard's latest vehicle, "Hook, Line and Sinker." There is a free-for-all fishing contest which the man catching the largest fish will win. While a jury box full of solemn judges sit waiting with scales and foot-rules, the contestants rush madly to the dock. Every fisherman is successful except Snub. Vainly he tries every manner and means, but the fish are against him, as well as the fishermen. He cannot beg, borrow or steal one lone fish. In despair he changes his bait to swiss cheese and catches—ah tiny mouse! If your folks like Snub they will surely like him in this, as it is really funny in spots.
“Blazes”—Educational
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
This comedy offering while it may appeal to some audiences derives its laughs from accidents or other unpleasant happenings such as burning houses, blowing newspapers, soot, falling soup, etc. It is slapstick unashamedly, and as such, may be liked by certain audiences. Lige Conley and Jack Lloyd have the leading roles. The plot, if there is one, is smothered by the different disasters that occur in quick succession throughout the picture.

“The Bar Cross War”—Pathe
Type of production........................................2 reel western Leo Maloney scores again in this two reeler which contains a goodly share of action. The outstanding feature of the picture is a corking good bullet fight with sustained action. The plot deals with the cattleman’s aversion to sheep-herders. One of them befriends an exhausted traveller who is mistaken for a herder by some ranchmen. When Maloney becomes his champion against the ranchmen, a desperate fight proves the supposed herder to be the rancher’s brother.

“Ginger Face”—Century—Universal
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
Johnny Fox’s freckles inspire the title of this two reeler which is a good clean entertaining comedy with little colored Sammy lending much to its fun. Johnny is left behind accidentally by his parents. Although he looks like mother’s darling, he has a lot of muscle and Sammy adopts him as promising paglistic material. A funny touch is given when the kids find a sheet hanging out to dry and cut a hole in it through which Sammy sticks his head, which has a white spot painted in the middle. The first customer that tries to hit the target is more than surprised when the ball bounces back from the darkies head and catching him in the jaw knocks him out.

“The Solitary Cyclist”—Sherlock Holmes—Educational
Type of production........................................2 reel drama
Here is another of the Sherlock Holmes stories released bi-monthly by Educational, with Eille Norwood in the leading role. Norwood’s performance is the most enjoyable feature of the stories, although they in themselves are very good and sustain the interest all the way through. This one deals with the adventures of a young governess who is the unknowing heir to her uncle’s money. She is constantly followed by three men, one of whom, the “solitary cyclist,” falls in love with her. She is accosted on the road and is being forced into a marriage when the detective and his assistant, Dr. Watson arrive to rescue her.

“Soldiers of Fortune”—Rialto Prod.—State Rights
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
This is another of the very clever and cute “funny face” series where the dolls, including the little pickaninny have a lot of fun. The producers have inserted the Max Fleisher idea into this one by showing the artists working producing the scene. The actual picture shows the dolls summoned to warfare. The pickaninny tries to evade service with his flat feet and there is some rather funny business showing the soldiers with the realistic bomb and shell background closing with one of them being attended by a red-cross Nurse which leads the pickaninny to “lose his head” not only literally but figuratively. This is the tag line of the show which is very funny. Should please most any audience. Not riotous but just good fun and clean.

“Henpecked Harry”—Aesop’s Fable—Pathe
Type of production........................................1 reel cartoon comedy
This fable is entirely up to the high average set by this series, and should not fail to please if your audience likes them. Harry Dog, though loving his own fireside is finally forced by Mrs. Dog to hunt a job. Seeing a sign “Brave men wanted” on the police station, he applies for the position, and is sent to capture a desperate bandit who has killed many a good dog. Harry proves an all-around hero in every way until he is recaptured by Mrs. Dog, proving the moral “No Man is a hero in his own home.”

“A Model Messenger”—Universal
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
Lewis Sargent is again seen as a messenger boy in this comedy which is sure to please his followers. Sargent has a personality that gets over no matter what he does, and in this one reeler he is engaged to a very pretty girl. He buys her an engagement ring in the ten-cent store and everything is lovely until he is called upon to deliver a wax model. Thinking he’ll fool the boys, he passes them by in his little flivver with his arm around the model. But Mary sees him and leaving his ring at the office, breaks her engagement. However, she comes back at night to make up. After some more complications involving another eloping couple, they all go to the marriage bureau to sit on the steps until it opens. The story moves along smoothly and while not extremely funny, holds the attention.

Graphic No. 2545—Educational
Type of production........................................1 reel magazine
Opening with a southern society ball showing the popular dances now in vogue abroad, this number of The Graphic moves interestingly on to St. Louis, where a traffic officer’s job is analyzed. A very thrilling bit is next inserted showing a lion and his family in the jungle being disturbed accidentally by a hunter. The hunter when confronted by the lion decides not to shoot but the lion will not let him go. After a struggle which will have them on the edge of their seats the lion is stabbed to death and then—you find that it wasn’t a real battle at all, but simply done before a camera, and the lion is a tame one. Scenes drawn in pen and ink by the artist fade into the actual photographs of the places drawn and complete the issue.

Pathe Review No. 180
Type of production........................................1 reel magazine
An interesting feature of this Pathe Review is titled “The Jungle Fash Mail” and shows how natives dispatch mail in the heart of Africa both by foot, water and camel back. “Grandpop,” the 300 year old tortoise at the New York Zoological Park is introduced. There is an interesting chemical demonstration showing how heat may be obtained without fire, and some good scenic shots of mountain lakes.

“The Fresh Kid”—Universal
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
Johnny Fox who is starred in this two reeler is far and away the best thing in it. He is the regulation freckled-faced bad boy only more so, and will surely please. The story built around him is slight, dealing with his beautiful sister who is persuaded to elope with a city feller after stealing the cash from her father’s grocery store. Johnny overhears them and brings them back. He is given plenty of opportunity to do “smart” tricks and he never misses a chance.

Business Spotty
S. R. Kent Finds the Outlook Far From Normal—No Place for Poor Pictures
S. R. Kent of Famous Players, probably one of the best-informed men in the industry as to business conditions, answering the question of what the immediate future prospects of business are, says:

"Good" pictures are going to do an increasingly good business. Poor attractions are still a drag on the market and are worth less less than nothing at the Box Office.

"The man who is making quality negatives, and the exhibitor who is running quality pictures, have nothing to fear, in my opinion, if they operate their business along conservative lines and strange extravagance and waste.

"We are not back to normal conditions. Surely none of us are optimistic enough to try and base future business on the things that happened during the war and the year after. However, the new normal line of the future will represent a volume of business from which a fair profit can be made for both the good exhibitor and the good producer.

"There are many spots in this country today that are still in deplorable condition. There is no use to kid ourselves that we have entirely recovered from our slump, because we have not.

"This is no time to go crazy. We are still facing many serious problems. While business is very good in many individual spots, in my opinion, it is going to take at least another year, if not two years, to bring the Mining and Agricultural sections of the country back to anywhere near normal basis."

Accounting
Rendering unto Caesar. The things that are Caesar's. Not trying to be eloquent. But, that is what Will Hays is doing. Just sent out a letter to the 700 odd editors. Who gave him a dinner. Last April. At which time the General told him what he had in mind. And now. After six months. He renders his accounting. And it's worth while. It's important. It's the court record. Of achievement. Of doings. He reports to them. As an executive might. To his Board of Directors. And after all. That's what the editors are. To this industry. And it is fitting and proper. That they should know. Just what he has done. Briefly he sketches the result. The "development of a new spirit of confidence and cooperation within the industry." The welfare work. The educational. Coupling in the Natl. Education Assn. And the Federal Commissioner of Education. The desire for a better type of picture. And then he lists some. To show in what direction. The effort is being made. It's a good list. A fine list. A sort of Roll of Honor. Not of producers' results. But of accomplishment. And he closes. By being "hopeful" for the future. He should be. Never has it looked brighter.

Will Have Bronx House for Next Season—Comment on the Deal
Marcus Loew has practically completed arrangements with F. W. Winik and others interested in the property on Burnside Ave., near the Concord, in the Bronx, to take over the house. It will be completed by next season and will have 2,500 seats.

Commenting on the move, a member of the T. O. C. C., said: "I hope that this doesn't again demonstrate that there are too many houses trying to get business. It may be that in the particular spot where the new house is going up there it is room, but, this is sure—there are far too many houses in the Bronx now for the business that is in sight. At all events this only adds fuel to the idea that a booking concern is needed; because with Loew breaking into another neighborhood those exhibitors affected will begin to have their troubles with the Loew booking affecting their showings."

Snuggle Pups Exploit ‘Trouble’
Sandusky, O.—George J. Schade of the Schade displayed a cage of snuggle pups in front of his theater during the run of Jackie Coogan’s ‘Trouble’ and the youngsters of Sandusky were asked to pick out Jackie’s favorite. It was a stunt for the kiddies purely but adults took an interest in watching the boys and girls around the cage. More than 500 names were turned in as a result of the stunt.

Two Weeks Publicity Drive
Atlanta, Ga.—Manager DeSales Harrison kept the names of the pictures running at the remarkable cost for the run of “The Fighting Streak.”

An extensive newspaper advertising drive preceded the opening and continued throughout the run. Teaser ads ran for three days prior to the announcement display.

Small envelopes imprinted with words: “Are You A Quitter? or Have You Got The Fighting Streak,” and containing a card with the legend: “They asked Tom Mix the same question. See how he answered them at the County all next week,” were distributed through a number of local stores, bakeries and shoe stores. More than 10,000 of these were given out.

Newspaper announcements told that free passes to see the show would be found in 200 of the envelopes.

This made the public anxious to get the envelopes and in order to do so it was necessary to patronize the retail stores distributing them. By thus increasing their sales the proprietors were more than willing to pay the expense of the stunt.

Cards, six by four inches in size, were hung on door-knobs, automobi- lies and telephones throughout the city. They bore this message: “Are You A Quitter? or Have You Got The Fighting Streak.”

Film Folk Up Against Difficult Conditions in Referendum Battle in Massachusetts

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Boston — While some interested deeply in the fight to win against the Censorship referendum are optimistic over the result of Tuesday's battle, others, more conservative, declare that there is no reason to be exultant. They say the battle is being carried too hard, and that the film folk have the fight of their long existence here. If the proposed censorship is defeated it will prove surprising to some old timers who have had long experience in these battles.

Charles H. Cole, in charge of the fight although not a film man, is making a real showing. The campaign is exacting in its detail, and if the workers carry on as they should the film folk will make a great showing.

The situation as it stands is that the censorship idea wins out within a few years there will be censorship in every New England State.

T. O. C. C. Meeting Wednesday

The regular meeting of the T. O. C. C. will be held on Wednesday afternoon, at the Astor Hotel, Chicago, at 2 o'clock, pending account of Tuesday being election day.

A Unique Lunch

The lunch tendered yesterday at the Majestic Hotel to John M. Stahl and Reginald Barker proved a very unique affair. Among those present were Harry O. Schwalbe and Richard A. Rowland, of First National; W. W. Atkinson, general manager of Metro, and James R. Grainger of Goldwyn, who expressed themselves as enthusiastic over the product of the Mayer directors, who include Fred Niblo, in addition to those mentioned, and gave the impression that these pictures would be valuable to any releasing organization.

In connection with this it is of interest that First National have but one release, in April, before Stahl release through First National, and the Mayer contract then expires. Metro will release the Niblo product. Who will secure the Stahl productions has not yet been determined.

Harry Reichenbach acted as toastmaster and was as witty as usual. Others who spoke were Mayer, Robert H. Rubin, his attorney, representatives of other firms, and others. Stahl unfortunately was unable to attend owing to the serious illness of his mother.

It is understood that “Salome” will open as a $2 show on Broadway about Jan. 1st. Charles Bryant, husband of the star, is conducting the negotiations for a theater.

Sam Sax on Trip

Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, left yesterday on a sales trip through the Middle West in the interests of Will Nigh’s “Notoriety” and the projected Nigh series. His itinerary will include Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Indian- apolis and may take him to the West Coast.

Rowland’s Statement

Talks of First National’s Production and Advertising Plans—Promises of Radical Changes

Richard A. Rowland issued his first statement yesterday since becoming general manager of Asso. First National Pictures, succeeding J. D. Williams. He spoke highly of Williams ability, promised no radical changes because of his connection with the organization, and stated at length on the various reports relative to First National entering production “on a big scale.”

With reference to this Rowland said:

"It is true that we may produce some pictures in accordance with certain ideas formulated by our directors at the recent meeting, but such production will take the direction of our company to build up a vast organization and studios and itself become a big competitor in the production field.

"We represent a great many fine theaters which offer a ready market. We cannot possibly produce enough pictures to supply these theaters, which require really big time attractions. Our experience has demonstrated that the individual producer who devotes his time and attention to the making of his pictures, one by one, will turn out a more artistic product than we could possibly obtain in mass production. Therefore the independent producer will always find an outlet through our organization for the very good reason that our future is connected with his.

"For example, we have recently contracted with M. C. Glass of The Glass Brothers to produce two pictures to be directed by Maurice Toussaint, the first of which will be Crittenden's Morari's novel of romance and adventure, 'The White Frontier' and the second will also do "The White Frontier" at the United Studios. Edwin Carewe is at present completing a picture at the Biograph Studios, the title of which has not been decided upon. Sam Rork and Jimmie Young left for the coast last week with a contract for several James Young Productions. Mr. Young has still to direct "Tribute," for Richard Walton daily, before beginning upon his own series. Negotiations are under way with several other producers and we believe that our company is interested with these gentlemen, it is upon much the same general lines as our former productions. In a word, our policy will be to encourage capable directors to improve their production, for there is no doubt of the strong public demand for better pictures, and we shall most exclusively make pictures.

With the demand for a constantly improving grade of pictures, there has also arisen the necessity for some sort of national advertising and exploitation upon national advertising which will prove of real help to the box office. We realize the difficulty and complexity of the problem and are testing several methods with the object of ascertaining what kind of advertising to use and how much money to spend in order to benefit without burdening the exhibitors with increased rentals. After all is said and done, national advertising which does not increase the press and does not help the box office will be of no value to the industry. The really good picture will sell, no matter how good because of word of mouth advertising."
Cuts and Flashes

Charles Walton has been engaged to do the castings for "Chronicles of America," now in production at Whitestone, L. I.

Edward Phillips has been engaged by Cosmopolitan to play a leading part in "The Nth Commandment."

Rodolph Valentino was among the speakers at the third meeting of the Actors' Equity Players.

"What the Equity players are doing on the stage, should be done on the screen," he said.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are scheduled to appear Friday night at the opening of the Children's theater, Fifth Ave. and 105th St.

"Between Worlds" is ready for release by Artclass. Katherine Stuart has been editing and titling it.

Newspaper Opinions
"To Have and to Hold"—Paramount Pictures

AMERICAN—It was a most industrious picture, and when it was over you recalled the name of Valentino—which was as it should be.

TRIBUNE—He (Valentino) is such a good actor that he never appears to be acting and in his present picture he is truly magnificent and abetted by a director and a writer who believe that you may hold the mirror up to nature and still get a good movie.

DAILY NEWS—Valentino Post No. 1 of the Flappers Legion ought to have a work-fulfertime provided they do not try to keep track of the story.

MORNING TELEGRAM—It will doubtless be a sale prediction that "The Young Rajah," like "The Sheik," will be one of this year's financial successes.  * Photographically and from the standpoint of direction, it cannot approach "Blood and Sand," or any of Rudolph Valentino's lesser successes.

SUN—Except when Rudolph Valentino has a powerful story and direction that holds him strictly to the mark he is apt to lapse into merely a pretty boy.

EVE. WORLD—Valentino has the chance of his lifetime to do everything heroic and be everything heroic.  * To the admirers of Valentino's they are legion—"The Young Rajah" will come as a welcome addition to the year's pictures. But to those who do not care especially for him (and, strange as it may seem to you), this picture will not especially appeal. "The Young Rajah" cannot be compared to the other films of the star—its quota of sex is not as large as in many of them. It will, no doubt, ride to overwhelming success on this screen idol's wide wave of popularity.

EVE. TELEGRAM—Another interesting characterization. One of the most touching scenes is with Valentino in the role of "Hood."

JOURNAL—Valentino, in several picturesque costumes, makes a psychic figure.  * There are a number of decorative scenes. The story is sufficiently unusual to be interesting.

MAIL—It's a weird, wholly unconvincing hodgepodge of a picture, and theHowzit! truth may as well be told at once to those who have been seduced by his heart-throbs. He hasn't done much better work than he displays in this effusion.

Exhibitors claim that these instances were isolated, in fact confined to but three cases, and that the first exhibitor had but to complain to the manager to a repetition of the offense; and that such conduct was not endorsed by them as a body. On the other hand, some of the independents claim that as Jansen & Von Herberg cannot possibly assimilate the entire season's product, there is high class service—ability to be had by the exhibitor apart from the features in question.

There are 49 second run houses in Portland, changing hands each week. Where the four J. & V. houses can only show 208 fresh films a week on a weekly basis, the exhibitor must buy a six-change policy to use 321 changes.

It is understood that Jansen & Von Herberg having reduced to the lesser restriction of 60 days, which applies to all houses but three specified by them. A number of exchanges have refused to participate in the contest, booking service as usual in Portland.

Famous Gets French Actor
Charles de Roche, a French actor, will star on his picture next Saturday, to take the role in "A Spanish Cavalier," which Famous Players had originally allotted to Rodolph Valentino.

It is said that de Roche is of much the same type as Valentino. He will be filmed in "The Law of the Lawless," to be made at the Long Island City studios with Dorothy DeBorba.

Famous Players executives first noticed de Roche when he was seen in "Spanish Jade." At that time he was programmed as "Charles de Rochefort."

Tom Terriss specials are expected to do the same thing, and to maintain the program, (for the time being) the feature which Charles Hutchinson will make for Ideal, will be offered to America, as it is confidently expected that there will be little difficulty in arranging a satisfactory sale.

Those who remember the situation during the Great War, say that American producers were at that time assured of from 35 to 50 per cent of negative costs from the foreign market alone, and in many instances, a great deal more than 50 per cent of the negative cost was realized.

Hays’ Statement

Says Industry Accepts Responsibility Developing From Mass. Result

Will H. Hays issued the following statement yesterday, regarding the vote on motion picture censorship in Massachusetts:

"Censorship of motion pictures has been defeated in Massachusetts in a direct vote of the people by a majority of three hundred and forty thousand. This overwhelming vote against censorship is a splendid response to the appeal of the Press and citizens of that state that the Commonwealth 'come to the rescue' against this undue political aggression. Just as certainly it is a definite and unmistakable challenge to the motion picture industry to carry out its program for its own continual improvement in the full discharge of its duty to the public. This responsibility is accepted by the industry in the spirit of highest service, and it will, in grateful earnestness, fully discharge this duty.'

Cohen's Comment

Says the Defeat of Censorship is a Triumph for Americanism

Sidney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O., who has been very active in the fight for Smith, said:

"The defeat of motion picture censorship in Massachusetts at the hands of the voters in that state Tuesday is a triumph for Americanism and the inherent right of free speech and free expression. Thinking Americans everywhere regard the censorship of the screen with mingled feelings of suspicion and disgust. They know that it threatens the freedom of speech and the freedom of the Press, so inseparably associated with the founding and development of our Republic. They know that the Motion Picture Screen is the visualized development of the Freedom of the Press." (Continued on Page 2)

Nothing to Say

Attitude of State Censor Commission on Tuesday's Election Result

It was practically impossible to obtain a statement from the State Censor Film Commission yesterday as to the result of Tuesday's election. Joseph A. Levenson, of the Commission, apparently the only member of the Commission on hand, after declaring he was very busy and had no time for interviews, said:

"I don't care to express any opinion. I have been in politics a long time and it is a see-saw game. We are up one year and down the next."

Danny, in this very paper, speaking of "Shadows," says it is "an artistic production with a splendid cast," and that the story "has tremendous theme." Need his words and get in touch with your Al Lichtman exchange.—Advt.

A Great Day

Tuesday was probably the most eventful day in the entire history of motion pictures.

Not only was a proposed censorship in Massachusetts overwhelmingly defeated, but Runyon, the Gubernatorial candidate in New York who favored censorship, was defeated. In New York the party that espoused censorship was given the worst defeat in history, and Alfred E. Smith, whose platform favors a repeal of the existing censorship, was elected Governor. It is to be hoped that Governor Smith carries with him into office a sufficient majority in the Legislature to repeal the present act.

But just as Will Hays says in his statement, found elsewhere, the result in Massachusetts carries a challenge to this industry; a challenge as direct as it is formidable—that pictures shall be kept clean. And to General Hays' expression may be added this: they must be. For the voice of Massachusetts is but the voice of all of the people of this country. They don't want censorship. But they do want—and must have—good, clean pictures.

Cohen's Comment

Screen Press of America. They say that the control of this great medium of expression is in the hands of the publisher. Its visualized messages reach millions of people daily, speaking through the universal language of the eye, is a menace to liberty and opposed to Jefferson's immortal expression that a 'Free Press is Liberty's Greatest Bulwark.'

"The American people won't submit to a political censorship of the press in any of its divisions. They know it is right. The open, deliberate action of the people of Massachusetts yesterday in defeating censorship of the motion pictures proves this. This verdict for a free press and a free screen will have a salutary effect in all parts of the country and will eventually eliminate censorship everywhere and leave the screen with its wonderful powers for public service free and unrestrained in the service of the people of Nation, State and Community.

We congratulate the People of Massachusetts on their sound American verdict on this question. The Motion Picture Theater Owners of Massachusetts aided by the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, with the cooperation of other divisions of our industry and many freedom loving people and organizations in Massachusetts are responsible for this great victory for press and screen freedom, thus insuring the preservation of popular rights against all repressive influences.

This statement was forwarded to Massachusetts exhibitors for use in newspapers of that state.

"The Covered Wagon" is on the Way!

The progress that has been made on "The Covered Wagon," now in the process of filming in the American desert, ninety miles from the railroad, justifies the statement that it will be unlike anything the screen has ever seen.

No picture has ever been made on a scale of such magnitude. Three thousand actors, 300 wagons, 600 oxen, 1,000 Indians, hundreds of horses and mules are a few of the enormous items.

One of the thrills of the picture will be a buffalo hunt. Five hundred buffaloes are used, this being the only remaining herd in existence. No such scene can ever be taken again.

Other thrills will be a prairie fire that will cover miles of territory, and an attack of Indians on the two-mile wagon train.

James Cruze is producing the picture from the story by Emerson Hough.

Woman's Home Companion Joins In Making Two-reeler Taken From Its Articles

The Woman's Home Companion will soon present a series of two-reel pictures taken from leading articles appearing in the magazine and dealing chiefly with American home life. The A. F. Film Co., Inc., is now producing these films at the Estee studios. They will be released through Alexander Film Corp., shortly after the appearance of the basic stories in the magazine.

Each month, Gertrude B. Lane, editor of Woman's Home Companion, will select a leading article as the theme for the motion picture. The first release will be "This Wife Business," taken from the article, "What is Your Market Value, Madame?" by Alice Ames Winter, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which will appear in the January issue. This deals with the economic value of the housewife, and is based on the survey of work done by women in the home made by the U. S. census bureau.

The first is the deal just consummated by which Pictorial Clubs Inc. acquires non-theatrical rights to the Kineto Library of Urban Popular Classics. About 300 reels are now ready for distribution, with more to come chosen from a enormous amount of negative now on hand.

The second is the re-organization of the company as a New York corporation. Incorporation papers are now in Albany. The president will be W. W. Kenedy, president of the Sojolla Corset Co. of Niagara Falls. This will succeed the old firm, a Tennessee corporation, of which W. R. Kelly is president. Kelly will remain with the new firm in an important executive capacity.

Non-Star System

Priscilla Threlfall and Virginia Valli, stars of Jewel productions, will not be affected.

Both the non-star and star productions will be released as Universal attractive.

"We do not wish entirely to discard the star system which has proved successful for a long time," said a Universal official, "but we will make a thorough trial of the non-star system for 'The Long Chance' and 'Hill' having the satisfaction that non-star pictures will be drawn. We are going to pay more attention to stories and less to the individual star.

"Casual players with a fan following will appear in these pictures and no part will be subordinated. Every player will be given a chance to 'steal the picture.' Our experiments have convinced us that this will be a paying production, and we mean to follow it through."

In the Courts
Supreme Court Justice Grierer has directed judgment for $2,650 against the Clinical Film Co., in a suit by Albin R. Warren to recover commissions earned by him as camera man at $150 a week in 1920.

In the suit of Louis Houskins Rogers and Nat. I. Brown against Mayflower Photoplay Corp. for severance, the court has given them a judgment in the amount of $2,500 on the ground that the papers were not served on Mayflower in 30 days as required by law.

Supreme Court Justice McAvoy has directed Harry Reichenbach to rely to defenses set up by the George Clark Pictures, Ltd., in the suit for $27,000 on a charge of Harry Reichenbach in which an attachment was obtained. The de-ences, which must be answered were the agreements were not obtained and that on July 4th last, Reichenbach signed a release of claims under the contract in consideration that Reichenbach would not make a claim on another transaction.

Supreme Court Justice McAvoy has vacated the temporary injunction obtained by Edward M. James restraining Select Pictures and Lewis S. Kellogg from making a contract with Kempton Pictures to which James lent $35,000 for distribution on a commission basis of 16 re-issues of Norms and Constance Tal-ders Clara Kimball Young and Alice Ready pictures.

Mr. Selznick denied in an affidavit that he authorized persons to lend the money to Kenmpton and Irshorn and that he made false statements in a suit by Albin R. Warren to recover commissions. Kempton cross-questioned Mr. Selznick.

He said he told him that $25,000 would not be enough to cover the cost of the pictures that told him they would get additional capital.

The big scenes were well accomplished."

You Can Do What Other Exhibitors Have Done!
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Personal Endorsement Convines

Seattle, Wash.—John Hamrick of the Blue Mouse has always kept faith with his public so that when he personally endorsed Charles Ray's "A Tailor-Made Man" as his idea of real entertainment. The Blue Mouse has never played a finer picture. (Signed) John Hamrick. His patrons found the picture played to big business.

Wallace Reid's Hat

Buffalo, N. Y.—Manager Vincent McCaul, of Shea's Hippodrome and Harry Royster, Paramount exploiter, enrolled a piece of Wallace Reid wearing a Mallory hat in "Nice People" to about three feet in width for display in the window of the local agency's hat store. This stunt will probably be widely worked for the manufacturers of the Mallory hat have been tied up by Paramount for a national campaign.

Men of 60 Admitted Free

Bute, Mont.—Manager Merle Davis of the Ansonia and Frank H. Burns of Goldwyn advertised free admission to men over 60 on a given day during the run of "Remember." Many who accepted the invitation brought their families. A Boy Scout parade was also arranged. The boys attended a matinee in a body. The newspaper carried the story.

Wreck as Lobby Display

Anniston, Ala.—Manager Roy L. Smart reported the auto-motorcycle wreck in the lobby when "Man slaughter" played at the Noble. A little red paint was spilled under the dummy policeman with startling effect. Traffic signs were planted reading "Drive, carefully, and avoid Man slaughter." A 40-foot banner was displayed in front of the theater re-inforced by a 24-sheet cut-out and two special frames of rotogravures.

Humane Contest

East St. Louis—Harry Redmond of the Majestic, conducted a humane contest for 15 days before the run of "Human Hearts" in conjunction with the Daily Journal. Tickets to the Majestic and $1 were paid each day to contestants. The letters filled three or four columns daily and an entire page at the close of the contest. A silver mesh bag was the grand prize. Redmond styled it "Reid Week" in honor of Hal Reid, author of "Human Hearts" and father of Wallace Reid, whose "Clarence" was also shown at the Majestic.

Fire Trucks at Ballyhoo

Wichita Falls, Tex.—For a street ballyhoo for "Nero," the Strand obtained five fire trucks and the chief's machine to parade about the city with banners reading: "Let's see Nero and the burning of Rome." In return the Strand boosted "Fireman's Day." In Town of 56

Hazelwood, Ind.—E. J. Milhorn, who runs the Cozy, has to get all in as the entire population of the town is 56, including children. When Milhorn played "Where is my Wandering Boy Tonight?" he held a cornetist to play the old song of the same name as a street ballyhoo on the night before the play date. The stunt drew them in despite a pouring rain.

Regular Foyer Dance

Jamaica, L. I.—Manager Fred V. Greene, Jr., of the Kialto, got himself into a peek of trouble with his Halloween dance. Right after the last show of "Burning Sands" he got the folks into his capacious foyer and turned on the orchestra. They danced until 2 o'clock when Fred had to send them home. The next day he received 25 letters all asking that the dance be made a permanent feature. Hereafter, when the last Monday show lets out, Fred will give his patrons an hour of jazz. He doesn't want to but he has to.

Lighting Firms Aid

Cleveland—Both Loew's Stillman and Loew's State tied up with the Electrical League of Cleveland through the efforts of S. G. Sladdin, Paramount exploiter. The company built a lobby display in the State which cost $500. It consisted of model rural houses side-by-side with a modern dwelling showing the brightness of electric light compared with the old wood stove.

Free Advertising

Washington—Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount exploiter, tied up with the Potomac Electric Company, which specializes in electrical appliances. This company took advertising space for a week, the size ranging from a half to a quarter of a page, in which a cut was used showing Theodore Roberts as Uncle Josh bending over one of the company's wares.

To further exploit the picture, which played at Loew's Palace, Whelan sold the Washington Times Herald on a jingle contest and a drawing contest, the prizes for which were cash. The contestants had to reproduce the head of Uncle Josh.

Loew Adds Three

Purchases Glynn & Ward Theaters—Influence of Charles Schwab Seen in Deal

By a deal now agreed upon and lacking only the signatures to make it complete, Marcus Loew is buying three theaters operated by Glynn & Ward on Long Island. They are the Astoria, in Astoria, and the Alhambra and the Century in Brooklyn. While figures are not obtainable, the deal will add considerably to the millid to the theaters.

Mike Glynn declares that he will devote his time to the Patchogue, his theater now being built at Patchogue, L. I. This is a vaudeville house.

While no statement in the matter was forthcoming at the Loew office, it is understood that the purchase of these three theaters parallels the recent entry of Charles M. Schwab into Loew's Inc. He is now a member of the Board of Directors. Schwab is generally credited with having backed Glynn & Ward and to still have a large interest in their theaters.

Powers Returning

It is understood that P. A. Powers of the F. B. O., is returning from Europe, bringing with him something which is causing considerable excitement in the home office. Whether this is a picture, or a series, or just a lot of contracts, no one knows.

"Robin Hood" Controversy
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Detroit—Detroit exhibitors have expressed their disapproval of the fact that the Shukukim Grotto of Masons is presenting Douglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hood" at the Orpheum in a resolution which deports the establishment of a precedent which may put fraternal orders in competition with motion picture theaters.

Reprints may be had in order, according to the statement of Phil Gleichman of the Broadway and Strand who says "The Masons do not intend to run the Orpheum during the summer. They have simply leased it for the best months of the year. Next summer the Orpheum will want to run on their pictures and they will not have the Masons bidding on pictures. Then they will have come to us and we will realize that we feel that the policy of the Fairbanks management is all wrong.

At the Fairbanks' office in New York it was said that "Robin Hood" was rented to the Orpheum, and that any deal with the Masons was effectuated by the theater management.

There are two heroines in “Her Majesty” and Mollie King is both of them. In one role she is a delightful imp, mischievous, lovable and true. In the other part she is a spoiled and wilful beauty, but really fine when put to the supreme test. The story contains two romances and is correspondingly rich in action, plot, suspense and audience appeal. A satisfying feature, highly praised by exhibitors and reviewers.

Good, But It Could Have Been a Lot Better

Adolph Zukor presents “TO HAVE AND TO HOLD”
George Fitzmaurice Prod.—Paramount
DIRECTOR .................. George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR ..................... George Johnston
SCENARIO BY .................. Ouida Bergere
CAMERAMAN .................. Arthur Miller
AS A WHOLE ....... Will get by but cannot compare with the other two big costume pictures of current release, “Knighthood” and “Robin Hood” STORY ...... Delightful romance of early Jamestown period and court life of King James DIRECTION ...... Fair. Court scenes indicate a burlesque on royalty
PHOTOGRAPHY .......... Beautiful
LIGHTINGS .................. Very good
PLAYERS ........ Betty Compson miscast as Lady Jocelyn. Bert Lytell and Theodore Kosloff very good. Raymond Hatton a burlesque king
EXTERIORS ............. Beautiful
INTERIORS .................. Gorgeous
DETAIL ...................... Very good
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Good for any house
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 7,518 feet

“To Have and To Hold” is the third of the big costume pictures promised for the season. It will get by because after all it is beautifully done and they have spent a lot of money which shows, but taken all in all it doesn’t begin to compare with Fairbanks’ “Robin Hood” or Marion Davies’ “Knighthood.” Perhaps the difference in cost of production might have something to do with this, but it really doesn’t seem so. Fitzmaurice has failed in handling the beautiful story.

Betty Compson should never have been cast for the heroine, Lady Jocelyn. When Betty tries to emote in the earlier part of the picture—well, it just doesn’t register and subsequently when she tries to put the character over she again fails dismally. Bert Lytell and Theodore Kosloff are the saving graces of this picture. Both do very good work. But Raymond Hatton presents a King James that is pretty akin to burlesque. Certainly Paramount will not dare to show this picture in England in its present form. Before the cast is passed over the splendid work of W. J. Ferguson should not be forgotten. It is one of the real spots of the production.

Had the story been allowed to run naturally, the chances are it would have been a lot better, but the pirate band and the desert island sequences do not register. They seem so melodramatic and unnecessary. The destruction of the pirate ship by an explosion could have been done a lot better.

Be Careful If “Knighthood” or “Robin Hood” Match This on Play Dates

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A good many years ago Mary Johnston’s novel “To Have and To Hold” was one of the best sellers for a long time. Then they made a play of it, so all in all the old-timers will probably remember this very well. They should certainly recall it as easily as “When Knighthood Was in Flower.” But if “Knighthood” gets to your town first, be careful of your promises on this one. If on the other hand you play this before “Knighthood” arrives you will be safe, otherwise comparisons are inevitable. Your people are bound to figure out which is the better and if by chance “Robin Hood” comes along at about the same time then you are in a difficult spot. Fortunately Paramount is releasing “Knighthood” as well as this one, so you can work this out in all probability.

George Fitzmaurice’s name should be of some help to you. He has a long record of creditable successes and your people probably know him. They will probably also know Bert Lytell, previously a Metro star, but lay off the promises for Compson. The chances are they won’t like her.

You can talk about the story as one of the most delightful romances and most charming love stories ever written. It is all of that.
Great Audience Appeal and Sure Fire

Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle in "ONE WEEK OF LOVE"
Selznick

DIRECTOR .................. George Archainbaud
AUTHORS...........Edward J. Montagne and George Archainbaud
SCENARIO BY .................George Archainbaud
CAMERAMAN .................. Jules Cronjager
AS A WHOLE......Great entertainment value with a wallop last reel

STORY.......They will probably forget all about it when they are through with the thrills of the last reel

DIRECTION......Fair. Several unimportant sequences neglected in handling

PHOTOGRAPHY..............Generally very good
LIGHTINGS.................... Good

STARS.......Very good. Conway Tearle probably does better work than Miss Hammerstein, although she is very satisfying and easy to look at

SUPPORT.......Very few in the cast who have much to do, other than Hallam Cooley and Kate Lester, and neither of them have much to do

EXTERIORS......Some excellent locations found for the Mexican atmosphere

INTERIORS ..................... Lavish

DETAIL ......................... Good

CHARACTER OF STORY......Suits any audience from biggest first runs on Broadway down to anything you can find

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......7,000 feet

“One Week of Love” is sure a sweet picture. It is going to mean a lot of money in the box office and better than that when they go out all full of thrills from the last reel they are going to talk about it favorably and the word of mouth advertising, always the very best possible boost for a picture, will be forthcoming for this latest Selznick release.

They have kept this one under cover very well. No one knew what it was all about and they have a lot of sure fire audience appeal in it. It starts off with a crash and ends with a wallop. The first flash shows a lot of swell folks partying around in bathing suits and after this novel introduction they take you along into a sequence showing Elaine Hammerstein, the heiress, in an aeroplane race with Hallam Cooley. The way they have handled Elaine’s plane being lost in a fog prior to her crash into a hut in Mexico is going to please everybody. And from then on Conway Tearle steps in as an American who has gone to the dogs and who buys Elaine from a pair of greasers for $15, ten of which is the purchase price of a horse. Tearle is a rough, tough citizen, but after one week with the proud and haughty Elaine, during which time she shoots him, they realize that they are in love with each other and then comes the last reel.

Elaine bids Conway farewell and is going back to her high and mighty social life, but the train on which she is a passenger smashes over a bridge and in the end Conway rescues her from the whirling rapids. Then comes the clinch. But from the moment you see the bridge (which while done in miniature is exceedingly well handled) and the train toppling over and the many passengers fighting for their lives, it is mighty good audience stuff and is bound to get them.

Production values are high and while Director Archainbaud has slipped up on several occasions, still as a whole it holds up satisfactorily.

You Can Make Promises for This One—It Will Hold Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you know anything about the show business you should know that a fine last reel is better than five or six good reels that run ahead and then die at the finish. If you send your folks out talking in the right way it doesn’t make a lot of difference what else they have seen if they like the last reel, and the last reel in “One Week of Love” from an audience viewpoint is made on platinum and set with pearls. It is there all the way. Some wise folk may know that the bridge is miniature but they will never be able to figure out the rest of it.

The sequence showing the passengers at the mercy of the whirling rapids is mighty well done and there are enough sure fire human interest and heart appeal touches including the usual baby to set it right. Stick to the last reel in all your exploitation and advertising. If you have a crowd that likes to know who is in a picture, certainly the names of Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle should be helpful. Tearle has appeared with the Talmadge girls and in many other productions and Elaine Hammerstein has been building her own following for some time.

The title readily lends itself to catchlines and there should be excellent stills available of the aeroplane race and the train wreck.
Eternal Triangle Stuff With Good Cast

"THE DANGER POINT"
American Releasing Corp.
DIRECTOR ....................... Lloyd Ingraham
AUTHOR ......................... Not credited
SCENARIO BY .................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..................... Ross Fisher
AS A WHOLE..... Regulation eternal triangle stuff, with good cast

STORY......The inevitable one of the busy husband and lonesome wife, with convenient ending DIRECTION ....................... Fair
PHOTOGRAPHY......Fair. Burning well shots good LIGHTINGS............Generally good cast. Joseph Dowling does good work as blind musician. Wm.
Carleton, Carmel Myers and Vernon Steele well known EXTERIORS.......... Adequate
INTERIORS......Satisfactory; one set used a great deal
DETAIL...........Some titles at start too talky
CHARACTER OF STORY......City girl goes West and falls in love with founder of town. After marriage she runs away with his friend, thinking husband doesn't love her, but returns unhurt when train is wrecked
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......5,807 feet

From the cast in Lloyd Ingraham's latest production, "The Danger Point," one would expect a bigger picture in every sense of the word. Joseph Dowling's work in "The Miracle Man" will live for a long time to come and when he is seen in a vehicle which does not give him scope enough it may be disappointing to a majority of picture audiences.

The story of "The Danger Point" is the old, old theme of the neglected wife and the every-ready villain who takes her away. Also in approved movie style she is saved in the nick of time by a convenient train wreck which leaves her unscathed, though badly damaging the villain, who lives long enough to be carried back and exonerate the heroine.

William Carleton will undoubtedly be liked as the husband, and Vernon Steele villainizes in appropriate manner. Carmel Myers is very pretty at times, although she misses fire somewhat at the climax. Others in the cast are Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin, who contribute some comedy touches.

The story moves along very mildly until the last reel when everything happens at once. The girl runs away, is followed by the villain who boards the train unknown to her; the husband's oil wells are on fire and he rushes madly to save them, returning home only to find his wife's farewell note. And on top of this comes the news that the train she is on has been wrecked. It may get over with the right crowd and be liked, but it's old stuff.

Joseph Dowling does good work as the blind violinist, but you expect him to do something big that will grip you, and while he is appealing and sweet, the big punch isn't there, although you may think that the girl isn't hurt in the wreck because of his prayers.

There is only a long shot of the train wreck and a short one at that.

Mention the Players—Use Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The cast in this one is by all means your best bet.
Nine chances out of ten those who saw "The Miracle Man" have not forgotten Joseph Dowling's work in it and will like to see him in this. But it is not "big"
and they may be disappointed on this account.

The title may interest those who like excitement and Carmel Myers' followers will like to see her again.
Unless they like 'eternal triangle' stuff and will be satisfied with an average production, you had better see this first.

The title gives you a number of interesting angles to work with. It offers unusual opportunities for catch lines and teasers. Lines such as "What is the danger point between men and women? Come to the blank theater and see for yourself." Or, "There is a danger point in the relations of every man and every woman.
See what it is at the blank theater."

If you stand well enough you can also get something in your local newspaper by way of an editorial. Editors have always liked the idea of sermonizing and there are enough stories breaking into print these days about the relations of men and women to justify. This may help.

When Mary Carr’s suffering brought oodles of dollars to Fox Film someone had an idea of having a father suffer in the same way and perhaps add another classic to the list. So they conceived the idea of adapting Henry Wadsworth Longfellow’s famous "Village Blacksmith" to the screen. Of course it was necessary to take a few liberties and throw into the life of the smith as Longfellow depicted it a few heart-rending episodes and a little melodrama and when this was done someone figured it would be good entertainment. Maybe it is. Certainly if they like to cry over the sufferings of a huge male character, this fits the bill. William Walling as the blacksmith just suffers and suffers.

First his wife dies and he is confronted with the problem of raising a family of kiddies, one boy being crippled as a result of playing with his brother. Then his daughter receives presents from the rich man’s son and he thinks things and suffers. Then the older son who is to perform an operation on his crippled brother is all mangled in a train wreck and to make it complete the rich man’s son steals $480 from the smith’s daughter, the money belonging to the church fund. Of course no one in the church knows that he stole it and the girl is charged with the offense. She is about to leave home and runs away in a terrific storm but she is caught in time and the rich man’s son is apprehended. This ends the suffering of the Village Blacksmith.

There is a touch at the finish that many with nice susceptibilities will dislike. That is where the crippled boy flounders and crawls on his stomach through the storm, to the home of the rich man and charges the rich man’s son with the theft of the money only to be lashed with a horsewhip in the hands of the father. The brutality of this is almost as unnecessary as the entire idea.

The train wreck is certainly not up to the standard of 1922 productions. Otherwise, excepting for the manner in which at times the story lags, it will get by.

There is a long cast. Walling does good work as the blacksmith and Virginia Valli is very beautiful as the daughter. George Hackathorne has one of his usual roles and Dave Butler is good looking as the blacksmith’s son. Eddie Gribbon is rather likeable as the gossip and Francis Ford does the villain stuff well enough. He surely looks the part. Lucile Hutton has only a bit but is very good. Many of the village types are very much exaggerated.

Look This Over Carefully. Use Longfellow’s Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you think your people want to see a big virile man suffer, then you can look this one over and probably use it to advantage. But unless your crowd likes this kind of stuff you had better go slowly. There isn’t much to it excepting the suffering of the blacksmith. The storm doesn’t begin to compare with the same idea as presented in a number of releases now in circulation and the railroad wreck doesn’t begin to measure up.

Your best talking point is the use of the name Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, one of the greatest poets and one of the best beloved of this country. Every school child knows Longfellow and many of the older folks remember some of his more famous contributions. You can tell them that Fox also made "Evangeline" which is another Longfellow poem.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

The regular weekly western offering is "Table Top Ranch," another based on the recognized and highly popular hero, villain and girl formula. They never seem to get tired of using this one so that it has come to be a part of the week's offerings—a typical, regulation western, and they seldom vary, one from the other. "Table Top Ranch" is just one more repetition.

There is a cowboy who incurs the wrath of the villain by protecting the girl rancher and to give hero further and sufficient cause for hounding the villain, it develops that hero's brother had been murdered by the villain. The early reels are rather slow, being devoted to establishing a premise and acquainting the spectator with the geographical position of the Mesa, a grazing place, greatly coveted by ranchers. There are several long, not altogether clear sub-titles in connection with the explanation.

Paul Hurst hasn't introduced any new twists to the plot and so there is neither suspense nor speculation as to what the outcome will be. The development is quite obvious and from the very introduction of hero and villain you almost know just what will take place in the climax—a fight on a ledge. The only slight difference is that hero doesn't hurl his victim over. He saves him for the law to deal with. He saves the girl from villain's attack and you can assume that this completes the romance.

The production is average, with the usual locations providing the right atmosphere. The film is rather weak on action, with only one or two fights and villain's attempt to kill hero by setting off a blast in his path, is about the only near thrill. Neal Hart is the customary cowboy hero. You can depend upon him to fulfill expectations. The girl is Hazel Maye. She has little to do. The cast includes the usual types.

Story: John Marvin is really a marvel at escaping death. No matter how many men are against him, his lucky star guides him safely through. If the villain fires four shots, they all miss, but hero's one is always sure. So it is that he eventually traps his enemy, Powell, who, besides having killed Marvin's brother, is now annoying the pretty mistress of "Table Top Ranch." How Marvin deals with Powell and saves Kate furnishes the feature's best action and most interesting sequence.

Will Do Well Enough if They Favor Western Features in General

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who know their patrons like a western at regular intervals can make a note of "Table Top Ranch" and use it for one of their regular western feature days. In all probability they'll be satisfied. If they like westerns at all, it won't make very much difference with them what it is about as long as it has the right atmosphere, a hero and a villain.

The title is rather attractive and can be given good display. Don't make any unusual promises but give the picture your customary exploitation efforts and catchlines will attract. For a trailer secure the shots showing the villain's attempt to kill hero by blasting in his path. This should arouse their interest and undoubtedly bring them back to see if he escapes.
Not Much to the Story But It Will Please Star's Following

Rodolph Valentino in
"THE YOUNG RAJAH"
Paramount

DIRECTOR ....................... Philip Rosen
AUTHOR ......................... J. A. Mitchell
SCENARIO BY ................. June Mathis
CAMERAMAN ..................... James Van Trees

AS A WHOLE...... Presents star in elaborate and fantastic surroundings; a picturesque romance that makes it a pretty picture but little more

STORY ...... Fanciful tale that makes costume model rather than actor of star

DIRECTION ...... Adequate; Oriental episodes are good to look at; could not make such material convincing entertainment

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Excellent

EXTERIORS ..................... Good
INTERIORS ..................... Appropriate
DETAIL ......................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Boy adopted by Connecticut farmer turns out to be famous rajah

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 7,705 feet

For the admirers of Rodolph Valentino, "The Young Rajah" will undoubtedly furnish satisfactory entertainment because they are not likely to complain about anything as long as the star is present. His host of followers, the "flapper" crowd in particular, will be pleased with the highly improbable but colorful romance contained in "The Young Rajah," a fanciful story with two widely different episodes that have not a convincing connection.

Connecticut and the Orient are a great distance apart but they are the two principal locales in the story, with the situations almost as widely separate. On the one hand there is an Oriental kingdom with considerable squabbling over the right to the throne and on the other there is a village in America where the rightful heir, a young rajah, has been hidden by those protecting him against the wrath of his father's enemies. The story's most outstanding implausibility is the boy's power to forecast the future. He can definitely foretell coming events and there is an explanation of how he came by this gift which is equally vague and fanciful. In fact it would have been much more satisfactory if they had given this one a dream finish rather than try to present it in a serious vein for the situations are such that they cannot provide serious entertainment despite the efforts of Director Philip Rosen to make them so.

The piece appears to have been selected solely for the variety of situations and atmosphere which it gives the star. To mention a few of the bits in which he appears are as a college student, a member of Yale's rowing team, a horseback rider, lover and rajah. Valentino uses a large wardrobe in this one and as far as his admirers are concerned they'll probably consider it a first rate vehicle. Wanda Hawley does satisfactory work as the girl but doesn't make a particularly attractive lead for the star. Others in the cast are adequate.

The picture has been well produced with several more or less lavish scenes in the Oriental sequences. A slight comic vein appears at intervals and the romance is prominent throughout. The trouble over the throne is never very clear.

Story: It develops that Amos Judd, college student, is a rajah and heir to the throne. How he foresees that he will be compelled to return to his native land and events transpire as he anticipates them compose the most of the picture.

Should Be Easy to Get Them In With Valentino's Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Judging from the crowd at the Rivoli this week it would seem that all you need is Valentino's name to get them in. And for those who like him, "The Young Rajah" will probably please them as well as anything, that is if they are satisfied with just seeing him, regardless of the story. This one doesn't require very much of his acting ability but it does show him off to advantage in a variety of ways.

You can count on the "flapper" contingent especially to support "The Young Rajah." They will be delighted with the romance and for their benefit let them know about the young heir to an Oriental throne who fell in love with an American girl. You can rely upon it to attract attention particularly by displaying stills of Valentino in his rajah attire. They may expect another "sheik" picture. Wanda Hawley's name can also be used but Valentino's should be sufficient.
Will Entertain Where They Are Not Too Critical

DETAIL ................. Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY........... Candidate for sheriff goes the limit to prevent his opponent from winning but is foiled in the end

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,400 feet

There are some fairly original twists in this election story even though they are not all logical. The picture contains a timely atmosphere and will probably appeal to a good many. It has some audience appeal and combines comedy and drama in a more or less interesting fashion. Harry Carey is one candidate for sheriff and Noah Beery is another and the fight for victory offers some good excitement into which is injected some far-fetched comedy business but it will undoubtedly get laughs.

At one of the “big” moments, where Beery has his opponent at the point of a gun, Tully Marshall, lowers a gun down the chimney of the hut where Carey is held prisoner, and in full view of his captor, Harry grabs the gun and marches his man off to prison. The comedy is of the illogical kind but in all probability they’ll think it pretty good stuff especially a certain crowd that isn’t particular how the laughs come as long as they are there. Tully Marshall is responsible for most of the humor and his large family and wife, who is obviously the boss, will get some more laughs. The sequence in which Carey bribes a Turkish bath attendant to change places with him so that he (Carey) can deal with his enemy, is not funny and somewhat out of place. Beery in his bath attire won’t gain much admiration but his performance otherwise, as a villain, is all right.

The story is a good deal different from what Carey usually does. It provides him with a fair vehicle but not nearly as good as “The Kick-Back,” his first for Film Booking Offices. Carey is more at home in an out-and-out western minus the romance. He doesn’t fit in well with this sort of thing but nearly every one of his pictures include some such sequence with Harry and the girl all pretty and happy for the ending.

Val Paul provides an adequate production and the climax where Carey fights a whole army of waiters, is the only instance where the story runs a bit wild. It is smoothly told and the interest well sustained.

Story: J. Wesley Pringle is the popular favorite for sheriff. Thorpe, his opponent, realizes this and resorts to foul means to prevent Pringle’s election. Georgie Hibler, the daughter of Pringle’s biggest support, knows that Thorpe will do anything to spoil hero’s chance of election. Fite, a pleasant old fellow, whom Pringle had saved from suicide, saves him from Thorpe’s gang which is holding him prisoner. Pringle returns in time to be elected, Thorpe is landed in jail and Georgie demands an immediate marriage.

Play Up Atmosphere and Unusual Exploitation Should Put It Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In view of the atmosphere you might be able to make a little extra fuss about “Good Men and True” right at this time—not because it is an especially fine picture but because it has a story dealing with election and with Harry Carey as star you might be able to get them particularly interested in it. The right exploitation should put it over satisfactorily and it might make a fair enough showing.

Where they are not over critical they’ll be pleased with it and you can talk about the drama that is relieved with some good comedy touches. If Harry Carey is popular boost his name and recall his recent picture, “The Kick Back,” in case you played it. Catchlines won’t do very well for this one, it needs stronger and more original boosting to get it over.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Woman accused of murdering husband is saved by lover who assumes guilt until guilty one is found and the pair made happy

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..........4,918 feet

A first rate production helps to keep "The Cowboy and the Lady" from being a very ordinary feature. Director Maigne has evidently realized the weakness of the material and tried to make up for it in other ways. The picture is thoroughly good to look at and there are any number of mighty fine exterior shots that show the vast plains of the west with the mountain chains in the distance. Pictorially, the picture is splendid and it is no small help in putting over a pretty slight and familiar story.

The first few reels are composed mostly of unimportant incidents which establish facts that eventually take the form of a plot but it isn't until about the last reel that there is any real action. The one exception is the rescue of the heroine when she climbs the trunk of a fallen tree which leads across the rapids. She misses her grasp and is destined for a dangerous ride when hero Tom Moore saves her. Of course this bit gets the romance off to an interesting start. This twist furnishes a pretty fair thrill at that.

Tom Moore's role presents a new type that is about the only new twist in the story. He's a "dude" cowboy and it is going to please them when he spoils a perfectly good white flannel suit to reach the lady's horse that has strayed from her and later when he carefully removes his well fitted coat and proceeds to give a genuine cowboy the beating of his life, it is a good touch that will go over. It is good audience stuff.

The best action comes toward the close when the woman's husband is murdered and she is accused. The idea of hero assuming the guilt to protect the woman he loves is pretty commonplace but it leads up to a good climax in which the villain is exposed and everything made ready for the happy ending. Mary Miles Minter and Tom Moore are a good couple for their respective roles and the supporting company is first rate. It includes Viola Daniel, Patricia Palmer, Robert Schable, Guy Olivers and others.

Story: Jessica Weston manages a ranch while her husband is paying attention to Molly, proprietress of the cafe. Teddy North, called the "dude cowboy" meets Jessica and once saves her life. Later he protects her from an attack by her husband, threatening to kill him if he ever touches her again. When Weston is found murdered Mrs. Weston is accused but Teddy assumes the guilt. How Molly confesses that another did it and paves the way for Teddy's and Jessica's happiness.

Exploit Players' Names and Employ Whatever Angle Will Best Appeal

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a fair entertainment that you can use without causing much comment one way or the other. It is about an average feature with the exception of its pictorial appeal which is above the ordinary. Of course you can use the names of Mary Miles Minter and Tom Moore prominently in your announcements.

For those who may have read the story let them know that Clyde Fitch was the author. The title can be exploited with catchlines and you interest them especially in the cowboy who was a "dude." This might be a particularly good angle to play up, letting them know that Teddy North is a different cowboy from the rest. Tom Moore is popular enough to get them interested in such a combination of cowboy and "slicker."

DETAIL ......................... First rate

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Circus dancer finds happiness with lover after vain effort of circus master to prevent it

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,668 feet

“Shirley of the Circus” is the best regular release that Fox has issued in some time and it is the best thing coming from Shirley Mason in quite a while. It is a thoroughly interesting and original story of circus life that is splendidly told and contains especially fine atmosphere. It is absorbing from start to finish. The opening shots are particularly well done, showing a traveling circus troupe performing in the streets of a small town in Southern France where a premise is established and the story gets off to a good start.

Rowland V. Lee has given an excellent production, sustains the interest very well and injects an unusually realistic circus atmosphere in the latter sequence which presents a circus complete in every detail. The last reel is worthy of special comment and Director Lee has done very fine work in building up a climax that carries a genuine punch with at least two high class thrills. One is where the acrobat, seeking revenge on his partner who has won the love of the ballet dancer, purposely allows him to miss his grasp in a spectacular leap, and the other is where the lions, unmanageable as a result of the panic caused by the accident, overpower the trainer and one escapes from the cage, bearing down upon the girl. There is fast action and a great suspense in this reel that will certainly send them out in high praise of the feature.

It is a very fine vehicle for Shirley Mason and she does good work at all times. There is just one thing that her admirers are going to notice—the star does not look well in this; it may be due to very poor make-up. But the real outstanding performance of the picture is contributed by Alan Hale as Max, the owner and chief acrobat of the circus. Hale looks and acts the part in every move. His portrayal is exceedingly well done and worth seeing. George O’Hara is a promising newcomer who plays “Pierre,” the dancer’s sweetheart.

Story: Shirley attracts the attention of an American artist who begs Max, her manager, to permit him to send her to school. At the end of her term Shirley runs away to escape returning to Max, whom she fears. Max traces her to the artist’s home in New York and when Shirley learns that her presence is annoying the artist’s fiancée, she returns to Max. How Max tries to win Shirley for himself and causes an injury to Pierre, whom Shirley loves, is followed by the eventual happiness of Shirley and Pierre.

Should Please Them Anywhere and You Can Talk About It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here is a worthwhile attraction that you can make a little extra fuss over and the results should prove it deserving of any extra exploitation that you may give it. “Shirley of the Circus” is a really interesting picture with Shirley Mason in a role that is especially well suited to her. Don’t neglect to tell them about the performance of Alan Hale and if you can secure a trailer it should be an easy means of bringing them back.

The title is sufficient to give an idea of what the story deals with and the atmosphere affords plenty of fine exploitation stunts that you are probably already familiar with or have used in conjunction with previous pictures dealing with circus life. You can make promises for this one and you can rely upon the last reel sending them out talking about the picture.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Shop girl realizes her ambition when taken into the home of rich family whose jewels she saves from burglar

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ... 4,113 feet

Gladys Walton is always at her best in the role of girl who plays at being a highbrow. As Mamie Conroy, the shop girl, in "The Lady of the Lavender Bath" she is very much at home and will appeal strongly to her admirers. The star does better work in this kind of a story than in any other which she has been given and Shannon Fife's comes nearer to what suits her best than some of her more recent vehicles although they have still to give her another

"Second Hand Rose." None of her current releases have approached this one in entertainment value.

The opening reel of this one is so novel and interesting that it is somewhat disappointing that Director
Baggot didn't maintain the same pace throughout.
The introductory shots show a greatly affected young lady at her dressing table, giving orders to her maids.
Then you are given a glimpse of a crowd in the street and it develops that the "lady" is merely a window demonstrator, displaying gowns for a fashionable shop.
Her demonstration creates such a riot that traffic is blocked and the proprietor is compelled to withdraw the attraction. About the first idea the spectator gets that the lady is a model is when she picks up a sign with a price and holds it to the hose she is wearing.
The comedy touches in this bit are original and good.

But it is too bad the rest of the story wasn't equally original. It started off so fine that it is all the more noticeable when it slows up as it progresses. Baggot tries for some suspense in connection with the blind hero but it isn't likely that many will really think he is a burglar. It is quite apparent that he is a detective.

The production is good and the shots in the department store look to be the real thing. The star is given an adequate supporting company with Edward Burns the detective hero.

Story: Mamie Conroy attracts the attention of the rich Janette Gregory who persuades her uncle to bring Mamie into the house to live with them. In the absence of Janette, Mamie masquerades as mistress of the big house and falls in love with David Bruce, supposed to be blind. Later she overhears a conversation which makes her think her hero is a thief. When Mamie is caught with the Gregory jewels, Bruce accuses her of the theft but it is proven that Mamie was protecting them from burglars while Bruce turns out to be a detective.

Boost the Star In This One If She Is Popular

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The story of "The Lady of the Lavender Bath" will appeal to a good many and those who have come to like Gladys Walton in her interpretation of the shop girl with social aspirations will find the picture to their liking and they'll like the star better in this than in anything she has done since "Second Hand Rose."
The title hasn't very much in common with the story
so it will need exploitation and explanation.

Universal exchanges can supply you with a trailer and one of the best bits of advertising that you could give this would be to copy the opening shots—the window demonstration. It should be a good stunt.
Universal's press sheet will explain it more in detail, together with an idea for a prologue and store tie-ups.
Boost the star and tell them she has a typical Gladys
Walton role in this.

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Chorus girl hired self in love with her victim.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 5,401 feet

"The Woman Who Fooled Herself" is about an average offering in which a familiar story is given a satisfying production and some colorful atmosphere make up, in a way, for the unoriginal situations and rather slow-moving theme. There are no high lights and it runs along in about the same tone without increasing or decreasing the interest. The director hasn’t made much of an attempt to create a suspense and at the end tacks on an anti-climax that makes the close quite weak.

The story deals with the popular frame-up situation in which a pretty woman is hired to ensnare a young man into a crooked deal that will net the conspirators a valuable piece of property. After she succeeds in this, of course, she finds herself in love with the young man but in view of what she has done refuses to admit it, so turns him away. Later, however, she succeeds in retrieving the option, restoring it to her lover and all ends happily. There are no new twists that might make the story a bit distinctive and the development is more or less obvious from the entrance of the hero.

The Spanish atmosphere and carnival sequence give the feature some color and makes it rather attractive pictorially. There are a few interesting tropical shots also and those in a native cafe will undoubtedly please a good many. May Allison, as the dancer, fulfills requirements of an un conspicuous role and Robert Ellis is the hero. Frank Currier provides a comedy touch now and then, as the old grandfather who “loves the ladies.” Robert Schable is the unscrupulous one.

The photography throughout is good and the production up to standard. Cutting is not very good at times especially where they go from close-ups to long shots. In one, where hero interrupts the girl’s dance, they repeat the actions of the close-up in the following long shot.

Story: Eva Lee, a chorus girl out of work, accepts a proposition in which she is to dance in a South American cafe and lure Don Fernando into a deal with Cameron Camden. Eva succeeds in winning Fernando’s love and then gets him to enter into a contract with Camden. Then she spurns him although really in love with him. After slight complications she persuades Camden to return the contract to her that she may square herself with Fernando and become his wife.

Will Do All Right Unless They Demand Strong Story Material

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a fair entertainment, will probably satisfy the average crowd and should fit in adequately when used in conjunction with the usual line of short reels, a good comedy, scenic and news reel. Where they arg particular, of course, it isn’t strong enough to please them in view of the story’s weakness.

Where May Allison is popular from her appearance in Metro pictures you might arouse their interest by announcing her name in connection with the title.
Catchlines with the title might also be used to attract attention. The usual stills for lobby display may prove interesting and appeal to the “flappers” with an-ouncements concerning the showgirl who fell in love

Good Cast Helps Regulation Farnum Vehicle

"WITHOUT COMPROMISE" William Farnum in Fox
DIRECTOR .................Emmett J. Flynn
AUTHOR ..................Lilian Bennett-Thompson
SCENARIO BY ..........Bernard McConville
CAMERAMEN............Dev. Jennings and Nelson McEdwards

AS A WHOLE.......Regulation Farnum vehicle with good supporting cast

STORY........Regulation movie stuff with plot hanging on unpleasant murder

DIRECTION..........Generally good, except for abrupt ending

PHOTOGRAPHY .................Good
LIGHTINGS .................Satisfactory

STAR.......Has typical Farnum role and appears to better advantage than in two previous pictures

SUPPORT....... Very good. Capable cast includes Lois Wilson, Tully Marshall, Alma Bennett and Robert McKim

EXTERIORS...............Some very good
INTERIORS .................Satisfactory

DETAIL .................Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY......"Square" Sheriff does his duty according to law despite the fact that his sweetheart's family are involved

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......5,173 feet

Those who like William Farnum will enjoy this without doubt, as it is very much better than the preceding Farnum offering, having an excellent supporting cast. The story itself, however, while having plenty of action and some thrills is not a particularly pleasing one and does not leave an altogether pleasant taste.

The direction is good and the action holds the attention all the way, but the finish is much too abrupt. Furthermore, it leaves one wondering whether or not the brother, who is hovering between life and death, recovers.

Lois Wilson is appealing and does some good work as the heroine. Alma Bennett, although murdered in the second reel, makes a lasting impression in the small part she has, and Tully Marshall has an opportunity for some good comedy bits.

Farnum himself is seen to much better advantage than he has been in some time as the "Square" Sheriff of the lumber town of Randolph. Those who admire him will like him more than ever in this and he may make some new friends. He does more acting and less fighting than usual.

Story: Judge Randolph, the founder of the town, dies and entrusts the care of the town and his foster daughter Nora to Sheriff Dick Leighton, who although in love with Jean Ainsworth runs for Mayor against her father. The town bad man murders Nora and Dick organizes a posse to capture him. After a chase the murderer is captured and wounded by Dick, who instead of turning him over to the posse takes him to the hospital founded by Ainsworth. The nurse refuses to take the case and Lois agrees to nurse the man. Her brother Tommy, under instructions from his father to incite the men against Dick, urges them to take the murderer sick or well, and going to the hospital they break in. Dick shoots the first man to enter, wounding Tommy as Lois announces the murderer's death. The next day Dick comes to arrest David Ainsworth for instigating the mob. Ainsworth, asking ten minutes in which to arrange his papers, runs away.

Use Star's Name and Supporting Cast to Satisfy

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If the last Farnum offering went over, this one is sure to. It is far better in every respect. You can use Farnum's name and in addition mention the splendid cast in which Lois Wilson plays opposite Farnum. There are plenty of thrills and although the plot hinges on a brutal murder, this is gotten by with a title, no action being shown.

There is a very exciting chase after the murderer which includes a swim down a sluice-way leading to the falls which you can talk about, but the star and the cast are your best bets.
Practically Everyone in the Film Industry will soon be reading the 1923 FILM YEAR BOOK.

It offers an advertising opportunity no one can afford to overlook.

FIRST FORMS NOW CLOSING
Short Stuff

"Harvest Hands"—Paul Parrott—Pathe
Type of production ........................................... 1 reel comedy
Those who like Paul Parrott's style of humor will doubtless find "Harvest Hands" good entertainment. Paul is sent to his uncle's farm by his irate father in the hope that he will do some work. He arrives as per schedule in a caterpillar motor car. After various trials and tribulations he finds that although he cannot stay on the farm, he is in love with the owner's pretty daughter, and catching her up onto his trusty tank he plows his way through haystacks, barns, houses and everything else on the place in his effort to get away.

"Hodge Podge" No. 2601—Lyman H. Howe—Educational
Type of production ............................................. 1 reel scenic and cartoon combination
The second Hodge Podge reel, as the title reads, "Some sense and some nonsense." But the whole has been woven together cleverly and the reel contains some very good stuff. Short cartoon sequences are followed by scenic shots of winter sports in Switzerland, then more cartoon stuff which in turn is followed by some footage showing the sea elephants of the South Seas being captured, for transportation to zoological institutions. The cartoons are funny, and the novelty of the reel will assuredly appeal.

"Deputized"—Pathe
Type of production ............................................. 2 reel western
In houses where Westerns of short length are in demand this should get over in good shape. It is rather simple in theme and includes enough rapid riding to please followers of this type of drama. There is one interesting situation in which the pursued villain hides in the home of the hero's sweetheart. A six shooter in the hands of the fugitive is aimed at the principal and matters are complicated when a jealous husband arrives and starts a riot. Leo Maloney is the star, this being one of the range rider series. A satisfactory picture of its kind.

"The Cabby"—Century—Universal
Type of production ............................................. 2 reel comedy
The slapstick is still with us, as is witnessed by Al Herman's latest comedy starring Maudie the mule. Maudie eats everything from poker chips to dollar-bills, and takes very good care of her master, the Cabby, breaking up a poker game when she sees him losing. As revenge against a tailor who didn't pay his fare, Maudie places a bomb in his shop. A customer's suit is blown to bits and the man plots to get even. There is a cute touch when some kittens get into the cash register, making it run all over the place and down the street when the crook comes back to rob it. Not high class, but will satisfy.

Pathe Review No. 182
Type of production ............................................. 1 reel magazine
Always interesting, this number of the Pathe Review presents for its scientific feature "The Mystery of Magnetism" and illustrates what can be done with the aid of a magnet. Hy Mayer's "Travelaugh" this time deal with midwinter fashions, lading from cartoons to actual photographs in quick succession. The colored bit deals with scenes in the homeland of the Armenians.

Screen Snapshots No. 13—C. B. C.—State Rights
Type of production ............................................. 1 reel fan magazine
Interesting shots of film stars off location make the "Screen Snapshots" an interesting reel and this number is no exception. Helen Ferguson is arrested for speeding by William Russell dressed like a policeman; Claire Windsor and Jack Mulhall make love before a camera; E. K. Lincoln is shown with his prize-winning crows; Constance Talmadge has her picture taken with some visitors: Tom Meighan gives some kiddies a party and Frank Mayo, Bert Lytell, Lee Moran and Roy Stewart have some fun on the beach.

"The Drifter"—Leo Maloney—Pathe
Type of production ............................................. 2 reel western
"The Drifter" varies from the usual two reel westerns which Maloney has been appearing in recently, in that it is devoid of the riding chase which has become almost a fixture in this type of short reel. "The Drifter" will undoubtedly be liked. It is clean-cut and entertaining as well as swift moving and Josephine Hill is the pretty heroine. When the hero, without the price of a meal, presents some ore specimens to be assayed for gold to the real estate dealer, he learns about a plot against a mother and daughter. They are being victimized by the crooked land-shark, who has found gold on their land, and Maloney accidentally becoming their champion, is enabled after much detail and suspense which is held very well, to turn the tables on the conspirator.

"Man vs Beast"—Educational Type of production ............................................. Two reel African hunt picture "Man vs Beast" presents in two reels the most thrilling material in the series of films made by the late Louis Shuman during his two year trip into East Africa. Shuman's courage and marvelous marksmanship are strongly brought out in several episodes among them the one in which he walks within several feet of a pair of adult rhinoceros and kills one of them after it has tossed one of the dogs twenty-five feet into the air. The picture is full of thrills and holds the spectator breathless at times. The shooting of a twelve thousand pound Hippo, and the capture of a living hyena are among the high spots of the film.

"Our Gang"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production ............................................. 2 reel comedy
This, the third of the "Our Gang" Comedies, directed by Hal Roach, while not quite as funny as the two preceding ones, should more than please any audience. The opening scenes in which little "Roosevelt Pershing Smith" the three year old tough wrestles with a jolly-pop enlists one's sympathy immediately. He is the cutest kid seen in a long time and the dirt with which he is covered, adds to the effect. The plot is slight, but there is a wealth of incident that adequately makes up for any deficiency in plot. The gang, headed by Sunshine Sammy in a barrel because his mammy is washing his clothes, find an Angel Child all dressed up. Luring him behind a fence with a doll, there is a general riot from which the Angel Child emerges triumphantly. He joins the gang which proceeds to help "Little Farina" and her mother get some business in their store which is failing. The way they do this forms the balance of the action of the picture, which is most enjoyable. This is one comedy that should not be overlooked.

Kansas City—M. Van Praag has tendered his resignation as president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas. It is understood that the reason for this step is that Van Praag is about to start a large project in the industry, which will require all of his time. R. G. "Dick" Ligggett succeeds Van Praag.

Edwin S. Porter Says He Used Double Exposure 14 Years Before Dawn Obtained Patent

The freedom of the motion picture camera is involved in the legal steps taken by Norman Dawn to uphold his patents on a double exposure process obtained in 1918. Testimony in the suit has just been taken in New York by Att'y Henry T. Hornidge for use in the trial in the Federal Court, Los Angeles.

The A. B. C.

Has started at last. Will run Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country." Beginning late in December. Also after other product. But even this early in the day they are following the lead of all other booking combines. And offering prices so low. That they automatically start with the feeling against them. That all other booking combines have. They made an offer a few days ago. For a feature. At almost 40 per cent less than it has been booked. To some of its own members. Offering over 200 days.

It may be that there is a difficult situation here. Because of the circuit runs. And the heavy investments of the neighborhood exhibitors. There is undoubtedly a grave situation facing these men. And there is no doubt but that the condition should be altered. The only question is whether a booking corporation is the best way to answer the problem.

This is sure: there never was a booking combination. There probably never will be. But that almost automatically. Its worst offense against the business as a whole develops early: of trying to hold down prices to the distributor and exhibitor. Even this early in its existence the A.B.C. seems heading that way. This is the real menace of any booking combination.

Distribution Idea

Again Crops Up Among M. P. T. O. Officials—True Suggests Formation of Organization

The idea of a distribution organization for the M. P. T. O. of A., again looming large.

This suggestion has been in vogue on several occasions, chiefly before and during recent national conventions. But W. A. True, of Hartford, of the Executive Committee, has only recently launched the idea again.

According to "Illinois Filmland," the official organ of the Illinois M. P. T. O. of A., when True attended the Chicago meeting on Oct. 12:

"Mr. True spoke on several matters, such as the application for service otherwise 'misunderstood' by exhibitors as a contract, advance deposit, setting play dates, cancellation of star series contract, and advertising in newspapers. He advocated forming

The Massachusetts Record

This happened in Massachusetts:

For the first time in history every precinct in Boston was carried for either a candidate or a measure.

More votes were obtained against the proposed censorship than any candidate, or any measure ever before received; over 500,000 people voted "No." In every village, town and city there was a picture theater or a newspaper a majority was given against censorship. In 91 villages and towns where there were neither newspapers nor picture theaters 28 voted for censorship, with a total of about 6,000 votes and a majority of 438. Some of these settlements voted as low as 12 people, and the polls were open but 15 minutes.

The majority obtained against censorship was greater than the actual votes polled for censorship.

This is the result of the Hays organization's work. File this. It will come in handy some day in your neighborhood.
Distribution Idea

an exhibitors' distributing corporation as the most effective way of bringing down exorbitant "exhibition values," and securing to the independent exhibitor a permanent supply of good pictures.

The report says that President Sidney Cohen was present, but on Saturday Cohen declared that he was at the dentist's at the time True spoke, and had nothing of the address. He added that he hadn't read the report and did not care to discuss the matter until he did.

Finance in Filmdom

Is the title of an article, by H. Manley, appearing in the current issue of Forbes. Statistics well known to the industry are in the article, which is illustrated by a portrait of "The Three Pioneers," Wm. T. Rock, J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph.

Patent Testimony

Edwin S. Porter, veteran producer, who was asked for his testimony in the matter, says that he used the process involved back in 1904 and 1905, when he was with the old Edison company. According to Porter, the process consists of double-exposing a background, which may be drawn on a title card, and a scene in which actors are photographed. By this method background may be obtained.

It is likely that some of the old films "shot" by Porter may be introduced as evidence.

Dawn brought suit against Ferdinand and Pinney Earle and The Rubaiyat, Inc., as a test case. The process involved is understood to have been used by Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood." At the time Earle stated that he had the moral support of Fairbanks, Famous Players, Metro, Goldwyn and Vitagraph, as the law firm of Charles Ray Prods., is the latest to be mentioned in connection with the suit on the side of the defendants.

Civic Film Service

Will Hays has written the organization a letter of encouragement in which he says that, through this agency, "commercial organizations in every section of the country, associating themselves in efforts for civic improvement, will have available not only the existing oral and textual agencies, but the new and powerful visual aids that are at hand."

The 49th inclusion is St. Peter, general manager; Scott E. W. Bedford, educational consultant; George H. Breed, scenario and research editor, and Wayne D. Heydecker, sales manager.

Several members of the staff are also interested in the Arlama Film Co., producing the Woman's Home Companion series of two-reelers, also distributed by Alexander Film.

Rogell to Produce

Hollywood—Albert Rogell has formed an independent production company. It is backed by Mrs. Anna C. Kaufman, who is a technician worker. It is understood that the new company will produce a series of six features dealing with the drug evil.

WHAT'S A FEW THOUSAND

Between friends? Just see what Pete Harrison has to say: Commenting on the "Collier's Weekly" articles. And directors. Says Peter, "It's common knowledge that a bar tender, who used to get $15,000 a week, a few years ago was receiving $3,500 per week, etc. etc. to direct." A bartender who got $15,000 a week. Oh, shades of Volstead! Why that's more than the "Sin Flood" barkeeper swiped.

PUTTING IT OVER

Breaking into the front page. Back page. Sunday editions. Special articles. And all the rest. Grabbing space for "Brothers Under the Skin" in great gobs. Who? Oh, Howard Deitz. And Eddie Bonne. And Bill Ferguson. Over at Goldwyn's. They filed a charter in the Supreme Court. For "The Association of Brothers Under the Skin." "To establish, maintain, and operate the household primarily as a masculine institution, etc., etc." And then all the New York newspapers fell for it. So hard; oh, so hard. That some of the wily crew. Just laughed out right. Ha, ha! Just like that. It was a peach.

BLACK JACK

All dolled up. In Canadian togs. Visited a lot of offices. In the industry. Camped on Marcus Loew's trail so hard. That Marcus thought he was a nut. And used the rear elevator. To escape from him. But all "Black Jack" wanted. Was to give him a copy of "Heart's Aflame." Just another good stunt—this one from Harry a la Reichenbach.

THE HEPWORTH FEATURE

"Through Three Reigns." Contains some shots over 24 years old. And they are fine. Very interesting; very valuable.
Some first runs could surely use this feature. Cut down. But the Hays organization or the Smithsonian Institute should arrange to get a print. For research and historical value. It is worth while.

MASSACHUSETTS—AND HAYS

A week ago through the industry. Especially here in New York. There was grave fear. And apprehension. Massachusetts was going to vote. On the question of whether or not the people wanted pictures censored. By politicians. It was the first time in the history of the industry. That the people ever had a chance at a referendum. On this question. All eagerly—and fearfully—waited the result.

Last Tuesday night at 10 o'clock the answer was in. The people had spoken. And in emphatic tones registered their disapproval. And those who had been fearful. Drew a long breath. And a little man went back. To the last act of the play he was watching. And enjoyed it all the more. The little man was Will H. Hays. And, regardless of all others who helped in the fight, and giving them all the credit desired—there was still a lot left for Hays. After all, the Hays organization, under the direction of Charley Pettijohn, who engineered the work, really did the big job. Caseby helped. And Caseby is a lot. In Boston.
The exhibitor body helped. Lots of people helped. But the Hays crowd laid out the plan. And saw to it that it was executed. And if you haven't seen the plan. If you haven't any idea. Of how it was laid out. In detail. Going down to the individual voter in each town. With precinct captains, etc.
Then you don't know how comprehensive. And fool proof it was. It was a great piece of work. And carried out not only efficiently. But splendidly as to result.

Will Hays is getting a mighty fine salary. For running his job. But results—like last Tuesday in Massachusetts—are worth millions. And that's the word, millions. To the industry. Because, coupling Massachusetts with what happened in New York, should be a definite offset and block. To the goggy eyed reformers in other communities.

WHAT ABOUT OHIO?

And Maryland. And Kansas. And Pennsylvania. As
as Florida and Virginia. Where are state censors?
Why isn't it possible—and why cannot something be done to put it to the people of those States. And let them de-whether or not they want censors. The next important geneeral election occurs two years from now. When the presidential contest will be on. It may be an inopportune time, but, be-on what occurred in Massachusetts, it would seem to be an ideal occasion. To put the question up. It would be convenient. The organizations necessary are huge, and expensive. But result justifies beyond all cost. It's about time to wipe these laws:
off the books. Just think of this: Pennsylvania insisted a legal marriage for Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy." 2 men couldn't smoke a cigarette on the screen—in Kansas. 6 objected to "Treasure Island" because 'it taught boys to pirates.' Philadelphia couldn't look at a picture of sucking in the "Four Horsemen" the words "It's a boy," to denote arrival of a son and heir, had to go. And Pennsylvania said shot of Lillian Gish making child's clothes in "Way Down E would have to go because it showed pre-natal influence. Th sort of rubbish that makes one sick.

Some of these states haven't the referendum to use. C has. But the new Governor's might be shown the Massachetts results. And this suggestion might well be in order to repeal those censorship laws. At once.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Especially when it's in the electrics, in front of a them
For instance, who do you think "Har'd Lloyd" is? Presume Harold Lloyd. And the Adelphia, upper Broadway, evident figures everyone will know him. But—for them?

First National Executive Committee Leaves for Coast This Week for Indefinite Stay

Richard A. Rowland, general manager of Associated First Nat'l Pictures, leaves tomorrow for Chicago on a route to Hollywood. In Chicago members of the Executive Committee will probably join him, although one may go direct and the entire party is expected to reach Hollywood by the end of the week. Upon their arrival they will take up the question of the amount of production First National is expected to need for the remainder of the season and plans will be made for next year's work.

At the same time it would not be surprising if the committee took up the question of the sub-franchise in an effort to straighten out such difficulties as exist so that by the first of the year their entire affairs will be satisfactorily arranged.

Gold Medal Award

Richard Barthelmess' "Tol'able David" Selected by Photoplay Magazine Readers as Best Picture of 1922

"Tol'able David," Richard Barthelmess' first starring venture, has been selected by the readers of Photoplay Magazine as the best picture presented during 1922.

Announcement to this effect is made in the December issue of Photoplay which will appear on the newsstands tomorrow.

"Over the Hill" was the second choice and ran "Tol'able David" a very close race. The Four Horsemen was the third choice, and the margin was very close here, as well. The medal which was awarded for the first time in 1921 was then given to Cosmopolitan Productions for "Humoresque." The medal is a magnificent token executed in solid gold by Tiffany.

James M. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay, will arrange for the presentation of the medal at an early date.

Charles H. Duell, President of Inspiration Pictures, the producers, commented on the award yesterday saying:

"I am deeply gratified and particularly grateful to those who took part in its making and made the result possible. All honor to them."

L. C. Barnstyn of the Netherlands Biscscope Trust of Holland is scheduled to arrive today on the Volendam.

Goldwyn Gets "Sappho"

Due to a typographical error in yesterday's issue, the foreign production "Sappho," featuring Pola Negri, just acquired by Goldwyn, appeared as "Fappho."

Talmadge Sailing Postponed

(London-The Talmadge party has again postponed sailing for America. They now expect to leave here Nov. 18 taking with them the winner of the beauty contest which Norma and Constance conducted here.

Harry Danto Leaves Goldwyn

Red Hot Meeting

Anticipated for Today's Session of the T. O. C. C. Will Discuss Circuit Problems and Marcus Loew Will Attend

The Theater Owners meeting at the Astor today promises to be the liveliest since the memorable occasion when Senator Walker interrogated Adolph Zukor regarding Paramount's theatre activities.

There has been a special call made for today's meeting, the chief purpose of which is to take up the question of Circuit booking. And to make the meeting good and active, Marcus Loew will be present.

This will probably bring to a head all of the discussions heretofore gossiped, or printed about, between Loew and his brother members in the Chamber of Commerce.

The call for the meeting signed by secretary Moros, provides for a fine for the absence of any member, and in part says:

Our organization is a body composed of independent theater owners, almost exclusively so. When we say almost, we say so advisedly, because of minor exceptions which otherwise would have made it absolutely exclusive.

It must be obviously clear to you that the above remark is directed against the Circuits.

The activities of the latter and their spreading out in almost every zone and locality in Greater New York, has grown to such abnormal proportions, that it endangers the very existence of every independent theater.

The situation thus created by them has made conditions intolerable with respect to the buying and playing of pictures.

Their cooperative and syndicated purchasing power of pictures, their colossal numerical seating capacities, the presentation of first run features, with unreasonable protection against you, have created an unfair competition, in the face of which no individual independent theater owner can remain in business very long.

This menace is still growing and it is permitted to exist and to grow still more menacing, because of our apparent or actual indifference.

Red Hot Meeting

This month must be given every serious thought and this will be the main subject matter under discussion at the meeting.

Can you afford to be absent from this meeting and miss the opportunity to give the benefit of your thought and opinions on this matter, or if you haven’t any, to listen to, at least, those who have? If you do, then you deserve to be driven out of business.

You are an undeniable liability instead of an industrial asset.

The term is a harsh one, but nevertheless, it is a logical one.

This is only one of the subjects to be taken up at this meeting. Another subject which is of utmost importance is that of the Double Feature evil now in vogue and in practice, which has shown a tendency of a fictitious demand for pictures and at the same time, create a shortage of pictures.

A constructive remedy for the above must be found and the Chamber needs your aid and counsel in the matter.

First National Club Show

The First National Club, composed of employees of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is planning an elaborate affair at Kismet Temple, Nostrand Ave. and Herkimer St., Brooklyn, on Friday, Dec. 8th. The production will be known as “The Picnic of 48th Street.”

Rehearsals for the “Follies” are being conducted under the direction of Mr. Francis C. Cook, chairman of the Entertainment Committee.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Hand-Painted Display

Evansville, Ind.—C. F. Lewis made the Criterion lobby unusually attractive for the run of “The Valley of Silent Men,” by dressing it up with real hand paintings with cut-outs from the three act plays pasted on. Lewis also billed the town liberally, sent post cards to his mailing list and had heralds inserted in the Sunday newspapers. As a result he says that the picture drew many people who never before paid a visit to his box office.

Mayoral Proclamation

Long Beach, Cal.—A mayoral proclamation approving of a “Remembrance Week” in connection with the showing at the Liberty is an achievement to the credit of Frank L. Browne, the manager. He persuaded Mayor Charles A. Buffin to issue the proclamation endorsing the observance of the week.

“A big family contest” stunt followed. Ten dollars in gold was offered to the head of the largest family in the city. It resulted in much publicity and was won by the father of 10 children.

A Smashing Anniversary Week

Oneonta, N. Y.—Fred Hathaway, exploitation manager for the Schine chain, and C. J. Rose, manager of the Strand, put over “The Strand and Merchants Anniversary Week” with huge success. The cost of decorating the streets and store fronts was paid, pro rata, by the 68 merchants who co-operated. The whole town was billed as was the country-side to draw the rural trade.

The week opened with a “tag day” and closed with “balloon day,” when 100 balloons were released bearing tags calling for gifts from the stores interested. Rose reported capacity business for the entire week at the theater, while all the merchants were more than pleased.

Mock Trial

Pittsburgh — A highly successful mock trial of Prof. Moriarity, the villain of “Sherlock Holmes,” was promoted by W. E. Kirsh, general manager of the Rivland & Clark theaters and Wm. Robertson of Goldwyn when the picture played at the Regent and Blackstone.

Law students of the University of Pittsburgh conducted the trial with Judge Jas. R. MacFarlane of the Court of Common Pleas on the bench. The trial was held in the County Court. Seven newspapers carried the story that the jury was unable to reach a verdict. Another stunt was the distribution of 5000 Berillion finger print record cards with a picture of Prof. Moriarity and advertising matter.

"Tess of the Storm Country"—United Artists—Strand

TUESDAY—Some eight years ago Mary Pickford appeared in a screen version of "Tess of the Storm Country" and thereby added several cubs to her stature as a popular star. Now she is bringing out a new version of the same story, and this time she is the star of the picture. She plays the role of "Tess" and is more than a little out of the ordinary. She gives a fine performance, and in her latest edition of the famous picture, far outstrips the Mary Pickford of eight years ago. And in that itself, is the highest praise we can give her present efforts.

MAIL—The New "Tess of the Storm Country" is the greatest picture Mary Pickford has ever given to the screen. It is one of the greatest pictures of motion picture history. Not only is she a star, but also a director of fine art. With the highest level of acting, this film is a masterpiece and the stars of the picture, Miss Pickford and Mr. Brady, are the real stars of the film. The picture is vastly improved from its predecessor.

JOURNAL—Mary Pickford now has a new success to her credit. It is a true masterpiece and a dedication to the art of motion picture making. Miss Pickford has always been a star, but this time she has really reached new heights. The picture is a triumph of art and a delight to the eye.

If there is any truth in the rumor of the Talmadges are to make films in Russia with the financial support of the Soviet Government. Or If Joseph M. Schenck alone is interested. And Whether it is a fact that his technical experience is to be placed at the disposal of the Soviets.
If the resulting films are likely to be of a propaganda character.
Who will issue them in Europe and the U.S.A.
What is the production for which, according to L'Intransigeant, Nino Rota is returning to Riga and Moscow.

"On the Banks of the Wabash" will be the first feature. It has been adapted by Forrest Halsey from Paul Darrow's song.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor
I'm a small town exhibitor, in fact he smallest; and eat to a funny little. I got my theater in Pneumonia, Nevada, population 96 and hundreds of coyotes. While the coyotes don't go to movie show, they're roused in by the salesmen when they're raising rentals based on population. Pneumonia is a mine town. We got a mine here. It run out of coal years ago, but the mine is still here. I open Tuesday and Saturday nights, if the print gets here, and Wednesday and Sunday if the prints can't get in late.
I advertise heavier than any other exhibitor, as I go personally to each house in town (21 of them) and tell them what attraction I'm playing the next opening night—100 per cent direct-to-customer exploitation. Then I have a one sheet and a slide, if the slide comes ahead of the print—and ain't broke up.
I know all about Rothfels, Plunkett and Reichenfeld. I have been reading about them for three years now, ever since I abandoned my flour and feed shop to take up entertaining as a career.

Harold Lloyd broke in on his theater activities long enough yesterday to lunch at the Astor, and was introduced by Vic Shapiro to a lot of film folk.

Promises to Aid Hays
B. Preston Clark of Boston, was the ringleader in the fight in Massachusetts to secure censorship of pictures. But as the result of correspondence passing with Will Hays, Clark recently sent Hays a letter containing this expression:

"As you know, I shall be glad to be of any help in this important matter, that lies in my power."

"As you and I both know, had the attitude of the Industry, more than three years ago, when we asked them to co-operate for better films, been as it is today, through you, the law would never have been passed in Massachusetts.

Harry Garson Here
Harry Garson is at the Ambassador, having arrived several days ago. He brought from the Coast a grant of "That Old Sweetheart of Mine," made from the famous poem of James Whitcomb Riley.

C. C. Gathering—Loew Threatened — Walker Says Exhibitors
Have No Organized Standing
The red hot meeting of the T. O.-
C. C. promised for yesterday at the Astor took place. The trade press was barred, so it was more or less of a star chamber session. But enough leaked out to indicate that there was no mincing of words, or lack of expression.

The trouble developed, as was anticipated, over the attitude of the memters towards the Circuit booking condition, and Marcus Loew was on hand and let the exhibitors know where he stood, and how he felt about it.

When one excited member yelled from the floor suggesting that the T. O. C. boycott Metro pictures if Loew continued the expansion of his circuit the suggestion was shouted down, but later Loew said that he intended to continue building theaters anywhere, that he was a progressive

Changing System
Famous Joins American Distributors Abroad Releasing New Subjects
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
London—Famous Players an-ounces four new productions for immediate release. These are "The Good Provider," "Saturday Night," "Bought and Paid For" and "The Young Diana." All trade shows have been closed until February. This indicates an effort of Famous to insert some of its newer pictures abroad and thus relieve the annoyance of the block booking situation.

E. E. Shauer, in charge of Famous foreign department, confirmed the above report yesterday. He said that it was true that an effort was being made to bring some of the newer pictures further abroad, but that there was no "official" arrangement of this sort yet.

AFCENT 576

Sometime what I do do not so entertaining, but I sure make an effort. And I originate my own piano music alternating with the phonograph.

But I got certain problems that exhibitors in other towns ain't got. For instance, just about the time I hire a big steamy film to project, some of my best customers get taken down with a headache, can't come and my profit is cut in half. One man, woman or child sick in town—bingo goes my gross receipts.

Maybe this don't apply in New York where people go out in all kinds of weather and whether they are sick or not, but not here.

I am going to give you an idea of what I mean. I read about a picture called "Why Men Wander," some kind of a sequel to "The Cheater." I read where a friend of mine over at Tombstone, Ariz., played it two days and that he went over with a smash, at Clifton Springs so I wrote to the salesman that comes through here twice a year and asked him when there were chances there of my getting it.

He wrote back and asked me if I wanted it first run.

I told him that I had the only picture house in town, and he wrote back that that constituted first run and that he would let me have the film for six dollars.

I wrote back at him and said that I wouldn't take it first run, that I would follow any other joint in town, he could find and that I would give him four dollars second run.

After a while I got a letter from the New York office of the company saying that their books showed I hadn't played "Why Men Wander," and that if I wanted it for exclusive run in Pneumonia, and by way of introducing their product, my clientele, I could have it for two dollars, with two one sheets, a three sheet and advance slides.

In the same mail I gets a letter from the salesman telling me that he would split the difference and let me have the picture for five bucks.

I wrote the salesman and told him I wasn't interested and then wrote back the New York office, accepting the offer they made me.

Well, when I got through dickeying, I was on the nut eighteen cents for postage and I started out to work up business. I visited every house in town and advised everyone that I was playing "Why Men Wander" on Saturday night. I worked it up great. It looked like a twelve dollar night for me.

Well, the week goes and I got the whole town to talking, and am putting on a prologue. There's a gur in this, sort of brittle in the belfry and whose got the name of running around with a lot of women so, as a publicity stunt, I plan to have him donate his service for fifty cents, to come out before the picture and tell his experiences of where he been to be a lawyer. I cut out all the smut.

It's the first time an elaborate prologue is put on here, so I figures on capacity I seats 114.

Counting the people who live here, and four visitors, I reckon on 104 people.

I am going to give you an idea of what I mean. I read about a picture called "Why Men Wander," some kind of a sequel to "The Cheater." I read where a friend of mine over at Tombstone, Ariz., played it two days and that he went over with a smash, at Clifton Springs so I wrote to the salesman that comes through here twice a year and asked him when there were chances there of my getting it.

He wrote back and asked me if I wanted it first run.

I told him that I had the only picture house in town, and he wrote back that that constituted first run and that he would let me have the film for six dollars.

I wrote back at him and said that I wouldn't take it first run, that I would follow any other joint in town, he could find and that I would give him four dollars second run.

After a while I got a letter from the New York office of the company saying that their books showed I hadn't played "Why Men Wander," and that if I wanted it for exclusive run in Pneumonia, and by way of introducing their product, my clientele, I could have it for two dollars, with two one sheets, a three sheet and advance slides.

In the same mail I gets a letter from the salesman telling me that he would split the difference and let me have the picture for five bucks.

I wrote the salesman and told him I wasn't interested and then wrote back the New York office, accepting the offer they made me.

Well, when I got through dickeying, I was on the nut eighteen cents for postage and I started out to work up business. I visited every house in town and advised everyone that I was playing "Why Men Wander" on Saturday night. I worked it up great. It looked like a twelve dollar night for me.

Well, the week goes and I got the whole town to talking, and am putting on a prologue. There's a gur in this, sort of brittle in the belfry and whose got the name of running around with a lot of women so, as a publicity stunt, I plan to have him donate his service for fifty cents, to come out before the picture and tell his experiences of where he been to be a lawyer. I cut out all the smut.

It's the first time an elaborate prologue is put on here, so I figures on capacity I seats 114.

Thursday

Mineakshad sails at 11 A.M. for Hamburg; mails close at 12 A.M. for Europe, Africa and West Asia; Denmark, specially addressed. United States sails at 12 A.M. for Copenhagen; mails close at 11 A.M. for Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland. Tenera sails at 12 A.M. for Valparaiso; mails close at 6.30 A.M. for Canal Zone, San Juan, Panama, Ecuador, Bolivia, Chile and Peru; except Equador. Tenera sails at 11 A.M. for Santa Cruz; mails close at 8 A.M. for Panama Canal, Canal Zone, Panama, and Nicaragua; except East Coast. Mexico sails at 12 A.M. for Vera Cruz; mails close at 10 A.M. for Yucatan and Campeche; Cuba and other parts of Mexico, specially addressed. Vasa sails at 11 A.M. for Haiti, Venezuela and Columbia, specially addressed.

Counting the people who live here, and four visitors, I reckon on 104 people.

However, Friday I meets Dr. Smith the local pill pusher and he tells me Lena Hardrake is down with swollen glands and that she will probably be in bed a week. That afternoon Luke Eberlein gets his foot crushed at the coal tipple, and his wife faints when she sees him. Pete LamBERT's baby gets taken down with croup and the family that's visiting the Brodies gets the word from some hootie hooch and blows out of town.

Answer—here I got the big super rent and five families are put out of business for me. I grossed six ninety-five, losing eighty cents on the night. Friday I got to go on to an exploitation program, with weather coming on, no one can tell how many of my customers will get colds over night and with the depression everyone's a sucker to take chances with big specials that demand prologues and a good piano player.

Yours truly,

London Notes
(From Ernest W. Fredman, "The Film Renter")

At last we are to see a German super film publically exploited in London, for I learn on reliable authority that "Du Barry" or as it is renamed "Passion," will be shown at the New South Street theater on Dec. 18.

It is utterly incomprehensible why these pictures have not been shown before, but now that a start is being made it will not be long I venture to think, before we have many of the great German "supers" showing all over the country. There is no ill feeling on the part of the trade towards these pictures and I do not imagine that they will receive anything but favorable criticism when they are shown to the public.

Film Booking Offices is putting out "Passion" whilst Goldwyn will probably also be releasing in the very near future four or five other German specials.

There is little record of the British film trade this week, things being a little quiet awaiting the advent of some of the big pictures that will shortly be screened. First National are putting out "East is West" as a pre-release, whilst I understood that "Foolish Wives" at the New Oxford Theater will be succeeded by a big British picture entitled "Flames of Passion." This is the picture in which Mac Marsh is featured with an all star cast, and a great deal is expected of this production.

In an announcement Jeffery Bernerd, Managing Director of Stolls, announces his policy of producing only big productions and has secured the rights to "The Wandering Jew" featuring Matheson Lang. This will be one of the mainstays of his program, whilst "The Prodigal Son" another big picture from the novel by Hall Caine is gradually approaching completion. This has cost many thousands of pounds up to date and is expected to be a very big success.

The trend of the trade today is undoubtedly for big pictures. "Nanook" a story of the Arctic wastes and of Eskimo life, has been playing at the New Gallery for four weeks and is likely to run for another five, whilst the West End Cinema has also run "The Game of Life" a British production for two weeks and will continue for at least another fortnight.

British films have during the past few months made amazing progress. One firm, Graham Wilcox Productions, have just completed a picture which has cost £450, and features Ma-Marsh, Welsh Pearson who produced such well-known features as "Quips," and "The Better Ole" have just issued a story comedy entitled "Quips Wins the Calcula Sweep" a really excellent production.

Stolls have recently completed "Dick Turpin's Ride to York" and has gone over very big "A Gypsy Cavalier" in which Carpenter is featured has also made a considerable success whilst English comedies notably "The Skipper's Wooing" have claimed the praise of the critics.

Chicago—Rapp & Rapp will spend $3,000,000 on a new house to be erected on the West Side. The new theater will be the second largest in the city.

Schine Expanding
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Gloversville, N. Y.—J. M. Schine is negotiating for two more theaters to be added to his chain. They are the Strand in Watertown and the Hippodrome in Carthage. Schine recently bought the Colligan in Carthage.

British production is going ahead to an extraordinary degree. Such firms as Ideal Films, Stolls, Graham Wilcox, and Hepworth in particular, are all working at full pitch and most of the productions are now on a big scale, mainly with big artists.

EVERY DAY YOU ARE HOLDING OUT ON YOURSELF
"The Covered Wagon" is on the Way!

Almost unbelievably stupendous is the task that Paramount has undertaken in making "The Covered Wagon." The possibilities of the story and the theme are so great that Paramount has felt justified in making the picture regardless of cost, time, or any limitations.

An army of 3000 actors is encamped in the Utah desert, ninety miles from a railroad. They have been there now for two months, and the picture is hardly half finished. There are 1000 horses, 500 oxen and 500 buffalo in the picture.

Here is a shot of part of the two mile wagon train, made up of 300 wagons which all had to be specially built:

To take care of the actors and make the picture, it was necessary to practically transport a studio out into the desert. A complete commissary department, tents for 3000, electric lighting plant, developing and projecting department, blacksmith shop, property construction shop, costume department, doctor's office, painting shop, financial, armory, publicity and carpentry departments are some of the units engaged.

Some of the thrills are a buffalo hunt, with 500 bison, the only remaining large herd in the world; the attack of 1000 Indians on the wagon train; the fording of a mile wide river; a prairie fire; a tornado; rescues from quicksands, and dozens more.

James Cruze is producing the picture from the novel by Emerson Hough.

A picture has been made of Fury—by Richard Barthelmess—adapted by Edmund Goulding.

And J. D. Williams says "Fury" is a greater picture and bigger box office picture than even "Tol'able David."

"The Bright Shawl" is being adapted for Richard Barthelmess by Edmund Goulding.

Addressed Advertisers—Tells Them They’re “About a King’s Business”—Made Honorary Member

Will H. Hays, guest of honor at A. M. P. A. yesterday delivered a speech which should be made every member proud that he was in the picture business. At the conclusion of his address and at the request of C. F. Yearsley the unanimous membership welcomed him to the organization as an Honorary member.

Seldom have the members been so interested as Hays talked to them. He said the press had sensed what he was trying to do when he entered the industry, and that he had wanted to help the Advertisers for some time, guarding their problems—his own and theirs. He said he wanted to be with them; that he was not a British Company Burns Scenes Costing 10,000 Pounds Rather Than Offer Poor Stuff to U. S.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—An example of the way British producers are focusing their attention on the American market is furnished by one of the most significant events of the year, the scrapping of a film which cost 10,000 pounds for the latest Graham Wilcox production, “Paddy the Next Best Thing,” taken from the stage success of Charles Marsh as star. The film destroyed was 5,000 feet of exterior scenes taken near Devon.

“The destruction of 7,000 feet of valuable film was an act demanding considerable courage,” said Wilcox. “It was a sacrifice, but I am convinced that we were able to send an imperfect film to the United States we would forfeit profits considerably more than 10,000 pounds.”

The rejected scenes are being reshot. Speaking of his decision, Wilcox said: “We have been notified at Miss Marsh may leave for New York to fulfill an engagement.

Steffes Wants Harmony—Cohen’s Position—Some Comment

It is six months away from the National meeting of the M. P. O. A., but the political party is already anxious to simmer down and forebears its threats to burst over.

Reported Important Foreign Director May Make “Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall”

It is understood that negotiations are under way which may result in a contract between Ernst Lubitsch directing Mary Pickford in “Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall.”

Lubitsch is under contract with Famous Players, and is due to arrive here sometime next month. It was expected that his visit would primarily be to undertake production in this country for Famous, but if the negotiations are successful, he will be loaned to Mary Pickford to make a production which is expected to be on a very large scale.

Probably no foreign director stands as high in picture circles as Lubitsch. When "Passion" was released, and with subsequent releases, Lubitsch became very popular here, and while his latest release "The Loves of Pharaoh" was too heavy in subject matter to attract great attention, at the same time his skill as a director was again emphasized.

The working combination of Pickford and Lubitsch should result in a really great picture.

It was impossible to locate Mary Pickford yesterday with regard to this matter.

Czar, and didn't want to be. Among those important branches of the industry he reckoned the publicity and advertising as among the first if not the first, and he pleaded that every succeeding day they try to do a little better in lifting the industry where it belonged, adding that a failure-to-do this was "a definite laches of duty."

"I have undertaken the honesty of purpose, and the integrity of the movement," he declared sincerely. He told of receiving many letters daily from oversensitive folks about the wrong things in pictures. "And we are the servants of these people," he added, "I'm not a prude. But it's good business to cultivate that part of the public, for the m Movies picture is the greatest factor in the life of this country. 'Some day,' he added, 'they'll build monuments to the men who made this great industry what it is.'"

He urged the Advertisers to be truthful in their statement. He said that in the past the people in the industry had been misled, "but," he went on fervently, "you're in a king's business. To which he added the thought that pictures were the most potent power for solving international relationships that exist. This brought a great cheer.

He told of the winning of the Massachussets battle, and how the proposed censorship had been aided by salacious advertising of a picture which was not salacious. He then quoted figures to show the importance of the industry in California, pointing out that while the oil business did $100,000,000 interest last year, with an average weekly pay roll of $100,000 motion pictures did $140,000,000 with an average weekly payroll of $500,000.

One of the principal effects of the amalgamation, according to the companies involved, is that it will be possible to obtain American productions at reasonable terms. This will benefit exhibitors, and is expected to result in lower admission prices. It is claimed here that American pictures have been offered to Scandinavia, with the population of 11 millions, at prices considerably higher than those obtained for France with a population about three and a half times as large.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

The Retort Courteous

La Porte, Ind.—Manager H. K. Reddington and the Central and Bill Deering, Paramount exploiter, call-ed on George Scholl of Scholl's dairy and gave him a selling talk on how Paramount bathed the films of "The Old Homestead," in milk, and Scholl used the idea in his advertising.

After the run of the picture, Red-dington said to Scholl, "It's a shame how we rapped you in. We don't really bathe films in milk."

"I know it," said Scholl, "but it was good advertising for me.

Calico Beauty Contest

A stunt stunt put on by First Na-tional for "The Infi-del" is that the campaign feature a "calico beauty" contest. Theatres have constantly sponsored the contest and the contestants have always been em-blished by all that the dressmaker could create.

The suggestion specifies that a "calico contest" should be limited to entrants who appear in calico or gingham and allow the audience to judge purely on beauty, unbiased by a millinery display. The suggestion has new angles and offers a workable proposition.

Chinese Ballyhoo

Paducah, Ky.—Manager Richard Deering, Warner Bros. exploiter, has done some intensive research work for the weird but effective street bally-hoo he used in connection with "East is West." A multi-colored Chinese pan-juun, carried by four men was the street ballyho. At each theater show the bally-hoo was done over with bamboo strips and Chinese lanterns giving the effect of a tea garden doorway. An unusual method was followed in the cutting of the cutouts of the paper, the three leading characters as represented by Constance Talmadge, Edward Peil and Warner Oland stepping forward to say, "I'm Ming Toy;" "I'm Billy Benson" and "I'm Cholly Yong."

First "Lorna Doone" Stunt

Pittsburgh—First visible evidence of the exploitation campaigns prepared for "Lorna Doone" came to light when the Grand and Regent opened with the attraction.

The star window display was a sta- tionary and block style which featured the photoplay edition of the well-known novel with photographs of Madge Bellamy, the leading lady, and the leading women proclaming it as "My Own Edition," the publishers having dedicated it to her.

The music of "Lorna Doone" and phonograph records of the songs proved effective mediums for other window dents for sales. Some of these stores were hung up, evidencing again the benefit to retailers in motion picture tie-ups and the good exhibitors can create by discriminating use of exploitation mediums.

Evening Clothes worn

Wenatchee, Wash.—Tuxedo suits worn by the ushers and all other the-atre attendants helped materially to put over the new Charles Ray feature, "A Tailor Made Man," when it was shown at the Liberty. This theatre is one of the Jensen and Von Herberg chain and is managed by W. L. Douldah, who put on this the Apollo seized the opportunity to tie-up with a popular newspaper con-test in which the publishers were offering $50,000 in prizes during the recent show of "Silvers Wings." The result packed the Apollo during each of the entire week's perf-ormance.

In the window of the downtown offices of the daily was placed a small curtain on which were flashed various scenes from the picture. These flashes were intermittent and were used by the newspaper to attract the crowds that other slides and motion pictures explaining the contest might be shown.

A Book That Opened

Middletown, Conn.—T. M. (Ted) Browning of the Grand, improved upon the western versions of "The Masquerader" book by having a walking volume that opened up.

The outside covers were straight displays advertising of Guy Bates Post and the attraction at the Grand. The inside pages were "Inspiration" copy that suggested what could be expected from the picture, with a half page of straight billing. The book was four feet high and three feet long, closed both.

The masked man who piloted it through the streets followed out in-carations. The processions had gathered a crowd. The releasing of a clasp made the book open automatic-ally. After the audience had had time to read the billing the book closed up and the artist went along his way.

step aside in the interests of harmony for something acceptable at least and voted the New York unit back into the fold. His proposition was fully detailed in a communication sent by Steffes to Martin J. O'Keefe, publisher of the Exhibitor's Herald, Chicago, in which Steffes declares that for several months past he with others has been working to bring about har-mony with the New York State unit. In this communication Steffes says:

"I would be more than pleased if the New York State unit would again come into the national organization. If necessary to bring this about, I am willingly and ready, if for the benefit of the theatre operators, Cohen has the power to hand the executive board and allow the remaining members to elect a man from the New York State unit, for the balance of my term of office. I believe if an actual poll was taken of the officers and executive committee, you would find that there are several big enough and willing to do the same thing in order to bring about a cent harmony organization.

When the attention of Charles O'Reilly of the New York State unit was directed to this, O'Reilly said he would do nothing to say and he was too busy with matters relative to Albany to go into any discussion about na-tional matters.

Those who move behind the scenes in the national politics of the industry commenting on this yesterday and those who had the harmony possible. It was also pointed out that all those who had declared he was not a candidate and in Washington he said he would not be a candidate to succeed himself in 1923 that some of his friends might insist upon his remaining on the job and that in fact quite a number of states had already considered his decision. Regarding this, Cohen has nothing to say beyond that he has expressed himself as to how he stands.

Some Interesting Anecdotes About This Universal Oldtimer and His Methods

Irving Lesser, Sol's big brother, contributes the following:

"Back in 1913 and 1914, when I was manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, San Francisco, one of the earliest enterprises of my mother and myself, it used to be my pleasure to directly deal with Mr. Marks of the Acme theater, whom you wrote about in one of your recent stories.

"One of the amusing incidents at the time I was selling this man was the booking of "QUO VADIS," after it was a few years old at a rental of $10. He used the picture right away, running one reel a day."

Irving Lesser said yesterday that he understood that these negotiations were under way, but that he had received no further word.

"We had an old imported feature when features were quite rare and, of course, it was not so much of a feature as it is today."

"The title of one of our most popular pictures was THE BURNING TRAIN; either Italian or French, and I do not hesitate to sincerely state that Mr. Marks booked it more than 25 times in the same theater."

"He made it a point to buy a certain amount of service from me because it had its custom to come in about nine o'clock in the morning and take his film and paper under his arm and go out and open up about 10 A.M."

"At any time we did not have a good picture with good paper available or a new one, the usual argument was "Well, sell THE BURNING TRAIN."

"It was never the price or quality of the picture, because he paid $1.50 a reel for the better of the condition of the paper, so we would go into the lithograph department and we would wind out the pan and, if it was alright THE BURNING TRAIN was booked again."

"It did not make much difference whether he ran the whole four reels or one of them as long as he had the BURNING TRAIN, and the swell paper up in front of the theater."

"I cannot start to name the different classes of people that he showed to."

"Once in a while I used to call on him in the night and when I used to take a little selling trip in my Ford.

"Of all the laughs I ever had in my life, it was to see Mr. Marks at the box office and sitting in the box office and giving sales arguments to every customer."

Well, I got 'Lena's Load' booked for next Wednesday night, and it depends on whether our leading merchant, Stoney Inglehair dies this week or not, whether I open that night. You see, Stoney's daughter is to get married next Tuesday and her father is very sick with some new kind of diabetes and if he dies, the wedding is off, and I get the crowd. If he doesn't croak, and the wedding happens, the mob will naturally go for the free eats—and I'll probably only get my passes back.

I tried to postpone the date till the next day, but the exchange said they needed the print back immediately.

I know that's the bunk, for the darn thing ain't played a date in two years, not here. I never wanted anyone to die, but as it's a foregone conclusion that Stoney's got to go soon anyway, I wish he'd git it over before this week's up, it sure means a lot to me.

A salesman went through here this week. I think he's a new one in the game too, he didn't mention Zukor, Williams or Rowland by their first names and never said "Lousy" once, although all the other boys that go through, use it all the time.

I got an offer to act as salesman in this section from a firm, and am considering it. Will write you about it later. Will want your advice.

It's the first offer that's ever come to me from any film company that might mean some dough for me, so it's worrying me; in fact I'm even suspicious.

Can you tell me who has shorter subjects than the short subjects they are sending out?

Best regards from Mrs. Deneker and myself,

Yours truly,

CLEM DENEKER

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......Over 9,000 feet

About eight years ago when Mary was under the Zukor banner they brought out “Tess of the Storm Country.” It had a slow start, didn’t seem to be getting anywhere and then all of a sudden the public woke up to it and from then on it was a box office triumph. In some towns it was repeated four or five times. It proved one of the greatest successes of Mary’s career.

Undoubtedly it was a smart move for Mary to again secure possession of the story. In the past eight years there has been a tremendous development in the making of pictures. All of this could not but help to make “Tess” a very valuable piece of property; and it is.

But best of all, forgetting the story, “Tess” gives Mary the sort of a character which has endeared her for years to the American public. There isn’t a bit of hokum from the wriggling of her toes to her saucy impish mannerisms that is overlooked. They have rung in several clever mechanical ideas that are rather reminiscent of what Chaplin did in “The Kid,” but the audience loves it. And then again when the opportunity comes for Mary to demonstrate her ability as an actress, especially in the serious moments, she shows what a great artist she is. The pantomime where she realizes what it is to have clean hands so that she might be able to touch the fingers of the boy she is in love with is probably the most exquisite bit of work of its kind ever done for the screen in this country. She demonstrates so easily here her great gift of pantomime that it seems a pity that there isn’t more of this for her to do. You need neither title nor description.
Everything is clear and easily understandable. It is a beautiful piece of work.

For about three or four reels this rides along and is a wonderful picture. It looks like 100 per cent, and then it sags. Something happens and until the very finish it doesn’t pick up. It is draggy, has unimportant sequences, all of them running too long. There is no explanation as to why her father is at liberty and it isn’t just what you would expect, but there isn’t any question that the average audience will overlook this and be delighted to do so because of the tremendous charm of the rest of the story.

Production values are good, the cast is satisfying, Gloria Hope being especially good, and there is a wonderful baby.

Talk Only About Mary. Make All the Promises You Want

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“Tess of the Storm Country” is going to get you more money than any picture Mary has made for some time. It gives her an opportunity to be the Mary that people love, the Mary who has delighted millions and she is so charming and delightful all the way that this is a sure fire business getter. When they leave they are going to be talking about it and like it and this should help business a lot.

There isn’t anything to talk about excepting Mary and there is no reason why you should bother about anything else anyway. It has been a long time since your folks saw Mary and then many of them didn’t like her in “Little Lord Fauntleroy.” But you can make a lot of promises as to how much they will like her in this and she will redeem everyone of them. If you think it necessary, tell them that as “Tess” she is a little ragged, ignorant, but loveable child of a squatter fishing settlement. Tell them it was one of her greatest former successes and that it is better now than it was eight years ago.

Chaplin’s Latest Has Background at Church

Charlie Chaplin in “THE PILGRIM”

Associated First Natl. Pictures

DIRECTOR ................. Charlie Chaplin
AUTHOR .................. Charlie Chaplin
SCENARIO BY ............ Not credited
CAMERAMAN .............. Not credited
AS A WHOLE.............. Not up to the Chaplin standard.
Be careful of your church folk

STORY.....Escaped convict steals minister’s clothes, acts as clergyman until apprehended and then is allowed to wander into Mexico, free DIRECTION.......About what can always be expected with Chaplin. Depends entirely upon gags and stunts

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Ordinary
LIGHTINGS ................ Fair

STAR....Somehow or the other he just misses doing the big things which his latest pictures have given the right to expect

SUPPORT.......None worth talking about. Edna Purviance has little to do and Sidney Chaplin is in one sequence

EXTERIORS .................. All right
INTERIORS .................. Will do

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Be careful. It may be that some church folk will overlook the basic idea of Chaplin’s latest, but make sure of this before you take a chance

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 4,000 feet

When Charlie Chaplin made “The Kid” he stepped into the hall of fame, and was regarded as one of the greatest artists the screen had ever seen. Everyone knew he had always been a great comedian, and it would be impossible, of course, to maintain the standard that “The Kid” presented, but that’s hardly an excuse for Chaplin dropping so lamentably as he does in his latest “The Pilgrim.”

Of course, Chaplin is funny. There are some sequences that are going to take the average audience right off their feet, but unfortunately they are far too few, and the Chaplin crowd expects more of this kind of material. They may not be satisfied, because Chaplin has taught them not to be satisfied with just a laugh here and there. In addition to this is the more important point of whether or not even a great comedian like Chaplin can afford to take the risk of offending the church going public of this or any other country. It may be all right in the big cities where they are broadminded, but in the small towns and villages of America the church holds a very definite position in the lives of the people of the community, and it is a serious question just how these people are going to regard the Chaplin picture, plot and episodes.

It starts off showing Chaplin as an escaped convict who steals the clothes of a minister in swimming, and from there on leads the life of a minister until he is apprehended and turned free into the dreary wastes of the Mexican border. This would be all right if some of the action did not so far transgress some ideas that some church people may entertain. For instance, there is a sequence showing Charlie in the church. Of course he doesn’t know what to do, and when the collection boxes are presented at the alter he weighs them carefully, one in each hand, and then while he smiles beamingly to those on the side which gave the most money he glares at the others. This is mighty good comedy, but if your people happen to like their church they may not think it so funny, and there may be a kick back.

There are other sequences which certainly are funny enough, but bring up the same darn question. For instance, while riding in a smoker he is chewing dry crackers and a big hulking deputy sheriff opens a newspaper showing a $5,000 reward and his photograph for Chaplin’s arrest. This causes Charlie to blow out or spit all of his dry crackers and make a hurried exit from the train. It is funny, but again it goes right back to the same question.

Probably the funniest sequence in the whole picture is where as the clergyman is having tea a youngster arrives with his parents. He is of the pugnacious type and likes to beat his father and mother in the jaw. His mother tells him to play with the minister, and he proceeds to beat up Charlie. He takes it goodnaturedly while the family are present but kicks the kid under the table when they are gone.

Another funny sequence is that where the child places a derby hat over a pudding and Chaplin pours the sauce including a lot of thick white creamy stuff over the presumed pudding. Later he cannot cut into the pudding and all too late it is discovered that the pudding is a hat. This will surely bring a roar.

It’s a Chaplin—This Should Be Enough But Be Careful

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It’s a Chaplin. That is sure enough attraction to get them in. You will have no trouble to do business with any Chaplin picture, but you had better think this one over a lot from the angle of how your church folk are liable to regard it. If you think they are broadminded, or that the humor and comedy will overbalance their feelings put this one on. It doesn’t begin to compare with some of his others, but after all it is a Chaplin, and Chaplin holds a tremendously strong position in the industry.

Everything that you do will of course depend upon how you use Chaplin’s name, and if, after you weigh the matter carefully you feel sure you can get away with it then all right, but you had better use your best judgment.
Alice Brady in “ANNA ASCENDS”

Paramount

DIRECTOR ...................... Victor Fleming
AUTHOR ...................... Harry Chapman Ford
SCENARIO BY ............... Margaret Turnbull
CAMERAMAN ..................... Gilbert Warrenton

AS A WHOLE... A first rate entertainment; above the average in many ways; a thoroughly interesting picture

STORY...... Unusual combination of comedy, drama and romance, splendidly blended together

DIRECTION.... Very good; gets most out of material and has handled situations very well

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right
LIGHTINGS .................... Good
STAR...... Very fine in this; best thing she's done in some time

SUPPORT...... First rate all the way through; includes Robert Ellis, David Powell, Nita Naldi, Charles Gerrard, Edward Durand, Florence
Dixon

EXTERIORS ...................... Suitable
INTERIORS ...................... Adequate
DETAIL .......................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY.... Syrian waitress rises from obscurity to fame as writer who later exposes band of smugglers

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....... 5,959 feet

This is without doubt the best and most appropriate vehicle that they have given Alice Brady in many a day. It gives her the type of role for which she is most suited and plenty of opportunities to play in her own particular style. Her interpretation of the part is her best performance in some time and should do a lot to reestablish her with her admirers as well as gain some new ones for her.

Victor Fleming has handled the story especially well and rendered a faithful adaptation of the stage play, in which Alice Brady also appeared. Fleming injects the proper spirit and atmosphere from start to finish and his comedy touches are genuinely fine. They always happen in at the opportune moment and all register laughs. The Syrian coffee house episode is finely done and the work of the star, Robert Ellis and Edward Durand right here is particularly interesting.
This is one of the feature's best sequences. The atmosphere is always right. Edward Durand makes his first screen appearance as Siad, proprietor of the coffee house, where the smugglers have their headquarters. He is a fine type and likely to prove popular with the casting directors.

The story's development is very good and Fleming has succeeded in increasing the interest as he progresses and at the same time manages to maintain a satisfactory degree of logic. The only bit that is a trifle inconsistent is that Anna should have feared the smugglers sufficiently to keep silent regarding their actions. She was so clever that she might have realized she had more on them than they had on her. Of course there is a plausible alibi in the fact that she might not have been able to prove her innocence in connection with the murder of one of the band.

Story: Anna, a Syrian immigrant, is waitress in Siad's coffee house in the Syrian settlement in New York. Howard Fisk, son of the publisher of one of the big dailies, is tipped off that Siad's shop is the headquarters for a band of smugglers. He wins Anna's confidence, but as she is about to phone Fisk of her discoveries the Baron, one of the band, attacks her and in the struggle Anna believes she has killed him. Three years later finds Anna the anonymous author of a popular book, “Anna Ascends,” a story of her own life. How Fisk finds her and Anna eventually exposes the crooks to clear her own name, is followed by her marriage to Fisk.

Here's a Good Chance to Increase Star's Popularity

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a first rate entertainment that should please most any one. It combines comedy, drama and romance in a most interesting fashion and the production is consistently good. You can talk about the dramatic moments, and a trailer of these bits would certainly serve to bring them back. Also give them an idea of the humorous touches. They are very worth while.
You can safely promise a delightful performance by Alice Brady and the supporting cast is unusually strong and worthy of comment.

You might make an extra effort to strengthen the star's following with “Anna Ascends.” Catchlines will give an idea of the story and stress the idea of the immigrant waitess who became a prominent author.
Let them know the cast holds such names as Robert Ellis, Nita Naldi and David Powell.

A swift moving and absorbing crook drama revolves about Mae Marsh. It teaches the valuable lesson never to sign on the dotted line without reading the paper. The picture is most interesting and pleasing and has an excellent cast.

This picture has to recommend it to moviegoers an excellent actress in the person of Mae Marsh, a delightful band of burglars of the Gilbert and Sullivan type, quite the jolliest crew of criminals we have seen in some time, some original war scenes and a thrilling fight in the final reel in "Till We Meet Again," thanks to Cabanee, the director, does not stand around and register horror but takes an active part.

with FRED NIBLO
Directed by VICTOR SCHERTZINGER

A rare combination.
Enid Bennett and Fred Niblo directed by Victor Schertzinger in a story by R. Cecil Smith.
Supporting cast includes Donald MacDonald, Melbourne McDowell, Virginia Sothern, Billy Elmer and J. P. Lockney.
The "bootlegger's daughter" (Enid Bennett) is shunned by all good folks because of her father's shady business. She never had a chance until a broad-minded clergyman with a sense of humor (Fred Niblo) sets her right. In time the despised bootlegger's daughter becomes the town's pride and joy.

It's a drama, replete with romance and comedy. Rely on Enid Bennett and Fred Niblo for that.

Victor Schertzinger's big idea in directing is action, atmosphere and interest.

In its review the Motion Picture News said:
"Recently pictures built along the lines of this one had a very successful run, mainly because they were well exploited. The same thing can be done with this one. The story and cast of this feature eclipses any other feature of its type."

“BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN”
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ..................... E. Mason Hopper
AUTHOR ........................ Peter B. Kyne
SCENARIO BY ........................ Grant Carpenter
CAMERAMAN ........................ John J. Mescall
AS A WHOLE...... Light, clever and entertaining, and should go well

STORY...... Preaches that women of all kinds and classes should be treated alike inasmuch as they do the same things, and have the same faults

DIRECTION...... Kept tempo even and refrained from preaching

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. At times, very good LIGHTINGS .......................... Average
PLAYERS.....Uniformly good cast; Pat O’Malley’s work stands out EXTERIORS .............................. Good
INTERIORS .............................. Satisfy
DETAIL...............Titles put over weak story
CHARACTER OF STORY......Will go anywhere
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......4,983 feet

Just as Kipling demonstrated that Judy O’Grady and the Colonel’s lady were sisters under the skin, Peter Kyne proves his case for the sterner sex. As a matter of fact, Kyne really deals with women, and their treatment by their respective husbands, and it is more of a sister under the skin than brothers, that is unfolded very deftly with just the right touch by Mason Hopper.

It would have been easy to spoil this by treating it seriously; and the opportunities were numerous, but Hopper kept it down to a comic, light and bubbly spirit, refrained from preaching, and the result is a mighty interesting picture which should give general satisfaction and send them out laughing about the way the two women, the rich man’s wife and the poor man’s wife, have the same feminine faults; how the two men treat them identically alike, and the result proves satisfactory in each case. If the story had to be told briefly, this would tell it: “Treat ’em rough and they’ll like it.”

There are innumerable incidents in both the lives of the rich as well as the poor family that ring true and the extravagance of the poor man’s wife who will buy anything for a dollar down and fifty cents a week is just as true to thousands of people as the wife of the rich man buying a gorgeous fur coat when she cannot afford it. The best part of all is that none of this is overplayed and when at the finish Pat O’Malley starts to swing at his spouse and she keeps on ducking successfully it brings a howl.

Helene Chadwick as the wife of the poor man has more to do and does it better than Claire Windsor as the wife of the rich man. Mae Busch hasn’t much to do, and Pat O’Malley walks away with the picture.

In the early stages you don’t know what it’s all about, but after a while it clears up and you begin to get somewhere. From there on it’s mighty good stuff.

Play to Your Married Folks; They’ll Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It won’t do to make too much of a fuss over this one, but you can put it on with an assurance that it is going to satisfy, and if you have a lot of young married couples in your clientele, you can develop some very clever teaser material to be used as the basis for your exploitation.

If you can obtain the material so effectively used in New York before the opening of the “Association of Brothers Under the Skin.” It’s mighty good material, and your local newspaper will doubtless be glad to run it.

Another good talking point will be to make clear to your people that all of their domestic troubles are brought to the forefront in this picture. There is hardly a family, rich or poor, but what at some time has had the same sort of discussion and argument over the question of extravagance, and because it is familiar and homelike they are going to like it.

If your people like names, you have a number to work with, as practically all of them have at times been starred in various productions, so you can easily talk about an all-star cast.
A Splendid Picture of the Great Northwest and the Wonderful Dog Strongheart

"BRAWN OF THE NORTH"

Trimble-Murfin Prod.—Asso. First Nat'l Pictures
DIRECTOR ....................... Laurence Trimble
AUTHOR ........................ Jane Murfin
SCENARIO BY . Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin
CAMERAMAN ....................... C. B. Dryer
AS A WHOLE....Wonderful dog, Strongheart, and some surefire audience appeal material should put this over

STORY......Life in the great outdoors in the snowy northwest with the dog constantly featured DIRECTION...........On the whole, good. Some entirely unnecessary shots of Strongheart's love affair with Lady Silver, a full-blooded wolf

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................... Excellent
LIGHTINGS......Very good. Mostly out door stuff
INTERIORS ......................... Sufficient
EXTERIORS.......Some gorgeous locations, cloud and sky effects

DETAIL......Occasionally too much, especially in the sequence of the dog and the lady wolf

CHARACTER OF STORY ......Should appeal particularly to those who like good strong drama, and Strongheart takes care of himself. Question whether it will have as great an appeal as "The Silent Call"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......About 7,000 feet

One of last season's greatest triumphs was "The Silent Call" in which Strongheart, a magnificent wolf dog, was such a great success that the actors and actresses in the cast were forgotten. It was not only a fine picture but a triumph for this splendid dog.

And now Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin have produced their second feature, and of course, Strongheart is again all over the camera. They have built up a story of the great northwest with its wild white spaces and primeval silences, as the title writers say. They have the same will and the same pretty girl who is always in distress, but in all of this Strongheart weaves his way, and he is either rescuing his mistress or protecting her from assault or something or other to keep him in the forefront.

They are a bit different in this one, and show you the heroine after she is married with the usual cute baby, of course. And here is where the picture gets its biggest wallop. First they show the wolves surrounding the hut in which the heroine, her husband and the baby are living. Then they show the hungry wolves following the scent and tracking this trio on their way to the settlement. There are two big fights, one in which the wolves are beaten, and the other during which Strongheart unaided unties the furry infant from the sledge and carries his precious bundle far across the snowy plains finally depositing it in the home of a missionary. This is great audience stuff. It is bound to satisfy.

The producers have seen fit to use several lengthy sequences showing the call of a full blooded wolf, and the call is answered by the dog. There probably was a very definite purpose in their minds in so doing, but it is a question whether this is the sort of material that mothers would like their young daughters to see.

Irene Rich gives an excellent performance as the heroine, and Lee Shumway is very good as the villain, but Strongheart is the chief attraction.

Some of the locations indicating the great northwest are truly magnificent.

Tell Them About the Thrills, the Wolves and the Rescue

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't any doubt but that this type of picture is usually successful. Furthermore, there is hardly a question but that Strongheart is one of the foremost canine celebrities. Certainly those who saw "The Silent Call" will have a hard time to forget him. If you think that your people are in the mood or would like to see a story of the great outdoors, and in addition again visualize what great work can be done by such a dog, then by all means catch this one.

There are certain communities where apparently (from results obtained) it is difficult to interest fans unusually in this type of picture, but both by his work in this as well as the reputation established in "The Silent Call," Strongheart should get them in.

Talk about the thrilling fight and the wolves and stress the importance of the sequence in which Strongheart rescues the infant. It is great stuff.

If your people like names, Irene Rich has a good following and you can feature her.
Uncommon

Without exception, critics have so classified THE FORGOTTEN LAW.

"Something entirely new in theme. That alone would make the picture worth while," is how the Exhibitor's Herald put it; the Motion Picture News named it "An eternal triangle story with a 'different' twist, filled with dramatic situations."

"A strong vein of originality," the Exhibitor's Trade Review noted, adding: "The feature is likely to win a high degree of favor with movie fans." The Morning Telegraph, too, found "An unusual theme" and "The production, direction and photography good."

Acting is of Prime Importance

One of the best directors in the movies once said: "Give me good actors, before everything. They've got to tell the story. If they can't do it, it never gets told."

The same insistence upon the quality of acting is evident in the case of THE FORGOTTEN LAW. The list of players is impressive: Milton Sills, Cleo Ridgely, Jack Mulhall, Alec B. Francis and Muriel Dana—to name a few.

"WHEN THE DESERT CALLS"
Pyramid Pictures—American Releasing Corp.

DIRECTOR .................... Ray C. Smallwood
AUTHOR .................... Donald McGibney
SCENARIO BY .................. Peter Milne
CAMERAMAN .................... Michael Joyce
AS A WHOLE.....Rather good desert story with plenty of colorful atmosphere and some slightly new situations
STORY......Has fairly good audience appeal and a good continuity helps hold the interest DIRECTION......All right except for dragging the ending; otherwise holds attention first rate
PHOTOGRAPHY .................... Good
LIGHTINGS .................... Vary STAR..................Quite pleasing and capable SUPPORT.....Robert Frazer handles dual role very well with Sheldon Lewis a convincing villain; others Huntly Gordon, J. Barney Sherry, David Wall
EXTERIORS.............Provide right atmosphere
INTERIORS .................... Suitable
DETAIL .................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY.......Couple separated through intrigue of woman's admirer, are reunited years later upon the desert
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION............6,159 feet

To those who like sheik stories and desert atmosphere, "When the Desert Calls" offers an interesting picture that will likely prove quite entertaining. Director Smallwood has given the story a good production in securing attractive locations for the desert sequences, the selection of a cast to support the star and for the most part the manner in which he has handled the situations is effective. He sustains the interest through a good development with the exception of the conclusion which drags quite a bit. Cutting could, however, speed it up in the last reels. It needs it to give the picture a satisfying ending. Since it is obvious that the husband and wife will be reunited anyway it doesn't build for a more powerful climax by holding up on it.

The story is rather conventional screen material but the kind that still appeals to a good majority of picture patrons. It includes the popular dual role in which a wife once again mistakes another man for her husband. While this leads to interesting complications it is not convincing since the woman was aware of the presence of a man whom she mistook for her husband previously, but immediately realized her mistake. When the other man is killed, however, she accepts his death for that of her husband.

It is also difficult to understand why the husband suddenly distrusts his wife when he finds that an admirer whom he has protected her from before is again annoying her. Nevertheless these bits lead into more interesting events in the desert sequence in the latter reels.

Violet Heming is a pleasing heroine and quite capable of handling the part. She is not properly lighted for close-ups. Robert Frazer has fine opportunities in the dual role and acquires himself satisfactorily. Sheldon Lewis does good work as the villain and the cast in general is well suited.

Story: Manners pursues Louise Caldwell and frames a forgery charge on her husband, Eldred, to separate the two. Louise takes refuge with a desert caravan, believing her husband a suicide victim. Later Sheik El-din, being treated in a hospital where Louise is nursing, discloses his true identity, Eldred Caldwell. There follows a reunion of husband and wife, Manners having met his death some time before.

Exploitation Should Be Easy With This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The sheik pictures have created quite a following for this type of story and atmosphere, so if your folks have manifested an interest in any recent desert pictures that you have shown it should be easy to put "When the Desert Calls" over to your satisfaction. Stills in the lobby will attract attention and displayed with the title should give them a good idea of what the picture is like.

Violet Heming is better known on the stage, but you can use her name and promise them a pleasing performer. Give Robert Frazer a place in your announcements for his work in this, and other names you can use are Sheldon Lewis and J. Barney Sherry. Both are known to your patrons. Lobby display would also be an effective means of attracting attention to the showing. Your attendants in sheik costumes would cause comment.
This Is Not of the "Fewer and Better" Type

Dorothy Revier in “A BROADWAY MADONNA”

Harry Revier Prod.—Film Booking Offices

DIRECTOR ......................... Harry Revier
AUTHOR .......................... Harry Revier
SCENARIO BY ...................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ........................ Not credited

AS A WHOLE .......... Not particularly attractive both in production and material

STORY ........ Absurd situations with dramatic climax that carries no force or conviction DIRECTION .......... Below the average; an obvious effort to supply the market for sensational stuff with a vehicle

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Seldom good LIGHTINGS ........................ Poor

STAR ................... Altogether too theatrical

SUPPORT ...... The only one in the cast who does work worth mentioning is not given credit—the mother. Jack Connolly an uninteresting hero; Harry Van Meter the usual villain and Juanita Hansen spoiled by terrible make-up

EXTERIORS ....................... Few; all right
INTERIORS ..................... Adequate

DETAIL ........................ Didn't bother much about it

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Blackmailing game which implicates innocent son of his father's murder for which mother takes blame

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

Certainly this sort of picture gets the industry no further ahead in its desire for fewer and better pictures, and the campaign will be a miserable failure if they offer many such pictures as “The Broadway Madonna.”

It looks like, and probably is, a deliberate effort to supply a certain market which caters to the sensation loving class of picture patrons,—those who like any kind of a degenerate theme that you can hand them and the more meller, the better they like it. This feature is a direct appeal to them but it sticks right there. The story is a cheap concoction of situations with blackmail and murder playing the leads. In an effort to save it a little there is a slight heart interest twist in which a mother goes to prison to save her son whom she believes guilty of murdering his father. But it doesn't register convincingly, and you have little sympathy for the little old lady in her part in the play despite the fact that her performance is more sincere, and she does the best work of any of the players—and is not given credit on the screen.

The plot is poorly constructed and played in true theatrical fashion. A man uses the medical profession as a blind for his real business of blackmail (one twist that is likely to cause some dissonance from medical quarters). This same man has an obliging wife who enforces a judge's son, the object of the blackmail. When the supposed doctor murders the judge, the wife perjures herself to convict the judge's son, but his mother bravely shoulders the guilt and is behind the bars when the doctor's office attendant comes forth as the heroine of the play and supplies the evidence which clears hero's name and lands the doctor and his wife in jail.

Production values are below the average, and there is little talent in the cast. Dorothy Revier is artificial in her playing, but may register with the vamp-loving crowd. The titles are poor.

Chief Appeal to Those Who Seek Cheap Sensational Stories

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who want to assist in giving the public worth while entertainment and help the industry to hold its proper place, will have to eliminate such pictures as tend to prevent its advancement. This picture will appeal only to the cheap, sensation-seeking class in downtown districts. It will offend those seeking wholesome screen entertainment.

Undoubtedly the title will be a good one for the box office in the districts where the film will be best received. It is decidedly out of the question for family entertainment and certainly not for juvenile audiences at all. Protect yourself by not showing it if you cater to regular patronage and family trade. Downtown houses will probably do very well with it.

How Jones ever lived through the fights and hardships of this one is beyond conception. As Chet Fanning, he reaches the eclipse in a thrilling performance that will cause his admirers to hold their breaths for fear he won’t live to do another one. They certainly keep the star hard at it this time. If he isn’t fighting, he’s rolling down a mountain side, hands and feet tied, or dodging huge boulders that the willow has sent after him as a means of destruction. Undoubtedly Jones is at the height of his career as a provider of thrills in “Boss of Camp 4.”

There isn’t an idle minute. It’s a plot from start to finish, with the situations of the usual order. Except for those who want these kind of pictures, they will appear ridiculous. But for those that demand action, it is sure-fire stuff. They couldn’t ask for anything better. It opens up with Jones protecting a young fellow from the blows of a bully. Here’s one good fight. Then comes the real thrills. Jones is employed on a road construction job where conspiracy is on to prevent the contractor from finishing the job on time, thereby ruining him financially.

The owner, Paxton, happens to have a pretty daughter, so there is sufficient reason for Jones being on his side. This immediately gains for him the hatred of Miller, boss of the camp. Miller in league with McCormick, the one directly seeking to ruin Paxton. To record some of the thrills resulting from this controversy can be mentioned; the fight when Jones is made foreman and forces the men back to work; his escape from the boulders that Miller has sent rolling down the mountain side after him and the rescue of Paxton’s daughter; Miller’s plan to “get” Jones when he learns he is going to interfere with the plan to prevent the completion of the job—this is the biggest thrill of the picture. Jones fights a whole army of workers, breaks away, climbs out on a limb of a tree, lowers himself by a rope, and when his pursuers cut it, lands in the cabin of the enemy and continues the battle. This time he is overpowered and tied.

Right here Van Dyck starts gathering suspense. While Jones is roped the enemy is planning to set off the blast and Jones’ buddy is in the tunnel. His fight to escape and the usual climax and happy ending bring a mighty exciting feature to a close.

A Big One for the Exhibitor Catering to “Western” Fans

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Where they want actionful westerns it is likely that their excitement will drown your music, because the thrills and action of “Boss of Camp 4” will certainly get them out of their seats. You can count on it go big if you know you have the right crowd. In certain houses it won’t make any difference what kind of a western it is, if they don’t like them you can’t satisfy them with it.

But for the western loving crowd, it is sure-fire.

If you played Mix’s “Sky High” you know how it went. Here’s one from Jones equally thrilling. Just a trailer showing one of the fights, or other good bits of action, will be enough to bring them back. and you can go the limit on promises of action. It is the best Jones has given them in a year at least. Don’t lother about the story, talk about the star and the thrills.

Another Good Picture and Hoot Gibson a Pleasing Star

Hoot Gibson in  "RIDIN' WILD"  Universal

DIRECTOR .......................... Nat Ross
AUTHOR ............................ Roy Myers
SCENARIO BY ....................... Roy Myers
CAMERAMAN ...................... Virgil Miller

AS A WHOLE ...... A good picture with pleasing Universal star given another suitable vehicle

STORY ...... Far-fetched in parts but usually contains satisfactory audience appeal and towards close some good action

DIRECTION ...... All right for the most part; one sequence that isn't finished to spectator's satisfaction

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Very good
LIGHTINGS .......................... Good

STAR ..... Admirers will like him in this role; it's a bit different

SUPPORT ...... Right types well played by Edna Murphy, Wade Boetler, Otto Hoffman, William Taylor and Gertrude Clair

EXTERIORS ....................... Fitting
INTERIORS ...................... Show fine detail

DETAIL ......................... Good

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Son of Quaker is called coward by western associates until he "breaks out" and shows them he's not

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,166 feet

"Ridin' Wild" gives Hoot Gibson a story a little bit different from his more recent pictures, but it is going to please his admirers equally well and it is likely to prove a satisfactory audience picture, on the whole. The average crowd will be pleased with it and the introduction of Quaker living should give it an added interest. The feature isn't quite as actionful as Gibson's usually are, but a fairly strong plot makes up for it in a way and the last reel contains some lively bits that bring the story to a speedy finish. It is a good climax and there is no footage wasted in reaching it.

Nat Ross has provided a thoroughly good production. He has selected all good types for the star's support with Edna Murphy playing the lead. She's pretty and coming to the front all the time. She has improved greatly since co-starring with Johnny Walker for Fox. Wade Boetler is a first rate villain but he's too fond of close-ups. Gertrude Claire is a sweet little old lady and delightful as the Quaker mother here. All in all Gibson has a first rate support in "Ridin' Wild."

Exteriors are of the usual order but the interiors are worthy of special mention. Ross has shown keen attention to detail in making the Quaker home typical of the people. The only fault to be found with Ross' endeavor is that he fails to finish up one sequence—where the sheriff and a posse start out in search of the men who blew the station safe. You see them start off on the hunt but that's the last you hear of it. Probably a title could be inserted to take care of this angle of the story.

The plot is a more or less conventional one but through good handling rises from the mediocre. The frame-up in which hero's father is falsely accused of murder is an old, old situation with no good alibi, but it leads up to some first rate action for a climax. One thing for which Ross is to be thanked is that he did not carry out the lynching episode that is threatened. Lynchings are much too popular in current releases.

Story: The Hendersons, Quakers, inherit a western ranch where Cyril, the son, is called a coward because his faith prevents him from mixing in the fights. Cyril's father settles a mortgage debt with McBride, who is later killed by his partner, Jordan. Henderson is held for the murder. How Cyril becomes a ridin' wild westerner to save his father brings the story to an exciting conclusion and wins for Cyril the hand of Grace, the sheriff's daughter.

Not a Pretentious Offering But Capable of Satisfying Many

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors can easily satisfy the average crowd with this one and for that matter with all of the Hoot Gibson features. They are more consistently good than those of many other stars. Gibson is fortunate in nearly always getting an appropriate story. You may be sure his admirers will like him in "Ridin' Wild."

Universal's press sheet is so complete with suggestions for exploiting the picture that you should be able to put it over very well by making use of them. Make use of the ideas for advertising, lobby display, catch-lines and stunt exploitation that it offers. Give the star's name prominence and mention Edna Murphy as his leading lady.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,000 feet

Metro has given Viola Dana a much better story for her latest release than they did in "June Madness." "Love in the Dark" is a pretty good entertainment, offering a story that combines comedy and drama in interesting fashion, topped off with a bit of romance. It is the sort of material that is best suited to the star and she is particularly capable of getting over the characterization called for in the first reel, that of an orphan girl who does her best to attract the attention of a woman who comes to the home and is trying to make a selection among the girls she is given to choose from. Viola Dana does this kind of a role much better than she does the "wild debutante" sort.

"Love in the Dark" is essentially a crook story with some fairly new angles. One is that the hero is afflicted with total blindness during the day but his sight returns at sundown. It is then that he makes his "easy money" by robbery, goaded on by a wife who threatens to leave him when he suggests that they "go straight." About the best dramatic moment is where the wife deserts her husband as they are making a get-away and he is helpless to find his way because the sun is rising.

Beaumont has injected some effective humorous touches especially where Viola and her young charge attend a "movie" show. Viola's row with a young freckled face kid who objects to her crying at the pictures will amuse them, also the many scenes in which she plays with the youngster, Bruce Guerin, a sure enough delightful little fellow who already seems to show a fondness for close-ups. The story is smoothly told and will interest them unless they pick it apart for implausibilities.

There is one twist which is pretty far-fetched and might have been gotten around a little more judiciously. It is where Viola, who, with her little charge, is living with a minister and his wife, discovers the minister's son stealing his father's money. Instead of intercepting the theft she lets it go and later calls on the child's father, the crook hero, to steal the money back from the gambler, where the youth had "dropped" it. This is going a long way around the bush to get at a happy ending. Eventually Viola is happy with the crook, whose faithless wife has been killed. They start life over again on the farm.

Should Satisfy and Properly Exploited Will Get Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can undoubtedly depend upon "Love in the Dark" to satisfy them, particularly if they favor the star. It is a much better offering than her last picture and will please her following if they happened to disfavor the other one. You can promise them a satisfying story that contains dramatic moments, comedy and a touch of romance. You can reach a good majority with this combination and catchlines will get them interested.

The title isn't very clear so you might play it up with lines that indicate a blind hero. Then they won't be misled. A trailer showing the star with little Bruce Guerin should appeal especially to the women and bring them back for the picture. Metro should revise the synopsis to conform with the picture as shown for review. There have evidently been some changes made and in case the exhibitor uses the synopsis in his program, it should be right.

"The Split Outfit"—Bruce Wilderness Tales—Educational
Type of production..........................1 reel scenic

One of the most interesting scencis seen in many a day. Interwoven with exquisite shots of snow-capped mountain peaks and clear mountain lakes is a slight though interesting little story of two gold prospectors and a mule. Windy, as one is called, is a bad cook, and his partner, the Parson, after an argument, splits the outfit and refuses to talk to him. They travel without speaking for three days, and then the Parson while crossing a stream is caught in the current. Windy jumps in and saves him, and of course they patch things up. The idea of the reel is good, and the material interesting. Good for any audience.

"Young Sherlocks"—Our Gang—Pathe
Type of production..........................2 reel kid comedy

Hal Roach's latest "Our Gang," comedy, is sure to prove a winner. All the kids including Sammy and Little Farina are in this one. Little Roosevelt Fershing, the baby tough, has ambitions. He wants to be a great detective. While selling papers he meets Sammy, the little colored boy, who is vainly trying to get something to eat for his baby sister and himself. Roosevelt Fershing sells a quarter's worth of papers and they go to a bakery, but Sammy loses the quarter. The gags are highly amusing. Kids of all ages will love the footage showing the magical city for children where everything is free and no grown-ups are allowed. Should please any audience anywhere.

"Why Worry"—Billy West—Smart Films
Type of production..........................2 reel comedy

Billy West without his moustache and shuffleing feet is starred in this two reeler, the first of a new series. Those who like him may be satisfied with his latest offering, but the comedy is neither particularly funny or high class. The sequence in which West takes a mouthful of supposed nitroglycerine and pursues the villain by being literally a spit-fire in action, while a new idea, may be disliked by some audiences. Arvid Gilstrom directed and Ethelyn Gibson is the heroine. May prove a satisfactory program picture.

"Rustlers of the Redwoods"—Timber Tales Series—Universal Type of production..........................2 reel forest ranger story

The Timber Tale series of two reels, which are being released weekly, have a great deal to praise and very little to criticize. Roy Stewart is the forest-ranger hero in each tale, but a different cast and leading woman appear in each story. This one, "Rustlers of the Redwoods," has a wealth of incident. The suspense and action build up to a fine climax, which comes at the end of the second reel and includes a wild jump from a cliff to a moving train, the plunge by the villain off a high trestle which the train is crossing, the jump of the hero and the girl from the rushing train, and the final smash of the wild engine into another train on the same track. If they like excitement, action and wonderful scenery this should please.

Pathe Review No. 179

Type of production..........................1 reel magazine

The opening shots of this Review depicting the morning mists on mountains are very beautiful and are adequately described by their title, "Photographic Gems." A demonstration in specific gravity in which an egg is made to float and sink in water comes next and is followed by a section devoted to clay modelling. The colored footage showing Alpine scenery along the French-Italian border closes the reel.

Rolling Down to Rio—U. S. Navy Recruiting Offices
Type of production..........................2 reel novelty

This interesting series of shots, showing the Maryland on its way to Rio to the Exposition, carrying Secretary of State Hughes, is really propaganda, but excellent propaganda, showing the benefits of navy life, and exploiting in a well handled manner, the happenings aboard the big battle-ships. It is the type of picture that almost any exhibitor can run with satisfaction. At times, it drags a little, but this is easily made up by the excellent material which is used. Particularly interesting are the shots showing what happens when the sailors cross the meridian for the first time, and when King Neptune initiates them into the Order of the Mysteries of the Deep.

"Crash"—Cameo—Educational
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy

This, the first of a new series of comedies released by Educational under the brand name of "Cameo," stars Jimmie Adams. It is directed by Fred Hibbard, and it has a new idea in the shape of a flying bungalow. Jimmie and his family are dispossessed and wander around with the furniture until they meet an inventor who is a friend of Jimmie's. He has invented a bungalow which has an aeroplane engine and propeller, and he invites them to try it out. The kiddie starts the engine and the bungalow goes up in the air. After ten or twelve loop-the-loops it decides to come down bringing a sadly battered trio with it. Good, clean comedy.

"Hello Judge"—Century—Universal
Type of production..........................2 reel comedy

Lee Moran is being tried for his cruel treatment of his mother-in-law. He is supposed to have choked, bound and gagged her and done away with her parrot Clementina. Even the jury shed tears at the sad tale. Lee is sentenced to twenty-five years hard labor, and he is so happy he kisses the judge and shakes hands with the prosecuting attorney. Then he tells the judge how his mother-in-law abused him, and how the parrot followed him day and night. There is a very cute touch when Lee makes all the cats in the neighborhood come into the room where Clementina is perched on a tall stick. The cats climb up the stick, and the parrot claws and bites and finally flies away. When Lee gets through with his story, the Judge lets him go and forces the mother-in-law to abdicate with her parrot which flies into the courtroom and hides behind the flag for protection.
Short Stuff

"His Enemy's Friend"—Leo Maloney—Pathe
Type of production.........................2 reel western

As the last of the "Carters," Leo Maloney does some good work in "His Enemy's Friend." These two reel westerns are among the best short reels that Pathe is releasing. They are full of pep and will not fail to please audiences that like plenty of action. Josephine Hill is in love with Leo, but because of an ancient feud can never marry him. Her father has arranged a marriage for her, but not at all to Josephine's liking. Leo, finding Josephine's small brother caught in a rabbit trap, takes him home and binding up the broken leg, goes after his father, but is ordered away just as the villain comes up with the news that the "Carter" is stealing cattle. After a good fight, some hard riding, and many complications, the feud is wiped out when the old man, entering Leo's shack to kill him, finds his small son being taken care of by the hated Carter.

"The Resident Patient"—Sherlock Holmes Series—Educational Type of production.........................2 reel detective drama

"The Resident Patient" follows closely the Conan Doyle story of the same name. A young doctor calls on the detective and asks him to visit his home where a resident patient, who has several years ago established him in his profession, is suffering greatly from fear. The doctor further tells Holmes that two men had called, and one had developed a fit, while the other waited outside. Leaving the room for some drug the doctor had returned to find both patient and friend gone, and the place ransacked. Holmes, accordingly goes to see the resident patient, who though greatly frightened, refuses to give any information. The next morning the patient is found hung in his room. Holmes is called and unravels the mystery by a process of deduction, to the amazement of the Scotland Yard men. You know your audience, and if they like this kind of story this should prove satisfactory.

Do you, as a Theatre Owner, really know “What the Public wants?”

There exists no doubt that suggestion—that is to say, the human word, or, to go back to its origin, the thought, as a species of imagination and faith—can exercise a quasi-magical action upon not only the faculties of our moral being, but also the functions of our organism.

Emile Boirac
Academy of Dijon

Let go your hold, resign the care of your destiny to higher powers, be genuinely indifferent as to what becomes of it all, and you will find not only that you gain a perfect inward relief but often also, in addition, the particular goods which you sincerely thought you were renouncing.

Dr. William James
America’s Greatest Psychologist

This advertisement is intended for the Exhibitor who is tired of making after-the-performance apologies in his lobby, of wearily repeating over and over again, “I’m sorry; I know it’s a poor picture, but it’s what the public wants!”

The public no longer wants to hear this showman’s alibi, for the public knows what it wants and isn’t bashful about showing its feelings.

Just now, one of the uppermost thoughts in the public mind is the rapid acceptance of the doctrine that the Will exercises a more powerful control over the destinies of the body than science has heretofore been willing to admit. Call it “psycho-analysis,” if you will, or “mind over matter,” or any of the thousand-and-one names that have been given it, but the fact remains that millions of thinking people today open the door of their mind before they open the door of the old-fashioned medicine chest.

Clara Louise Burnham wrote a book founded on this very theory. Many thousands of copies of it were sold all over America. It was called “Heart’s Haven” and Benj. B. Hampton and his associates have turned it into a motion-picture—a smashing good story of life, and love and little kiddies, with the big, new and moving impulse, the power of the human mind to direct our lives, back of it all.

Get into step with this new order of things by booking “Heart’s Haven” and you’ll escape lobby alibis. It’s “what the public wants!”

Gaumont's Plans

English Company Headed by Col. From head to Start Making Big Pictures—Terriss to Do First

Plans have practically been completed by which the Gaumont Com-

the series, it is understood, will be Sir

The engagement of Terriss, it is

Oct. 17: I don't know what got into me tonight, but I've had the heartiest five minutes laugh I have had in years.

During the "Troubles of an Exhibitor,

the issue of Wednesday, Nov. 15, laughed from start to finish.

Then I read it over again and felt that what I wrote was all about, and when it stumbled on thinking I was propaganda and hate injected into the moving picture

business with the demands for pictures which are practically only good shows and one which naturally should be made

Booking organizations. Seems to be on the order of the day. Most important, of course, is the A. B. C. Of New York. But Dallas exhibitors have just started one. New Orleans was reported at work on one last week. In St. Louis another has started. In fact, all over the country they are springing up.

All of which makes Jules Mastbaum smile. Because he recalls what happened. When he started the National Booking Office several years ago. Some clever people in First National. Headed by Harry Schwalbe and E. V. Richards. Threw a monkey wrench in that idea. But Mastbaum. As well as several of his associates. Still insist that a national booking office. Is the real solution. Of some of the problems developing today.

This is sure: If these local booking organizations ever start. To communicate with each other. And make working arrangements. It's going to be sweet and pretty. And this is also sure: that if this happens you will probably see the distributors getting together. Then the producers. And the first thing you know. This whole business will be tied up. Tighter than a drum. And a lot of people are going to cry aloud.

From the rooftops. And elsewhere: "Trust!"

The A. B. C. has issued a statement. Telling all about its ideas.

And ideals. All right. Fair enough. But the industry has yet to develop Ethics and ideals. Sufficiency sound. And strong enough. To keep the petty grafters and others. Who don't know what ethics means.

From sticking their fingers in. And having a lot of mess on them. When they come out.

Active on Coast

Hays Organization Likely to be

Strongly Represented There in Early Future

Reports continue being circulated that the Hays organization will, within a brief time, have a strong representative organization on the Coast, further extending its hold over the industry. This would mean that many of the ideas which, from time to time, have de-dveloped regarding the Coast conditions, will become effective, and be definitely set in motion.

From this it should not be inferred that the Hays Coast organization will function with an idea of watching or regulating the conduct of stars or players. Nothing is further from the fact. All of the important executives are convinced that the industry is not on the defensive; and from the outlook it will not be necessary to even consider such a move. In fact the plans of the Hays organization are much more important, and on a much larger scale. According to the reports and indicate the extension of a plan which will attract unusual attention to the industry.

Over Exploitation

"Over exploitation and hollowness I think are responsible for the failure of this business, with a result that the nation is obsessed with the idea that the only place they can see a show is to look at it in the drive-in house in one of the key towns nearest to where they reside. Their own home town theaters or their neighborhood and community theaters are being looked upon as a joke, and the outcome of it is that where it used to be a principle of "Let's go to the Movies Maggy", it now becomes fashionable freestyle clanging, by the family and their friends for two weeks before they decide to bow and where they are going to spend their fifteen cents.

"My contention for years has been that if a film is good enough to run in the finest theater in the world at their usual standard prices, it must follow that it should run in any other theater no matter how small or where located at the usual prices, and it should be sold to every place at a figure or an amount that allows an exhibitor a justifiable profit, and failure to do this will mean the slow throttling of the small theaters in the communities throughout the country and during this process the universe will be weaned away from movies, and in the end the larger house will also suffer. * * *"

HOLLYWOOD THE MECCA
And all the Faithful. Will be in that wonderful land of Make-leave within a few days. Famous party there now. Zukor, Lasky, etc. Marcus Loew en route. Richard Rowland, First National there, Lieber, Katz, and other members of Assn. First National. Reach next Sunday. Some other prominent film folk talking of going. (r) Laemmle, who always dares to be different, just returned from the East. All, of course, figuring. On next season’s productions, Famous leaves a bomb. It’s the sales end of the business. By having 41 ready, early last summer. Expect to have another big batch on hand for her New Year’s. And plans for next season. (l) big, even this early. First National has to be set.

There may be some interesting developments out there. In the next few weeks.

WILLIAMS QUICK TRIP
Jaydee Williams is also out on the Coast. Or on his way. Going to make a new record for Coast commutation. Will be there only a few days. Then back again. Something or other about corporation laws; press he must sign. And all that sort of thing. But after his return. Will go back to the Coast. And spend some real time there. Then you'll hear something.

ONE ON WILLIAMS
Jaydee Williams out with a lot of film folk. Very pretty girl in party. Says Jaydee (who didn’t catch her name when introduced) “You oughtta know pictures.” Says the young lady, modestly like: “Well, I am; in a lot of way; out in Hollywood!” Says Jaydee: “You oughtta know Ikey, or Demille, or Nelan. I’ll give you a letter. It may help.” “Hain’t very much,” she said, as she left the table to dance. Jaydee met his neighbor. “Who’s that girl?” he asked. “Oh, said his friend, casually, “Bebe Daniels.”

Business of Jaydee losing his breath.

THE A. B. C. AND MARCUS
They had a nice time. Last Tuesday. At the Astor. And Marcus wouldn’t budge. “Nary an inch. Said he was going on. Just as he had been going. And after a lot of words. Nothing happened. They didn’t even resolve one resolution. How strange! Still, it isn’t all over. Bound to be something happen further.

It may be Marcus starting his own booking organization; it may be about something.

Incidentally. Keep your eye on Lee Ochs. Locally. Looks as if he’s in the limelight. For the next presidency of the Theater Owners. He’s very active the last few months. In the T. O. C. C.

M. P. T. O. DISTRIBUTION
Again crops up. This time from True. Of Rhode Island. Somehow other. They just can’t keep this distribution idea out of the national exhibitor organization. It’s been talked about and talked about. First thing you know they’ll do something. Meanwhile Sydney Cohen hasn’t heard to say.

DID YOU KNOW
That there were 8,025 non-competitive play dates in this country? No. Well there are. Now all the statistically inclined sales managers can worry about something.

AND DID YOU KNOW
That there is a lot of talk. Going on downtown. About some reorganization ideas. In the Fox organization.

Norca Starts

C. C. Cropper, General Manager, May Name Own Exchanges

R. C. Cropper yesterday announced the formation of a new distributing company, Norca Pictures, Inc., of which he is vice-president and general manager.

Norca will distribute a minimum of one feature a month through the exchanges of Norca Pictures, Inc., or affiliated exchanges. These features will all be adaptations of published material with advertising value, well known books or plays.

The first release "Just a Mother," was a feature by the supervision of Allyn B. Carrick. It is an adaptation of the novel "Mrs. Thompson," by W. B. Maxwell.

"Our organization is now practically complete," said Cropper. "We have been acquiring product for several months until we have now acquired sufficient features to assure a release of one a month, and we plan to increase the number of releases to two subjects a month in the near future.

"Several months' work has been spent organizing exchanges. Physical distribution will be through exchanges operated or controlled by Norca Pictures, Inc. In some territories, tie-ups have been effected with leading independent exchanges by which our product will be handled by subsidiary companies. In other districts, we are opening our own exchanges."

Hays in Philadelphia

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Philadelphia—Will H. Hays yesterday addressed the Philadelphia Forum and before a large and important audience again made many of the points previously delivered with regard to the Producers and Distributors organization.

Of political censorship he said:

"I am against political censorship, of course, because political censorship will not do what is hoped for it in the last analysis. Now and then one might ask: 'If the motion picture producers really mean to make better pictures, why do they object to political censorship?' The chief answer to this question was written when human nature was formed; at least that part of human nature which is doing business under the stars and stripes, and that answer consists chiefly of one word—Liberty."

A. B. C. Sees Fight

Leading members of the A. B. C.—the New York booking combination—say that the Loew circuit has booked a reissue of Mary Pickford in "Going Straight" which they say is ten years old, and which they say is a definite fight against them to offset their purchase of "Tess," the latest Pickford release. A. B. C. folk say that Loew intends to advertise, including billboards, the old Pickford picture as strong as if it were a new release.

Universal has also sold the Valentina-Carmel Meyers reissue "All Night" to the Fox circuit.

A "Preferred Picture with splendid audience appeal and an out-and-out showman feature," says Roger Ferri in the Moving Picture World of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." B. P. Schulberg has made another box-office picture for the A. Luchtman Corp.—Adv.

Will Nigh's "Notoriety" will be screened at the Astor today for the T. O. C. C. members before the weekly meeting. Ben Schwartz of the Apollo exchange is in charge of the showing.

Kilner Here

F. W. Kilner of Kilner's Exclusive Films, Ltd., of London, is in town making his headquarters with the Export & Import Film Co., Inc. He is interested in obtaining pictures from organizations without a market in the United Kingdom, Europe, and the English colonies. Kilner's are much interested in short subjects.

Lesser's Distribution Ideas

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—Sol Lesser is quoted in the Hollywood News, relative to his previously noted combination:

"Irving Lesser will have the management of our New York office with 20 men under him, to handle distribution, in case we do not release our product through First National, as I hope we will."

Unusual Suggestion

Producers Should Unite to Make "Hamlet" With John Barrymore Says Thomas

A definite suggestion through which the Producing Manager's Association and important producers of pictures could cooperate with the view of materially aiding stage as well as the screen, was offered by Augustus Thomas at the Friars' dinner, Sunday night at the Astor.

Referring to the death of Frank Bacon, and regretting the fact that Bacon's famous characterization of "Lightnin" has not now been made, Thomas said that Bacon's death should be an admonition to Hays and the producers. He regretted the loss of this great stage characterization to millions of people in this country. He suggested that John Barrymore's "Hamlet," which has just been screened immediately for the purpose of showing to millions of Americans in every tank-town, what a great performance this was. He said this should be done by the industry, and not by any one producer, and that in this not only Arthur Hopkins, but the entire Producing Managers' Association should cooperate.

The Friars' dinner to Hays, Landis and Thomas proved a tremendous success. Will Rogers, who intro-

General Opinion is That Production Suggested by Augustus Thomas Would be Unfavorable to Public and Apathy of Tragedies

When the suggestion was taken up with such producers as could be reached yesterday, the resulting answers fell naturally into three major divisions. Many producers felt that censorship standards would bar this classic from the screen.

Others felt that no version of "Hamlet" would draw any considerable patronage. In support of this contention they pointed out that Asta Nielsen's "Hamlet" had not been shown to any extent.

Still others felt that "Hamlet" with John Barrymore would be regarded simply as a Barrymore production and would do business on the name of Barrymore, not on its merits, and more in spite of having been written by Shakespeare than because of any reverence for the text.

Produced Hayes, easily made the real hit of the evening. He created roars of laughter. He said that originally he had planned to introduce the man at the head of the greatest amusement industry, and that he had spent two weeks gathering statistics and information on his subject. Then, he said, much to his surprise, because he had gathered his statistics about "hoof-tapping," he was told to present Hayes as the head of the movie industry.

He described moving pictures as "a lot of storm on different names to them," and created a roar when he said, starting Hayes, that when the Republican Party went into power in 1920, they promised prosperity. "Hayes is the only one that got it," he said.

General Hayes made a characteristic speech, and reiterated a number of the statements that he has made on previous occasions with reference to the importance of the industry.

With Irving S. Cobb introduced Thomas, and in discussing Hays, he significantly declared that "sensuality was just a head of censorship at the time Hays was appointed. He got a big laugh by adding, if Hayes failed as director-general extraordinary of the movies, "they could use him as understudy for Jackie Coogan."

When the picture producers, following the lead of the baseball magnates, wanted an imposing head for their industry, said Cobb, they told their committee they must get a man of letters, and misunderstanding this, the committee got Hays. This reference to Hays' activity as former Postmaster-General brought a big laugh.

There were a number of important motion picture film talk at the affair, including William Fox, Al Lichtman, Ralph Kohn, Arthur and David Loew and Eugene Zukor.

Brymore—Hamlet

One of the opinions expressed on this subject is that of Mr. Griffith: "I doubt if the suggested production would uplift the race. What would the censors do?"

In the first place there are doubtless many that are against death by lynching in any form. The producer wouldn't be able to show the flashing of swords which is essential to the story. The leading character is a morbid freak who commits suicide, a very much against the morals of character such as Hamlet. While the play is expressed in stage and poetic language, the subject matter that would be pictured is strong. The censors would reject it and I fear that the public would have a perfect right to decline to see it.

There are several of us in the business who don't care about making money but wish to protect it, and are against losing a lot of money which I would be the case if this suggestion actually reached the production stage.

I only mention all of this to show how censorship restrictions are forcing producers to make many-belied pictures.

People talk about the screen being melodramatic as if that were anything to be avoided, yet it is evident that we film the very essence of melodrama with the intention of making a picture which shall retain the best and finest in the illustration.

M. Warner, of Warner Bros.: "That this would make a great hit with John Barrymore as I would place the primary position that should be placed here, the public. I think that the version would endure as long as the stage play has. For my part, I would be very pleased to produce the picture without compensation at all, only asking that I be given the exact reproduction of Shakespeare's work. I don't want any profit. We are making the picture at a price that will more than compensate for the cost. If you get back exactly the production, I don't want any profit. Newspaper Opinions

"The Pride of Palomar"—Paramount

Rivoli

TUESDAY—The old story of the mortgage on the homestead with variations. * * * Japan may not be the first to visit the Japanese in California. As a melodrama the picture doesn’t score, but the action doesn’t run smoothly and there are too many places where the plot needs the leading role. There are, however, a number of fine shots, mostly in the production and a well-drawn horse race.

WORLD—This is intended to be a western version of "The Breakfast Club," with a little anti-war propaganda running through it. It is not bad, but it is an average version of its general type which is used to be seen so often. It is illogical and far fetched, yet it holds a large plot of details. For the man and the leading woman. So far as its effect upon Japanese-American relations is concerned, it is nothing to be excited about.

Herald—Propaganda fits its unpromising story and it proves to be just as dull and just as artificial as it was in the days when propaganda was a part of national necessity.

"The Pride of Palomar" attempts to expose the Japanese menace. The exposure is hidden by a plot of details, and it is well directed by Frank Borzage, but given such third rate material to work with its job becomes more of a test of the director’s mechanical.

THIRD—Acted as though it was never going to get under way and then, when it did, it acted as though it was never going to be over. As far as the story is concerned, it took us such a familiar one that the director must have been using a formula for his own sake.

THE AMERICAN—I’ve never seen one (Irish race) as stirring, as photographically accurate and as dramatic as that which enables him to carry his own characters across, raced and rushed together with effective action. The picture was never a moment devoid of action.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—The story is rather confusing, but one thing the picture is distinguished by a decided charm of atmosphere. * * * The direction of Frank Borzage is responsible for the best one of the three pictures. The acting is excellent.

EVE WORLD—Good screen entertainment. * * * lends itself to the screen about as well as it does to any other form of entertainment regardless of whether you’ve ever read the book or not, we feel sure you’ll like the film version.

GLOIRE—Bign an ordinary melodrama.

* * * Frank Borzage has given the picture careful attention and point to be commended, is the excellent photography.

SUN—This has been made to satisfy a modern director’s conception of the ideal story to knock ’em off their feet.

MAIL—There is a good racing scene which carries more or less of a thrill to the spectator, but the picture as a whole seems to be made up of a series of only slightly related incidents, so that one often wonders where the plot is going and why.

EVE TELEGRAM—One of the most beautiful costume spectacles. It is filled with thrilling scenes.

JOURNAL—Most interesting and romantic.

POST—Has its moments when some good comedy work is rescued, and when it aug- mente did seem to enjoy it immensely. The setting, the characters, the beautiful photography, the exciting race—all for a film failed to save it, and the anti-Japanese propaganda has nothing of the anti-Japanese propaganda to stifle over the good comedy situations.

Ebb Tide"—Paramount

Rialto

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Exceedingly satisfactory entertainment. It is a picturesque, dramatic tale of the South Seas, enacted by an especially capable cast and credibly directed by George Melford. * * * will be worth while. It should enjoy considerable popularity.

Managerial Changes

Robstown, Tex.—E. L. Mosive has been appointed manager of the Alvine.

Chicago—Charles J. Schaefer has taken over Nathan T. Brenner’s Garfield.

Little Rock, Ark.—The Palace has been leased to John F. Boyle. Wm. May will be the house manager.

Colorado Springs, Col.—Nick Kolagisk is the new manager and owner of the Star.

Pittsburgh—Frank Ray of the F. B. O. forces will manage the new Lincoln for L. Moogerman, the owner.

McKee Rocks, Pa.—Morris Barsky formerly of the Jackson, as manager, is now manager of Max Engleberg’s Strand and Liberty.

Daily News—Excellent melodrama, sometimes a little obvious, but most always convincing acting. The original story far surpassed the direction.

WORLD—There is little of Stevenson in this version, although subtlety reflecting his style are liberally sprinkled throughout the picture. * * * odds and ends from every other Stevenson film. It is not adapted from a novel, but from a series of short stories.

National—Handicapped as they were by the characterizations, they are directed with fine skill, of the script by George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton and Noah Beery contrived to be startlingly effective as the hard-boiled seaman and his homelike parent. They have a fine twenty minute scene.

TELEGRAPH—Says that the picture has been made to satisfy a modern director’s conception of the ideal story to knock ’em off their feet.

MAIL—There is a good racing scene which carries more or less of a thrill to the spectator, but the picture as a whole seems to be made up of a series of only slightly related incidents, so that one often wonders where the plot is going and why.

An Hunter Star of Film Guild Series Called For in New Distribution Contract

Our Film Guild features starring An Hunter will be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., under the coming season by the subscription plan announced by Sir Walter Jr., production manager of the Film Guild.

The series includes "Second Fiddle," a Frank Tuttle with Mary Astor, opposite Hunter; "The Lap of Luxury" by Townsend Martin and Stowe W. Weyler, with Martha Mansfield, opposite the star; Percey Day, a witchcraft romance of Pita Salem, "The Scarecrow" from Douglas Fairbanks, and Frank Tuttle, with Glenn Huler in the leading role and one star production to be filmed from a story under consideration.

The first two productions have already been completed. Distribution of "Second Fiddle" is due to start Jan. 1. "The Scarecrow" scenario is now being written. All will be directed by Frank Tuttle with technical supervision of the camera work by Walter.

Because of the likelihood of Glenn Huler remaining for some time in Eton of the Movies, the pictures will probably be filmed in the 1st.

Doug and Mary

Lubitsch Sails Soon to Direct Mary—
Doug Discards "M'sieur Bea-uche"—

Productions plans of the next features to be made by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are rapidly assuming definite shape.

A cable was received yesterday by Alph Kohn, assistant secretary of famous Players, from Ernest Lubitsch, saying that he would sail for America about the end of month.

Lubitsch is under contract to the Los Angeles Theatre Co., of which John is vice-president. As before announced, he will be loaned to Miss Pickford to direct one picture "Dorothy" and another one "Haddon Hall." Lubitsch will arrive about Dec. 10 and if after spending a week in New York will go to the Coast.

Douglas Fairbanks has decided not to film "M'sieur Beauche" as his next production. John Fairbanks said yesterday that his brother would probably do a pirate story next. It is understood that Fairbanks does not want to follow "Robin Hood" with another romantic costume drama.

Fairbanks and Miss Pickford will leave for the Coast very soon.

Laurence Reid in the Motion Picture News says "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" should "prove a winner in downtown houses." Correct, Mr. Reid and well will the exhibitors in downtown and all other theaters know it when they book it through the Al Lichtman Corp.—Adv.

Motion Pictures to Invade and Open China—Tremendous Interests With Huge Capital

Interested in Development of Educational and Amusement Field

—Frank V. Chamberlain, Formerly With Famous, General Manager—To Start Development of 1,800 Houses Immediately After First of Year

Backed with huge financial support, encouraged by leading members of the Chinese Government, and receiving the support of the largest companies in the industry, an organization has been completed to modernize the immense Chinese Empire through motion pictures.

The name of the corporation will probably be disclosed within the next few days. It will have capitalization of five or six million. While those prominent in the concern will probably not be named it can be said that one of, if not the leading spirit in the corporation will be James A. Thomas, for many years an important executive in China for the British-American Tobacco Co. Isaac E. Marcsossin in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post included Thomas as one of the men who were leading the way for the improvement of China. Thomas has been in China almost 25 years.

The only film man identified with the organization, and known to the trade, is Frank V. Chamberlain, for over five years identified with Famous Players in various capacities, and who only recently resigned from that organization. At that time Chamberlain was in charge of the physical handling of the exchange system, occupying a very important post. Chamberlain will be general manager of the big organization which, it is said, will open about 1,800 stations equipped with projection machines. These stations can hardly be called theaters, according to the sense of the word, as they are to be fitted with comfortable, sanitary and fitted for the special purpose of educating and amusing the 430,000,000 natives of China, none of whom, barring about 8 per cent or 10 per cent at most, have ever seen a motion picture. The only picture theaters in China today are in what is known as the "treaty ports." There are less than 80 of such houses, according to reliable information.

It is understood that executives of the largest organizations in the industry have promised all the support necessary to those interested in the big idea. Special selection of material will be necessary, not because of censorship, but in an effort to develop the Chinese property both as to amusement as well as education.

Developing China

In the beginning a great deal of educational film has been shown. Chamberlain and several others, including Mr. Thomas, expect to show some time next month in China. Meanwhile the work of selecting material and purchasing the necessary equipment and supplies is going ahead cannily.

Chinese Way in the Background With Pictures Today

In an address delivered before the old National Association last Spring, Lytton W. Mitchell, American Trade Commissioner to China, made some observations regarding pictures there; in view of the above, are interesting. Mr. Melkins said, in part:

"There are less than 100 theaters in China. Forty of them are comparatively good and show new films—principally American films—although recently some French, Italian, and German films have been brought into China. The seating capacity ranges from 100 to 2,000—a minimum of about 600 seats per theater. In Shanghai there are six theaters which have a large foreign patronage and annual working capacity. The others are attended only by natives at admission, ranging from 5 to 10. The average price is $2 an average of about 300. The theaters which are closer to the foreign population charge from $1 to $2 a seat.

"It is doubtful that admission prices in China will ever be raised, because the average Chinese earns only $4.00 to $5.00 a month and hasn't much money to spend for amusements. About two years ago the Chinese produced a motion picture film written, acted and directed by native talent under the aegis of the Chinese Motion Picture Society. It depicted a famous Chinese murder case in ten reels and, for Chinese effort, if one hadn't been bad at all.

The Chinese like noise. When you enter a theater you can really imagine you are in a boiler factory. The lights are kept going and the audience goes right on talking no matter what is transpiring on the stage or screen. There is no good music—everything from a violin to a three-piece orchestra is used. The theater seats have tables in front of them for tea and nuts.

"As to the future of the motion picture in China, there is this to be borne in mind: There are only 73 large cities with a population of 100,000 or more that are accessible by rail or steamship. In these 73 cities, perhaps only 2,000,000 persons are available as movie fan prospects. In entire China 8 per cent of the population can be considered as immediate prospects for films because the rest are unable to pay admission prices. In order to enlarge the field of films it would be an excellent plan to have them shown in connection with the spoken drama. There have been more American motion picture theaters built in China during the last five years.

Talmadge Party Sails

(Louder, THE FILM DAILY)

London—The Talmadge party, including Norma and Constance Talmadge, Mrs. Margaret Talmadge and Jos. M. Schenck, sailed from here on the Mauretania, due in New York Nov. 25. Constance will reach New York just in time to see her "East Is West" open at the Strand.

Margaret Lechy, winner of the Talmadge beauty contest, is now on a tour of the provinces. She will follow a week later on the Aquitania, to assume her role of Agnes Lynch in support of Norma in "Within the Law."
In the Courts

The Fairmount Film Corp., has sued Metro for an injunction restraining the latter from exhibiting the film "Hate," on the ground that the plaintiff first used the name for a film starring May McAvoy in 1917, and that the film is now being shown in foreign countries and is being revised for exhibition here. It is alleged that the Fairmount film is based on an entirely different story.

Francis X. Bushman was sued in the Supreme Court for $1,670 by Suzanne Devoyod, a member of the Comedie Francaise in Paris. The plaintiff alleges that in 1919 the defendant represented that if she would send him $3,120 he would come to France to appear in a film then being planned by her. She says he never went there and returned only $1,450 of the money he received.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the lower court permitting the operation of a moving picture theater in the building at the southwest corner of Broadway and 95th Street. The property is now leased by the Trio Amusement Co. The proceeding was brought in the nature of an injunction suit by the Broadway and 96th Street Realty Co., owned by the William Fox interests, against the Superintendent of Buildings to restrain him from permitting such use of the building.

The facts in the case have been previously published.

Part Immoral

says Priscilla Dean Objecting to Playing Role in "Drifting"
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—Priscilla Dean, Universal star, has registered a serious objection to playing the role of Cassie Cook in the screen version of "Drifting," on the ground that the part portrays an immoral woman.

The star has refused to play the part until it is modified. She further insists on being paid her salary while awaiting definite action in the matter. Irving Thalberg, general manager at Universal City, states that the film will be produced with a prominent star in the leading role. He states that Miss Dean will appear.

As far as the immorality of the part is concerned, Thalberg points out that when Wm. A. Brady produced the play on the speaking stage, Alice Brady appeared in the role, thus showing that one important producer has already considered the part not too immoral for his own daughter.

As Miss Dean shows no sign of weakening, and her stand involves the contractual relations between herself and Universal, it is likely that legal action will be taken by both sides.

At the Universal offices yesterday there was no comment forthcoming on the report.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

Pneumonia, Nev.

Dear Friend Danny:

I didn't know you were going to publish my letters when I wrote you, but if other exhibitors get ideas out of them, why let them slide. I been getting lots of good experience this week. A salesman from the Universal was here. He said my town was overseeded, so I took out the two back rows of the Elite, and didn't help business much. My last Tuesday being within ninety cents of the one before, only on that day I showed on Wednesday instead.

Old Man Inglebaur crooked O. K., so I did pretty good with "Lena's Load." I got a great show for that, the express agent here got a package of films by mistake, with the address tag lost and he looted it to me for the night, this will make the regular night. I read Marcus Low runs in his outlying house at Fifty-ninth Street, New York. I can't imagine a house that far doing any business but guess Low ain't no fool on exhibitions from what I hear from a Metro salesman that was there three months ago.

Canadian Tax

Seeming Discrepancy in Valuation Results in Arbitrary Taxation Rate
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—The figures compiled by the Department of Commerce showing that in August, 1922, Canada took 1,845,895 feet of positive film from America valued at $90,108 drew an inquiry from David A. Cooper, chairman of the advisory board of the Canadian M. P. Distributors.

Cooper wrote the secretary to Canadian customs regulations this film comes in here at 8 cents a foot, which would be $147,671.60. Why is this film exported from America at a value of $90,108, whereas Canada extracts from the importers of the same film a sales tax based on the $147,671.60 valuation? If the U. S. government's valuation is correct, the importers here are paying an exorbitant sales tax. It creates no difference to the duty because the duty is 3 cents a foot.

Investigation develops that the rate of 8 cents a foot has nothing to do with the price at which the film was sold, but is a rate arbitrarily placed thereon by the Canadian government.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

This here feature I found at the express office and got no title on it and don’t seem to end nowhere, the main title seems to be “Episod Four,” which my wife thinks is the four horses of Appolinaris, which was run in San Francisco. If it is, it’s certainly exciting without any finish to it.

I may be the owner of a big circuit by the time you hear from me again. I got my eye on a house over at Frostburg twenty miles from here.

It is a two hundred seater with a, what I think they call a dummy stage, (two far for bicycling), but I think I can make a go of it anyhow:

I can get better rentals on a circuit than for one house.

It looks like I can give a matinée Thanksgiving, if the print gets in in time. My Labor Day show got in too late for the night show, so I ain’t going to announce anything special till I feel the old picture right in my hand.

I got a slip of paper from a paper asking me to make it out with details about my theater. Here’s how I filled it out. Make any changes you want and return to me.

THE COVERED WAGON

is on the way!

THEY'RE still working on "The Covered Wagon" out in the Utah desert, ninety miles from a railroad. 3,000 actors, including 1,000 Indians, together with 600 oxen, 300 covered wagons, and hundreds of horses are engaged in producing a picture that will never be forgotten.

The attack of 1,000 Indians on the three mile wagon train promises to be the biggest thrill ever filmed. Other thrills will be the buffalo hunt, with 500 bison; the fording of a mile wide river, and a prairie fire.

Here is a scene on location, showing part of the great wagon train.

James Cruze is producing the picture, from the novel by Emerson Hough.

Atlantic City—The James Callahan Motion Picture Corp. which secured a Delaware charter last January authorizing the sale of a million dollar capital stock in the form of 100,000 shares at 10 each, was recently before Justice of the Peace Paxson. James Callahan, its president, was at that time in the city and could not possibly be served, and the corporation is about to be dissolved. Charles Dunn, proprietor of a delacatesen store, is secretary, and declared that he had $300 invested in the stock. The records he possesses of the million dollar corporation, are kept in a pocket memorandum book and a stock certificate book. Callahan was arrested on complaint of Mrs. Ernesta Vannucci, hotel pro-priestess, who had invested $300 in the company.

The company floated considerable stock in Bridgeport and Vineland. During the stock selling time in Bridgeport a studio was operated. The Troubles of an Exhibitor
The following has been received from Zeko Beeson, Split Lip, Nevada:
Dear Danny:
I have read with interest the grief of Brother Deneker at Pneumonia and while he sure has my sympathies, I want to state that I am anything but a heavy hitter in the Lucky League. I own and operate the Smellshad Theater at Split Lip, about 60 miles north of Pneumonia, as the Ford flies, and we have a population of seventy-six souls and two insurance agents.
My house is situated about eight doors from the main street, and it takes the prettiest front to call the neighbors off the drag. If the occasion demands it, I can crowd 83 customers into my house, but I am taking a chance in doing so as the last time I done it, fourteen were suffocated.

You see the Smellshad wasn't built for a theater. Prior to my taking it over, it was used as a temporary freight station for cattle, and after that I imitated it before every show, the minute I get a few folks in, the odor of swine pervades the atmosphere. The last time I had

British Boom
England Expects the Cinema to BeCOME Leading Industry—Its Theaters Equivalent to Continental Countries
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
London—Writing in the Daily Express, G. A. Atkinson says:
"Organization and the leadership of such men as Lord Ashfield and Sir William Jury are solving the problems inherited from get-rich-quick days.

"In another five years the cinema industry will probably occupy the fifth or sixth place in this country's commercial hierarchy in respect to capital invested, numbers employed and corporate influence."
"The reader will say, 'How can that be? How can a business which exists on a purely artificial and rather Democratic entertainment hope to challenge in wealth and importance such vested interests as railways, banking and shipping?' The answer is that patrons of cinema theaters, at which weekly attendance now aggregate 40,000,000, are not so vitally interested as the reader might suppose in the actual quality of this entertainment."

Analyze Plans

He was followed by M. L. Finkenstein, of Asso. First National, who voiced the belief that in Minnesota, where he owns theaters, if a good story is presented on the screen that it makes no difference where the production came from; but he insisted on a good story with strong local interest.

Elmer W. Pearson, general manager of Pathe Exchange, declared that in his opinion Harry Warner's viewpoint was perhaps strained. He pointed out that by the methods used in exploiting and advertising in the theater, author's and producers of prominence were assets to the box office, and that many British-made productions suffered in his company on this account. He had inclined to the belief that there was a ready market here for well made pictures, regardless of the source, or country, and that his company, through the success of "Passion" with a star unknown to this country, pointed out that many exhibitionists in the North. The name even though their patrons did not know who she was. F. B. Warren of the American Republic's Radio Bureau had a much better known role not to speak publicly and delivered an excellent talk, urging Bromhead to proceed with his program, but pointing out the need of having the "blue print of his construction" that is the continuity, that is to be paid to the viewpoint of America rather than England. It was his belief that such productions should and would be encouraged. He mentioned R. Grandin Goldwyn, said he felt American audiences would welcome any good picture, and L. B. Rootson, of the Exhibitors Trade Review, suggested that among the important matters that Bromhead bear in mind was the proper exploitation to the American ideas.

In conclusion the Colonel said he was thankful for all the suggestions voiced and said that when his brother arrived here in the Spring the finishing production would be brought alone and this would be the answer of the effort to be made. The entire of the trade papers were represented, and there were present besides those mentioned, Mr. Benson of the Have Organization; Sidney Gorrell and Milton Cohen of Inter-Globe Export; W. B. Frank of Asso. Exhibitors, and E. B. Hatrick, of International.

The cinema theater is really the "British equivalent of the Continental Cafe." It offers a cheap, comfortable and restful means of passing the long hours between main and middle meals, and its strength and the secret of its lure.

"The cinema industry has brought a score of new trades and professions into existence and one of them has been to combine many other trades. Its interests in the building, electrical, and allied trades (such as sweet and tobacco) are enormous."
The Troubles of an Exhibitor

a full-house, it smelt like a combination of the stockyards and a glue factory. The only thing that saved me from ruin was that the fact that I was running "Stronger Than Death" at the time, and the patrons thought I was pulling an exploitation stunt.

Just to prove that Brother Deneker is not alone in his troubles, I booked a picture called "The Flour of Minneapolis," and decorated my front with Pillsbury, Washburn-Crosby and E-Z Bake sacks. I run a nifty catch-line on my dodgers reading: "More For Your Dough," and felt sure that I would pack 'em in.

Everything looked great up to the day of the show. Weather fine, feedmill running full blast and everybody sober, BUT when the big day arrived I was dumfounded to learn that, Jake Snively's boys had run off and joined the army. Grandpa Swome fell in the cistern and was drowned, Joe Doakes and Elmer Whoosis got into a fight over a horseshoe match and were hopeless wrecks, Sim Perkins stepped in the path of a Dodge and cashed in, Fop Blinkley took down with the rheumatism, and the balance of the population was quarantined with the small-pox.

I took in twenty-five cents less than a quarter, and when I wrote the film company for a readjustment, they told me I could play the picture again without cost, but the first open date they had was three years from next Labor Day. If I have my right mind by that time, it will be because I've traded the Smellbad for a shoe repair shop.

What can I do with a barrel of nubb carbons?

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Candy Store Tie-Up
Detroit—A tie-up with the Mac-Diarmid chain of candy stores effected by Manager Frederich of the Washington, and John Wilstach, of the Goldwyn forces, attracted wide attention on account of its “Remembrance.”

The theater and the seven candy stores gave away 30,000 numbered cards announcing that 500 pounds of candy were given away. The owners of lucky numbers and patrons of the theater.

The tickets were dropped into box in the lobby. The lucky numbers were selected from the stage. The candy stores advertised the stunt liberally.

Tie-ups were also effected with music stores whereby an orchestra played old time songs in one window while phonographs did the same in other stores.

“Dr. Jack” Novelties
Exploitation material gotten out by Pathe for “Dr. Jack” until Harold Lloyd’s new five-reeler, includes the following novelties:

A high hat cut-out, a happy bag, a playing card herald, sepia star photos, Lloyd cut-out goggles and an envelope tie-up.

Regular material includes a press book with a full line of cuts and ads, two one-sheets, two three-sheets, a six sheet, a 24-sheet, a window card, eight 11x14 photos, two 22x28 color photos, 16 black and white photos, two 40x60 oil paintings, two slides, thematic music score and a trailer.

Election Night Tie-Up
Allentown, Pa.—The feature of the “Sherlock Holmes” campaign put out by M. W. O’Rear, manager of the Rialto was an election night tie-up by which the Chronicle displayed a “Sherlock Holmes” slide along with the slides announcing election results. A tie-up was effected with the Public Library during Children’s Book Week. A full page of pictures was put over in the Sunday newspaper, Call, while the Record distributed 5,000 heralds. A post card campaign was also used and the town was killed as if for a circus. O’Rear gives full credit to cooperation by Saul Silver, Goldwyn exploiter.

New Herald Stunt
Jamaica, L. I.—Fred V. Greene, Jr. of the Rialto got hold of an old print of film and clipped it on a card which read:

“Here is one inch of ‘Pink Gods’ a Paramount Picture. You must not miss the other 85,307 inches at the Rialto Theater.”

The reverse side contained straight advertising for the picture illustrated by a stock Paramount ad.

Greene stood in front of his lobby the night of the opening and checked up on the cards around the theater, he found about a hundred with the bit of film detached. That shows they were taking notice.

George Beban's unparalleled attraction now takes the record of the City of St. Louis from any motion picture or stage attraction, just as it has broken the box-office record of all cities where it has played.

Any exhibitor who desperately needs a tremendous attraction that has never failed to "hang up a record" had better telegraph our Home Office sales department at once for prices and the few remaining open dates this season.

A Mighty Fine Picture and a Very Powerful Dramatic Entertainment.

Charles Brabin presents

"DRIVEN"

Dependable Sales Corp.

DIRECTOR .................. Charles Brabin
AUTHOR ..................... Jay Gelzer
SCENARIO BY ................ Alfred Rabock
CAMERAMAN ................ George W. Lane

AS A WHOLE ...... A very fine picture from every angle; a really worthwhile achievement

STORY ...... Simple mountain story that is made intensely interesting by excellent treatment DIRECTION ...... Of a high grade; tells a very human story in very human fashion; unusually fine production values

PHOTOGRAPHY ................ Superb
LIGHTINGS .................. Very good
PLAYERS ...... A remarkably well suited cast of players; all sacrifice personal appearance for realism and expression; includes Emily Fitzroy, Burr McIntosh, Geo. Bancroft, Charles Mack and Eleanor Fair

EXTERIORS .............. Pretty mountain shots
INTERIORS .............. All right
DETAIL .................. Good

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Wife of outlaw mountaineer betrays husband to save her youngest son, a weakling

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,540 feet

Charles Brabin's first independent production should find a place among the year's best pictures because he has really accomplished something. He has taken a thoroughly simple and unpretentious story and made a mighty interesting dramatic entertainment, one whose dramatic moments carry a very definite punch and never miss. It is essentially Brabin's intelligent treatment that makes "Driven" a highly absorbing feature, although the splendid cooperation he has been given by the cast and those associated with him in its production is evident.

Jay Gelzer's theme is slight in plot and not involved in its situations. It blends romance, drama and tragedy consistently and the scenario dovetails the sequences in plausible and comprehensive fashion. It has heart interest and what a wallop there is in it. Take, for instance, the big scene of the picture, where the wife betrays her brutal husband and sons by telling the revenue officer where their still is located in return for money which will send her youngest son and his little sweetheart out of the reach of the older son, who threatens to kill the boy and marry the girl himself. This is the real thing and it's going to draw tears without any effort.

Director Brabin tells the story smoothly and with such ease. Nothing is forced and the development is very good. And best of all is the fact that he hasn't wasted reels and reels to tell it. It is a genuine pleasure to find a picture that is short, interesting and to the point. There is a corking fine fight between Charles Mack and George Bancroft. It is a real thrill. The shots of Bancroft punching Mack when he is unconscious should come out, however. It's a bit too brutal.

Too much cannot be said for the splendid performances of a uniformly fine cast. There is Emily Fitzroy, who is an ideal mountaineer mother, and Charlie Mack, the Griffith find, does delightful work as the weakling son. Mack is a real actor and an ideal type in this. George Bancroft is excellent as one of the brutal Tollivers with Burr McIntosh a convincing bully, as Paw Tolliver. Eleanor Fair is pleasing as the little girl. The photography throughout is splendid and the locations very pretty. The titles are fine.

Story: Maw Tolliver is a slave to her husband and sons, lawless moonshiners. Lem Tolliver kills old Hardin when he objects to Lem's attack on his little girl, Essie. When Essie goes to live with the Tollivers, Lem discovers that Tommy, the youngest and weakest of the Tollivers, loves Essie. Lem announces he will marry Essie. How Maw Tolliver betrays the moonshiners to save her boy and his sweetheart brings it to a forceful dramatic conclusion.

Should Find a Very Definite Place Among the Best Pictures

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

One thing about this is certain. It is a fine picture, and if you cater to a clientele that wants good pictures, don't miss "Driven." You can make promises for a mighty fine dramatic offering that will make a very definite impression. They'll remember the picture. It is that kind. And they'll remember the performances of very capable players, probably not box office names, but deserving of it. Do your best to convince them of their good work.

They may remember Charles Mack from Griffith's "Dream Street." Let them know it is a story of Kentucky moonshiners and play up the angle of the mother who braved the wrath of a brutal husband to save her youngest son. You can also promise action. Don't miss telling them about the fight. A few feet of this, as a trailer, will surely bring them back. Use Charles Brabin's name and tell them he has a fine entertainment to offer them in "Driven."
The laughs you'll never forget—

A picture to rouse you to uncontrollable laughter; to talk about; to think about; to rave about; and to remember forever.
In its originality, swift action, ludicrous incidents, fast recurring climaxes of irresistible comicality, Lloyd's greatest, a veritable masterpiece of mirth.
The need of the business today is big pictures.
Pictures big enough to fill the biggest houses; pictures big enough for people to talk about—to tell their friends to see; pictures so big that the little houses, as well as the larger, will have a constant turnaway.

DIRECTOR ...................... Louis J. Gasnier
AUTHOR ........................ Bertha M. Clay
SCENARIO BY ................. Hope M. Clay
CAMERAMAN .................... Karl Loring
AS A WHOLE ....... Will probably prove very satisfying box office attraction in certain houses

STORY ...... Its drama will appeal to some although situations carry little conviction DIRECTION ...... A lavishly mounted production and it should strike them from this angle

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good

LIGHTINGS .......................... Good

PLAYERS ...... Estelle Taylor well suited to the part and pleasing when she does not overact; Kenneth Harlan and Edith Roberts have roles next in importance

EXTERIORS .......................... All right

INTERIORS ........................ Very good

DETAILED ........................ Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Opera singer, responsible for imprisonment of man she loves, finally relents. Her confession makes him free to return to his wife and baby

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 6,971 feet

Very likely "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" will make some money for exhibitors who cater to a class who favor the type of atmosphere and situations contained in it but its popularity is decidedly confined to these. The story is much too improbable and unconvincing to furnish entertainment for those who demand strong, original stories with reasonable situations.

Gasnier has mounted it lavishly and this angle of the picture will be one of the exhibitors best talking points. They like to look at elaborate settings, back stage shots and the variety of scenes that Gasnier has included to the end of making his picture good to look at.

As for the story, they'll pity the young heroine, suffer with the hero and accumulate a strong feeling of hate for the opera singer who causes all the trouble. It won't matter to them that hero's imprisonment is unconvincing, nor that his influence and the witnesses that he might have called, could certainly have won him an acquittal. The development is nearly always obvious and Gasnier has not succeeded in gathering much suspense so that when, after several reels of suffering on the part of hero, the opera singer relents, confesses the truth and brings about hero's pardon, there is no great punch to it.

The last reels might be improved in the way of a better sustained interest by cutting. The last two or three reels need some sort of speeding up. Some of the sub-titles are much too flowery, and at times there is a somewhat choppy continuity.

Estelle Taylor does very well as the Spanish opera star. Kenneth Harlan is a suitable hero and Edith Roberts is the young wife. Miss Roberts' own dark hair is much more becoming than the blonde wig, incidentally.

Story: Alan Randolph meets Rosita Mendez, a singer, in Spain, but immediately returns to his fiancée, Violet, in America, when he finds himself falling in love with Rosita. She follows him to America, threatens to shoot Alan and in a scuffle shoots herself. She accuses Alan and after he spends some time in prison, Rosita eventually relents and writes a confession that clears him. Alan then returns to Violet whom he had married in secret.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms"—Sounds Like an Attractive Title, Especially to Women

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is a lot of good interesting material for the average picture-goer in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and the title should be an easy winner especially to women. As a matter of fact the title comes from a famous novel written many years ago by Bertha M. Clay and had a tremendous vogue. At the time it was published almost every girl who went to work read it en route. It has a lot of sob stuff in it and while many of the situations are hardly problematical, the title alone if properly played up, will bring them in and there is enough of an interesting sort of picture to send them out well pleased.

For your present generation of picture goers who may not know the authoress tell them that Bertha M. Clay had one of the greatest audiences of any writer of her day. Your women folk will easily grasp that the title has something to do with marriage and that is probably the most absorbing topic for your women patrons. You can tell them that Gasnier who made "Rich Men's Wives" directed this.

If your crowd likes names you have Kenneth Harlan, Edith Roberts and Estelle Taylor to satisfy them with.

EXTERIORS ........................ Attractive
INTERIORS ........................ Appropriate

DETAIL ............................ Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY......Mother trying to secure rich husband for her daughter exposes

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......5,966 feet

This is without doubt the best story that Katherine MacDonald has had recently. It gives her a role that demands a display of her dramatic ability and doesn’t rely upon her beauty alone to make it a success. The star handles the part especially well and seems thoroughly sincere in her interpretation. The theme does not, however, take her into a new atmosphere. It would be nice to see Katherine MacDonald in a story, sometime, that would require her to be a happy, cheerful person instead of habitually sad and distressed.

Talk About It as a Society Drama and Use Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is more or less of a good audience appeal in a story such as this and it will please a good majority of picture goers, the average “fan” crowd in parcular. You can pretty nearly always depend upon satisfying them with a society drama and in “White Shoulders” you can talk about the mother who sought to marry her daughter to the highest bidder. The theme lends itself readily to catchlines that should attract attention. Say: “Shall a daughter’s beauty be marketed by her mother?”

“White Shoulders” is a theme, familiar in its principles, but built up with interesting by-plot and incident that keeps it from being commonplace. It is the old idea of a mother with a beautiful daughter, auctioning the girl off to the highest bidder. This in itself is not new but the development, though occasionally a bit obvious, makes it quite interesting and Director Forman has handled it in a way that holds the attention and builds toward a fair suspense at the close.

It may not be wholly convincing that a girl would allow a mother to force her into such negotiations, but there is sufficient reason inasmuch as the girl’s brother is standing trial for his life as a result of his shooting a man who slurred the girl’s character. She is willing to contract a marriage with a rich man in order to secure money to save her brother’s life. The introduction of meller at the end is not necessary but it furnishes a thrill and puts some force into the climax.
The auto tumbling over the cliff will please the lovers of thrills.

Besides the star the picture boasts of some popular players such as Bryant Washburn, who plays the lead, Nigel Barrie, as the rich suitor who jilts the girl when he learns she was mixed up in a murder case, and Tom Forman, as her brother. Others are Chas. K. French, James O. Barrows, Richard Headrick, a cute youngster, Fred Malatesta, Lincoln Stedman and William DeVauil.

Story: Mrs. Pitman persuades her daughter, Virginia, to accept the wealthy old Colonel, but the girl is repulsed by his advances. For this the Colonel tells the guests that he paid for the girl’s clothes and is shot by Virginia’s brother, Robert, for the remark.
Mrs. Pitman takes her daughter to a fashionable resort where she manages to engage her to another, Clayborne Gordon, who cancels it when he learns of her past. How Virginia is eventually happy with her true love who turns out to have more money than any of the others, and the brother is freed, completes the story.

Explain that the title is derived from the fact that the girl was nicknamed “White Shoulders.” Display plenty of stills of the star in your lobby and if they like thrills, talk about the race track sequence and the automobile crash in the last reels. You can appeal particularly to the star’s admirers, telling them it is the best of her recent offerings. Also let them know the story is by George Kibbe Turner and appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

"An Exciting Picture with a Romantic Plot, Liberally Spiced with Thrills, Well Directed and Handsomely Photographed—"

Motion Picture News

There are a number of thrills in the picture and some comedy relief. The capture of Trooper Ramsey (Earl Fox) by the gang of bootleggers; his forced return to headquarters and his disgrace and the scenes attending his expulsion from the Mounted are well worked out, Ramsey's finding of himself, his conquering of fear under the power of Fenton (Frank Losee) and his capture of two criminals forms the other highlight of the production. The shooting of one of the hootch gang by the villain is staged in fine manner.

Charles Miller Productions... presents

The Man She Brought Back

with

Earle Fox and Doris Miller and Frank Losee

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

An exciting picture with a romantic plot, liberally spiced with thrills, well directed and handsomely photographed. "The Man She Brought Back" gives an entirely new twist to a Northwest Mounted story by making the hero a coward in the beginning of things, a very unusual angle and one that is cleverly developed; as under the influence of his fiancée's love and the burden of disgrace he bears, John Ramsey (Earl Fox) determines to conquer his fears, redeem himself or die in the attempt. The picture holds its interest from start to finish and should prove a likely box office asset.

Points of Appeal.—Apart from its adventurous lure the film rivets one's attention by the psychological problem it presents in the unfolding of the hero's character and his mental struggle against the timidity with which nature has cursed him. He wins sympathy even in his weaker moods, for the impression is skilfully created that he is more to be pitied than blamed. And his final triumph makes all the bigger hit because he conquers fear, much more so than if he were of the usual type of trading man who over-rides all obstacles with careless ease from the first moment he appears on the screen.

There is abundant suspense and a climax warranted to please every body. Cast.—Earl Fox gives a clean-cut, intensely dramatic performance as John Ramsey. Doris Miller is an attractive and thoroughly capable Margo, the support is excellent and the Canadian types are true to life.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are many beautiful exteriors, including a number of fine winter scenes, with admirable long shots and good lighting prevails. The costume is smooth and the action travels at a brisk clip.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

As a photoplay of its type, this is interesting entertainment with Earle Fox playing the principle role; that of a recruit in the Northwest Division, who, after getting a perilous assignment is overcome by fear and later, through faith in the girl that loves him, he goes out into the wilderness and redeems himself by capturing a gang of outlaw smugglers. The production is finely staged, abounds in good photography of the outdoor country and boasts an excellent cast for the various roles.
The girl who tried to fool others succeeded only in fooling herself. For the victim of her wiles appeared at midnight and took by main strength the love which was rightfully his.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... White man, island recluse, wages war against all other white men; meets death trying to regain daughter from English lover

Seven reels of attractive views, pleasing players and good action is what is offered in George Melford’s production, “Ebb Tide,” adapted from Robert Louis Stevenson’s novel. The original has been elaborated upon for the purposes of the screen, however, but only to include more action and a more thrilling entertainment on the whole. And for anyone that likes a virile sea story “Ebb Tide” is certainly a first rate picture, very well made.

Melford has secured truly fine atmosphere both for the water sequences and the island where the tyrant Attwater holds all white men at bay while he pursues his pearl fishing unmolested. There are beautiful shots throughout the film and together with fine photography contribute the production’s pictorial appeal. The storm episode is not nearly as realistic as Melford’s storm of “The Sea Wolf.” A miniature is used for the long shots of the ship floundering and in the close-ups the boat isn’t even tipping. But on every other angle the director has provided a production worthy of the material and the presentation is vivid and often spectacular.

There are many first class thrills in “Ebb Tide” such as a battle with an octopus in the ocean; the storm at sea; the battle on the schooner in which hero is overpowered and together with the heroine, made prisoner; hero’s escape from the island where he would be killed by the owner if caught by his black men; and the burning of the schooner and the tragic death of the island tyrant. Where they demand action and thrills there is certainly enough to hold them in “Ebb Tide.” Quite a good deal of footage is used for unnecessary detail and makes the picture too long.

The cast is composed of popular players and types especially well suited to these particular roles. James Kirkwood, Raymond Hatton and George Fawcett are a mighty interesting trio and Noah Beery is always a reliable villain. Lila Lee hasn’t a great deal to do, nor Jacqueline Logan who is pretty as a native girl.

Story: A storm sends a schooner in sight of an island ruled by Attwater, a man at odds with the world, white men in particular, against whom he swears vengeance because one stole his wife. Herrick, Huish and Davis, derelicts of the schooner are victims of Attwater’s wrath especially when Huish and Davis try to steal his pearls and Herrick falls in love with his daughter. The plot is involved but comes around to the happy ending for Attwater’s daughter and Herrick.

Plenty to Talk About If You Want to Interest Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors can safely promise thrills and action for this latest George Melford production and if they have a clientele that strongly favors this type of entertainment, they can put their best efforts into its exploitation. Rightly handled it should do a first class business.

There are plenty of names to use in advertising it. Use the author’s name and arrange a tie-up with your local book dealer. Use George Melford’s name and mention his recent offerings, “The Sheik” and “Burning Sands.” The cast contains all well known names and offers a specially strong advertising angle. Talk about the action and thrills in capital letters and use stills and a trailer if you can get one.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... 5,000 feet

Those who crave excitement in their screen entertainment will have a lively one coming to them in "Bulldog Drummond," an adaptation of the stage play of the same name. It is the wildest kind of melodrama and too vastly improbable and impossible to be given, a serious thought. But it does furnish situations for a fast moving and more or less thrilling film in which things happen thick and fast. And there is a big enough majority of screen patrons who favor this type of entertainment to make the feature popular with exhibitors who cater to this particular crowd.

It has an atmosphere of mystery and contains all the mechanical contrivances that make for hair-raising sequences. Some of the stunts are really new and likely to produce chills among those with more acute senses. The "thumb-screw," a device of torture, is one of them and the poisonous bath another. These bits supply much of the feature's thrills and unless they are too gruesome or uncanny for your audience, they should register the suspense for which they are intended.

Director Apfel has done pretty well with a story that is somewhat difficult to apply to the screen. There is such a maze of incidents and complications that it was no easy job to keep things comprehensive. Up until about the last reel it is easy enough to follow, but in an apparent desire to provide a speedy conclusion events become confused and it isn't easy to tell who is ahead in the game of wits—the doctor who operates the mystery sanatorium or the ex-officer hero who is trying to solve the mystery.

Carlyle Blackwell is kept on the jump as the army man who sought excitement and Evelyn Greeley is the girl who leads him to it. Other than being kept busy the featured players are not required to display any unusual ability. The picture was made in Holland and the remainder of the cast is not known to Ameri-

Undoubtedly Can Do Good Business Where the Crowd is Right

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a good box office picture for the exhibitor who caters to a meller loving crowd. If you know they want excitement in their entertainment you can bank on satisfying them with "Bulldog Drummond." You can promise thrills and unusual mystery stuff that will surely appeal to them. It is not right for the highbrow clientele. It will be much too absurd for them, especially since it is treated seriously.

The stage play was purposely overdone and presented in more of a burlesque fashion, but the screen version is straight mystery meller with both mystery and meller piled on thick. It will make a good number for the right house but be sure you have the crowd or you will undoubtedly hear some kicks. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are names that have long been before the picture public. Exploitation will be necessary also.

the infinitely appreciative, the apotheosis of tact and consideration . . .

So ha-a-as——"

A drum of thunder from outside drowned out the rest of her words. She flung her empty glass on the table and set it aside. "I'm through with this book," she shouted.

Then, without warning, she felt other arms around her, felt herself lifted from the lounge. Joe Hull had picked her up and was trying, drunkenly, to imitate Dick.

"Put me down!" she said sharply.

His maudlin laugh, and the sight of that prickly yellow jaw close to her face, stirred her to intolerable disgust.

"At once!"

"The—pan-ic—" he began, but got no further, for Gloria's hand swung around swiftly and caught him in the cheek. At this he all at once let go of her, and she fell to the floor, her shoulder hitting the table a glancing blow in transit . . .

Then the room seemed full of men and smoke. There was Tana in his white coat reeling about supported by Mark. Instantly he was blowing a gale and blend of music and — and smoke. But she could not have gone back into the living-room—better madness than the madness of that clamor . . . Up-stairs she fumbled for the electric switch and missed it in the darkness; a roomful of lightning showed her the button plainly on the wall. But when the impenetrable black shut down, it again eluded her fumbling fingers, so she slipped off her dress and petticoat and threw herself weakly on the dry side of the half-drenched bed.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,497 feet

Regardless of the fact that “Thelma” eventually develops into a very conventional eternal triangle, it has a lot to recommend it (to those outside of the highbrows) to whom it will furnish first rate entertainment.
Exhibitors can undoubtedly use it to their financial advantage if they cater to a crowd that likes stories combining the elements found in Marie Corelli’s novel, “Thelma,” which has a faithful adaptation in Thomas Dixon’s scenario. They strongly favor such romance as joins a farmer’s daughter and an English nobleman in marriage and besides this there is a tragic touch in the love of a hunchback for the girl and his self-destruction when he finds she is betrothed to another.

The commonplace episodes of the latter reels will not appeal to a high class clientele but it is possible they will accept the picture for the numerous other good qualities which it contains. The early reels are thoroughly interesting and for the most part, original.
The atmosphere is quite unusual and is certainly commendable. Director Bennett has secured many ideal shots for his exteriors and the interiors are very well done, many of them looking like the real thing. Excellent photography is another good feature.

Besides the pictorial attractiveness of the picture,
there is a star that has a really fascinating personality.
Jane Novak is very appealing and winning in the title role. She is given a first rate supporting cast with Vernon Steel as her leading man and other well known players such as June Elvidge, Barbara Tennant and Bert Sprotte who does good work as Thelma’s father.

Story: Thelma lives with her father in their cabin on the coast of Norway. Lord Phillip, a bachelor, is cruising about to escape marriage to Lady Clara. He falls in love with Thelma and secures her father’s consent to the marriage. Thelma and her father have incurred the hatred of the villagers because they maintain that they are direct descendants of the Viking Kings. To stop their talking, Thelma’s father recommends an immediate ceremony. Phillip’s Norwegian wife greatly surprises his English friends and the jealous Lady Clara finds an excuse to tell Thelma that Phillip is unfaithful. Back in Norway the lovers are reunited and happy once more.

A First Rate Attraction For the Average House

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“Thelma” will be a good one for many box offices and stands a good chance of getting over in good style.
In the first place talk about the star, get them interested in her by all means because she is quite charming and deserving of a following. Use plenty of stills of her in the lobby. Talk about the Norwegian atmosphere and in catchlines indicate the story to the extent of the young Norwegian girl as the wife of an English nobleman. This will get a good many in.

You can make certain promises such as for pictorial values and let them know that the picture is really good to look at. Stills will give them an idea of the many pretty shots found in the picture. The novel has long been popular so use Marie Corelli’s name and arrange a tie-up with your local book shop. Tell them the adaptation sticks to the original.
"WILL ROGERS"
always a favorite, scores heavily as Ichabod Crane

NEW YORK REVIEW: "The Headless Horseman" does credit to the great story by Washington Irving.

It should be hailed with a good deal of delight by the lovers of the ever-fascinating tale of the "romantic Ichabod Crane."

Will Rogers, always a favorite, scores heavily as Ichabod Crane. His characterization is clever and his performance all one could ask for.

"The Headless Horseman" shows what can be accomplished when an intelligent and sympathetic director decides to undertake the picturization of one of the classics. Why can't we have more such directors as Mr. Venturini and such actors as Will Rogers?

"The Headless Horseman" brings to the moving picture world something new and something well worth keeping.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Will Rogers has achieved the unusual in picturing the loveless Ichabod. The characterization is one that presents extreme difficulties, in understanding the type of man who is not likeable enough to win your entire sympathy, yet preserving something that keeps him from being at all times ludicrous. Mr. Rogers has avoided burlesque even though there seems to be plenty of temptation. He is funny in a natural consistent way, as one can imagine the author intended.

The ride of the Headless Horseman is the dramatic triumph of the picture. It is comic and weird by turns. These scenes have been vivified by skillful lighting and shading, and some spectacular shots of the sky at night. The whole production shows great care, and unusual regard for detail and a faithfulness in the characters and settings that bespeaks fine directing.

HARRISON'S REPORTS: It is well directed and for the most part well acted and artistically and realistically produced.

EXHIBITORS HERALD: Will Rogers fits the role of Ichabod Crane about as perfectly as anyone could desire and he is given excellent support by Lois Meredith and others.

It is well staged, excellently photographed and on the strength of the author's name should attract attention and should win appreciation from varying types of audiences.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH: Bringing one of the outstanding American classics to the screen is in itself a worthy achievement. "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," by Washington Irving, is one of the required pieces of literature in every school and should be seen in its screen version by all students, as it has been carried out with much of the original charm of Irving as accurate settings on the actual location of the story can give it.

The picture remains a delightful record of the life of other days and will serve to stimulate interest in the reading of the Irving story.

FILM DAILY: Rogers does fine work in vivid picturization of popular Irving story.

An amusing and convincing Ichabod Crane will delight everybody with his work in this.

Exhibitors should have very little trouble to induce their patrons to see "The Headless Horseman." Everyone is familiar with Irving's story, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," and they have probably all read it whether they wanted to or not—in school. You can promise an interesting presentation of the story and a good wholesome entertainment in C. S. Clancy's production.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: "The Headless Horseman," adapted from Washington Irving's "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," will be a rare bit of entertainment. It has been beautifully produced and Will Rogers gives a screamingly funny portrayal of Ichabod Crane.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Blind ex-soldier attempts to kill man who won sweetheart away from him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,491 feet

Sympathy mistaken for love is the keynote theme of “The Jilt,” a good audience picture in which Marguerite De La Motte scores a personal hit in the role of the girl who decides that she does not love her blind war hero. She is quite charming in the part and really worthy of stellar prominence although Matt Moore does a good bit as the blind war veteran. He doesn’t seem the right one for the role as it develops toward the close when he attempts the life of his friend in an effort to retain the girl. Not that Moore can’t handle the part but he just doesn’t fit in with the sequence of events as they transpire toward the finish.

Following the girl’s decision to break the engagement with George she falls in love with Sandy, also an ex-service man and friend of George’s. George returns cured of his blindness but pretends still to be blind. It does not develop until the climax that he can see. There is not sufficient reason for him to have kept his cure a secret and it would have been more logical and sensible for him to have made it known, and probably won back the girl’s love.

Irving Cummings has directed the picture in a way that makes it a good audience attraction and it will appeal to a good many. It is nicely mounted and although not at all a pretentious offering, merits a place on your program. Cummings certainly springs a surprise ending in good style and builds toward it with an increasing suspense. It isn’t likely that many will guess the conclusion. The ending does get away from the convention finale and the chances are they will expect the girl and her former lover to patch up their difference and finish with the clinch. As a matter of fact it does come around to a happy ending but not in the way you expect.

Story: Rose Trenton had refused to marry George Prothero before he went to France but when he returned, blind, and proposed again she accepted him. Shortly after Rose discovered that she had mistaken pity for love and after somewhat of a conflict she breaks the engagement. Then came Sandy, also returned from France and a friend of Prothero’s. They chum about together. Then one day George and Sandy take a long trip and George returns alone, telling of how Sandy was blackjacked. At the same time a letter comes from Paris explaining that George’s eyesight had been restored weeks before. How George confesses an attack upon Sandy in an effort to win back Rose, and Sandy returns to the girl who loves him completes the story.

Use Catchlines and a Trailer Which You Can Secure

Exhibitors will please their patrons with this latest Universal offering. It has a good deal of audience appeal and will satisfy a majority anywhere. You have a good deal to talk about in the story. Play it up with catchlines that indicate the plight of the heroine when she finds she is not in love with the blind hero. You might also make a talking point of the surprise ending. Ask them if they can figure it out by giving the main facts and asking “Which one does she marry?”

You can secure a trailer on this and it would be easy to interest them sufficiently to bring them back. You can promise a picture that is very good to look at and mention the names of the three principals and use stills liberally in your lobby.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Jewish youth flees to America to escape punishment for murder he believes he committed; later he finds his parents in poverty

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

Here is another Jewish home life story that is full of heart interest and mother love. Its situations follow closely those of the initial Russian mother love story, "Humoresque," although they have been twisted into different form with the same climax, however, in which the son, now a prominent lawyer, removes his old parents from the poverty into which they have drifted.

As entertainment "Breaking Home Ties" may be destined for a big money-maker. One thing is certain—that with any Hebrew clientele it is going to be a sure-fire winner: The authors claim the traditional Yiddish melody, Eili, Eili, as the inspiration for their story. This is one certain boost for the picture even though there is little in the anthem that would suggest the story as the authors have written it. Nevertheless the connection is a clever tie-up and sure to afford profitable exploitation. The title has interesting associations. It was the title of a poem and also of a painting which were prize winners at the Chicago exposition. It also has fine exploitation possibilities.

The story has heart interest from start to finish and the directors have refrained from greatly overdoing any of the situations. They establish an immediate premise by introducing their characters and getting into the story right off. The first good dramatic moment is where the youth finds his sweetheart in the arms of his friend who was destitute until taken into the boy's home. The attack and the youth's escape to America follow in rapid succession. The logical and smooth development of the story is the same throughout and at the same time, they have made good use of all the dramatic bits available.

Most of the heart interest stuff is in connection with the old mother and father when they are shown struggling for an existence in the ghetto while the son, unaware that his people have followed him to America, is a prosperous lawyer. The plot is nicely dovetailed to bring about a happy reunion—the lawyer's fiancée suggests that they be married in the Home for the Aged in which she is interested. It is here that he finds his parents.

While there are no especially popular film players in the cast, there are several very interesting performances, notably those of Lee Kohlmar and Rebecca Weintraub as the old father and mother. Arthur Ashley is the son and Jane Thomas, the girl.

Unusually Strong Exploitation Possibilities In This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors know what they did with "Humoresque" and "Breaking Home Ties" is of the same order although not nearly as pretentious as the Borzage production. Still it has box office possibilities and with a careful exploitation should prove a first rate offering. Very much depends upon your effort to put it over, so get behind it if you want it to make money for you.

Appeal strongly to your women folks. It is the sort of thing they like. They can "have a good cry" so let them go to it. A Hebrew clientele will be more than delighted with the picture so let them know that it is based on the traditional Yiddish melody, "Eili, Eili." Incidentally, a proper musical accompaniment will more than help to put the picture over properly. Associated's press sheet contains plenty of good exploitation ideas. Broadcast the title with catchlines. It is a good one and easy to exploit.

CHARACTER OF STORY ......Man returns from Alaska to find his wife and son gone; his four year hunt results in a happy reunion and the death of the man who stole wife

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..........4,762 feet

"While Justice Waits" is an average offering that repeats a very well worn theme—a man returns to his home to find his wife has gone off with another. Of course the theme has been elaborated upon and at times contains some new twists, but on the whole, it is pretty conventional stuff that loses considerable of the dramatic value it should have because it has been done so many times. It is unfortunate that Durning didn't succeed in keeping the development of the plot less obvious. From the start, when hero strikes it rich in the gold mines and drinks a toast to his wife before returning to surprise her with his find, you know just what to expect—that the wife will not be there.

Then, after a lapse of four years, when hero, still searching for the wife and son, comes upon a lad, you fully expect that the boy will turn out to be his son. And he does. The story's only new angle is the manner in which the man goes about his revenge.
This part is well carried out and there is a fair bid for suspense in it since you cannot figure out just what the husband intends to do. At the same time you are not told what has become of the wife. In this respect Durning has done very well and leads up to the climax in good style, bringing about the meeting of the husband and wife before the man who had separated them.

The incident in which the little boy is shot and the doubt as to his recovery is too long drawn out but cutting could easily remedy this. The villain's life depends upon the boy's recovery and when he believes he has killed him with the shot intended for the father, the villain jumps off a balcony to his death. It looked for a time as though a villain was really to exit unpunished but the unusual doesn't happen this time.

Dustin Farnum's admirers will probably be satis-ified with the feature. It presents him in a role typical of his style of playing. Irene Rich gains a lot of sympathy as the wife and Frankie Lee is a capable younger. Earl Metcalf plays the villain.

Story: Dan Hunt joins Carter's outlaw band to locate his wife who had gone away with Carter four years before. He finds his son in the home of a missionary but still no trace of his wife. Some time later the two are reunited when the wife explains that Carter had tricked her into going away with him and then deserted her.

Will Do For the Average Crowd But Don't Make Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Admirers of Dustin Farnum will like "While Justice Waits" very well and if you cater to a crowd that likes dramatic stories and won't object to fairly fami-lar situations, you can undoubtedly satisfy them.
Talk about the man who struck gold and returned to tell his wife the good news but found she had gone away with another. Or if you think it better to keep the plot from them, just play up the title with catch-lines such as "What happens 'While Justice Waits.'"

Where the star is popular play up his name and let them know Irene Rich is his leading woman. The usual exploitation should be sufficient, such as posters, stills in the lobby and your regular slide announcements.

CHARACTER OF STORY..... War hero returns to find father's ranch in hands of mortgagor; raising $300,000 to save it furnishes the thrills
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 7,500 feet

As an out and out action picture "The Pride of Palomar" offers one of the best entertainments of its kind—that is, of course, considering that the spectator does not object to the method of arriving at the action nor the quality of the situations that lead up to the events. The plot is frequently illogical in its development and often far-fetched but all this does not matter if they want excitement, for things certainly do happen and happen fast.

The story is essentially a western that offers a slight variation from the usual formula although its chief situation is the time worn mortgage theme. Some very unnecessary propaganda is introduced which may tend to make the feature unpopular where it is shown in theaters patronized by Japanese. The propaganda has to do with the effort to suppress the influx of Japs into California. The influence of this isn't very strong but it is more or less obvious and since it isn't especially essential to the plot, it might easily have been omitted. Warner Oland plays the part of a Jap who tries to buy Palomar ranch for colonization purposes.

The action is very well distributed and reaches the high spots in the derby at the climax. The race is splendidly timed and Borzage has injected a lot of spirit into it, sufficiently so to almost get them out of their seats at the Rivoli. There's a first rate thrill in it. The comedy touches throughout are also good and seemed to get real laughs. Borzage might have saved a lot of footage by getting into the story sooner. He takes too long to introduce hero and get things started.

Forrest Stanley does good work although he is not the best suited hero for this role. Others in the cast are satisfactory. It includes Marjorie Daw, Tote De Crow, James Barrow, Joseph Dowling, Alfred Allen, George Nicholls, and others.

Story: Don Mike, last of the Dons of California, returns from the war to find his father dead and the famous Palomar ranch in the hands of John Parker, wealthy westerner. Parker intends re-selling the ranch to Okada, a Japanese who wants it for colonization. Parker gives Mike one year in which to raise the $300,000 necessary to save the ranch. Mike has a friend in Parker's daughter, Kay, who, in spite of her father, helps Mike to raise the money. The remainder of the picture deals with Mike's adventures in getting the money which he finally puts into Parker's hand on the last day just as he is about to foreclose.

Talk About the Action and Thrills if That's What They Want

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For a first rate action picture you can depend upon this one to fill the bill. If your folks like excitement you can make promises for "The Pride of Palomar" and feel sure they'll be well satisfied with it. A few feet of the horse race used as a trailer might be all you need to bring them back. Make sure to advise them of the action and do your best to interest them because if they like action pictures it should go over big.

You have the advantage of the publicity back of the picture in the Hearst publications and the story has been running as a serial. Use Peter B. Kyne's name and of course a tie-up with your local book shop would be a good stunt. Of the cast use the names of Marjorie Daw and Forrest Stanley.

Graphic No. 2547—Educational
Type of production..............................1 reel magazine
Grape pickers are seen at work in the world's largest vineyard at Guasti, Cal., where three million gallons of wine, a title says, is annually made "for sacramental purposes." Golf fans will be much interested in the analysis of Miss Glenna Colett, golf champion's shots. Her grip, her form and different shots are shown first in ordinary and then in slow motion photography. The bridle paths of Central Park and their guardian, Officer Cronin are then introduced. A thrill is inserted here when Miss Keith and Officer Cronin volunteer to show how a runaway is apprehended, but the plan goes wrong and a real accident results. Actual photographs of cod-fishing off the Cape fade into pen-and-ink sketches, and vice-versa.

Screen Snapshots No. 14—Pathé
Type of production..............................1 reel fan magazine
As in the preceding numbers of Screen Snapshots, No. 14 shows film stars off duty. Charles Ray is seen getting up early on the farm. Pola Negri arrives and is welcomed in Los Angeles; Carter de Haven and George Sisler of St. Louis discuss baseball; Eric von Stroheim is seen directing; Anita Stewart gets some contributions for charity and Mae Murray and her husband entertain a truck full of kiddies at their Los Angeles home. The reel is full of interest for picture-goers.

Starland Revue No. 16—Film Booking Offices
Type of production..............................1 reel fan magazine
The latest edition of the Starland Revue will be of particular interest to patrons of the stage since it presents intimate glimpses of the legitimate stars. Florence Reed appears in scenes from her current attraction, "East of Suez," Herbert Yost, star of "Why Men Leave Home," gives a good reason why they don't leave home, and Ula Sharon displays many of the elaborate costumes used in the Greenwich Village Folies. The remainder of the reel deals with Anna Fitz's selection of a tobacco at a Fifth Ave. shop, some views of Tamaki Murra, the Japanese singer, Ned Wayburn teaching his "Dancing Dozen" some new steps and Emma Haig proving that she is none the worse for having danced off the Music Box Revue stage and breaking her back.

"Pitter Patter"—Cameo—Educational
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy
Fred Hibbard's second Cameo comedy starring Jimmie Adams, deals with a bridal couple who have to get married before twelve o'clock in order to get the bride's inheritance. There is no way of telling whether the action takes place at twelve o'clock noon, or at night, but one is led to believe that it is at night for a shot of the bridegroom shows him soundly sleeping. It is pouring rain, hence the title, and the ceiling leaks which finally wakes him. After much rushing around, he finally gets dressed with the aid of his dog and gets there in time to marry the girl. The plot is further complicated by the appearance of small-pox in his house and the quarantine resulting. Average comedy, with gags neither startlingly new nor funny, but will doubtless get by.

"The Speed Boy"—Universal
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy
Lewis Sargent is again seen as the marvelous messenger boy. This time he is a speed king and delivers messages like hot cakes. Laura La Plante is his pretty sweetheart who vainly tries to catch him. Sargent has a likeable personality, but the stuff he has to work with in this is the old story of the childless couple whose rich aunt believes they have a child and is coming to see the baby before settling her money on him. Sargent arrives with a telegram informing them that the aunt is coming and they impress him into serving as the "son." All goes well, and the aunt promises to settle the money on "Willie" when his wig falls off. Sargent's followers may like him in this, but the story has been done innumerable times.

"Friday, the 13th"—Aesops Fables—Pathé
Type of production..............................1 reel animated cartoon
The opening footage of this fable will undoubtedly bring a laugh, showing as it does Farmer Al Falta's dog and cat dancing to the music of the Farmer's violin. They do all the latest steps and the animation is good. From there on the reel deals with the Farmer's troubles on Friday the 13th. The reel is entirely up to the standard of the series.

Graphic No. 2546—Educational
Type of production..............................1 reel magazine
Lodovico Miscow's establishment at Rio Janerio is visited first, where bric-a-brac is made from butterflies and sold for souvenirs. The pleasures in leading a dog's life nowadays is then shown conclusively. There is even a dog cemetery where they are buried with funeral pomp and grief. The scenic shots under the title "Way Down Upon the Swannee River" are extremely good. The photography is beautiful, the material interesting, and the atmosphere of Dixie has been caught successfully. An Olendorf cartoon closes the issue.

Pathe Review 184
Type of production..............................1 reel magazine
Scenic shots picturing Longfellow's "Sunrise on the Hills," open this issue. This is followed by interesting views of the people of the new republic of Latvia, showing the manner in which they trade their wool and grain for food and clothing. The chemical demonstration deals with the nature of air while the colored photography takes one to the White City of Gafsa.

"Shine 'Em Up"—Paul Parrot—Pathé
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy
This Paul Parrot offering while not terribly funny, will doubtless please the average audience. The familiar chase stuff—this time deals with a bunch of escaped convicts and of course Paul captures them and wins the station master's daughter. In the opening scenes, Paul is a bootblack. Two men come to have their shoes shined and getting their legs crossed are amazed to find themselves walking away with one shoe white and the other black. Only average production,
Short Stuff

"The Chased Bride"—Christie—Educational

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

Neal Burns plays a most active part in this Christie two reeler. Vera Steadman is to be married to the wrong man because he has the whip-hand over father, but Neal drags her into the yard in her wedding dress and marries her before anyone knows it. Nevertheless, father tells her she must marry the villain to save him. Neal lays in wait for the preacher and he and his friends capture him and take his clothes. A mock marriage is performed but the villain is none the wiser. The laugh of the picture comes when Neal pursues the train the couple are on. First on foot, then by machine and finally by a hand-car which he works himself. Then the father discovers the real preacher all tied up and finds the supposed marriage bogus, so he too, pursues the bride. At length, however, she is caught and the villain arrested.

"The Big Scoop"—Johnny Jones—Pathé

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

Johnnie Jones and Gertrude Messinger, assisted by their company of juvenile actors, offer a very entertaining two-reeler in "The Big Scoop." The kids are natural and enjoyable. In no way do they overact. Johnny is the editor of a little local paper full of scintillating gossip called "The Whisper," and Gertrude is the society editor. Everyone in town is saying that it has more news than "The Daily Tribune," and Old Man Jones is very hot under the collar. All "The Whisper" needs is a "big scoop," and with the aid of a false-alarm burglar scare and a flash-light photograph they get the picture of what they think is the burglar, and they sell out at a good price to Old Man Jones, the Tribune owner, just before their latest issue appears with a front page picture that nearly gives the Old Man apoplexy.

The Almadge girls, Norma and instance, accompanied by their sister, Josephine Schenck, and Jack linville, Schenck’s secretary, re-ned on the Mauretania after a week and a half months’ trip abroad.
They traveled through France, Germany, Belgium, England, and Africa, where they visited Tunis, Constanta and Algiers. They traveled by ship to the desert and slept on the desert sands. Cunard had added the news that they might be scenes for “The Garden of All Lands.”

While in London Norma conducted tours through the “Daily Sketch” the most beautiful girl in Great Britain to return to America with her pictures under her tutelage.
There were 8,000 entries. From these 100 most beautiful girls were se-ted. Schenck made teas at the studio. The winner se-ted is Margaret Leath, age 20, who arrived here Dec. 1 and met the ladies with a tour to the studio with her pictures. She will be the star of “Aggie” in “Within the Law,” which will be directed by Frank B. He will shoot scenes in the desert with Norma.
He also takes several interiors of the houses and large department stores, her famous pictures taken at the end of week.

Norma and Norma will remain in New York two weeks, with a view of finding a home for Constance. The ladies will return with them to the East.

Ben Turpin in the Hospital
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—It is understood Ben Turpin is in a hospital recuperating from a slight operation.

All-Animal French Film
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Paris—After two years of production work, Alfred Machin and Henri Viennot have finished a feature in which all the roles are taken by animals. About 30 animals have principal parts including chickens, bats, guinea pigs, chimpanzees, a rhino, a meerkat, a white mouse and a small boa constrictor. The leading roles are taken by a bull dog and a rough-haired terrier.

A promise fulfilled! The many exhibitors who played “Rich Men’s Wives” were promised top-notch business because the distributor, the Al Lichman Corporation, knew it would make money and it sure did. Just completed a successful week’s run at the Chicago theatre in the Windy City and still going strong all over. — Adv.

Where To?

Where are they going? And how will they get there? Re-fering to five reeles. Made by noted comedians. Chaplin started it. Lloyd followed suit. Keaton threatens to do it.
And so it goes.

Everybody knows why this idea developed. Exhibitors had to pay so much for the two reeles. That smart producers figured they could pay more. Use the comedians as feature attractors—which they were. And save buying a second rate feature. To pad out the program. All of which was—and is smart. But how many of these comedies can live up? How many can register?

Everyone in the producing end of the business. From executives on down. Know how difficult it is. To make four or five reele comedies. But just as soon. As these big comedians get going. In four or five reeles. They feel they have to keep it up. The result may prove satisfactory. But it may not.

Now wouldn’t it be better. Wouldn’t it be a lot better. If instead of making four or five reele comedies. One after another.
These important stars made the footage needed. For their comedy. If it was better in two reeles. All right. Or if four were needed. Again all right. But let them be real comedies. Instead of footage.

London Notes
From "The Film Renter and Moving Picture News."
London — The long anticipated première of "Flames of Passion," directed by Hyams, took place at the New Oxford on Friday night; and without doubt is one of the biggest productions that has ever been produced in this country. A packed house containing practically the whole of the prominent lights of the film industry in England, gathered to appraise the value of this new British picture, and this critical audience gave the film a great ovation.

German films are to receive their first showing at the New Scala on Dec. 11. It's success is certain, for "Passion" is the selected feature and there is not the slightest doubt that immediately following this première, now on his way to Cuba, England's great number of German super attractions which have been stored by exporters for the last two years. It will be very interesting to see the reception that "Passion" receives, but personally I do not think there is any question of it all about its success.

Producing films in England are forging ahead, and there is now a proposal to hold an all British film week in September next year, when nothing but British films will be shown at the leading kinemas throughout the country.

Gus Schlesinger, agent for Warner Brothers, has signed his contract with Arthur Clavering of Film Booking Officers who will market their six productions.

Dell's "The Top of the World," and "The Old Folks at Home," which was made by Triangle Fine Arts in 1916, with Elmer Clifton and Mildred Harris in the cast. Nolan will do an original by a well-known scenarist, it is announced.

Ask Simpler Customs Rules
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Washington — Jack S. Connolly, representing the Hays organization, has conferred with Ernest W. Camp, chief of the Bureau of Customs of the Treasury Department, asking that department to simplify its regulations covering the re-entry into the United States of American films returned from abroad without payment of duty. A system of registering the films when exported has been suggested.

Bray Series Through Houdinsohn
A series of 26 "Bray Romances" produced by Bray Prod. Inc. will be distributed by Houdinsohn at the rate of one every four weeks starting Dec. 10.
Thirteen of the subjects combine scientific and educational value. These include such pictures as "The Mystery Box," dealing with radio; "The Sky Svegeter," dealing with the speed at which light travels and "Gambling With the Gulf Stream" dealing with the proposition to change the course of the Gulf Stream to have it warm the Atlantic Coast.
The other 13 subjects are cartoon comedies which will alternate with the scientific subjects.
Where To?

Because the exhibitors will pay. And pay. Just the same, proportionately. For a two reeler. As much as a five reeler. With these big comedy stars. Then they are sure of holding their audience interest. The other way around makes it a gamble.

WHAT MEANS THIS?

They say Sam Goldwyn has stopped playing tennis. Also that he has closed riding in Central Park. Also that he has been seen. In and about luggage stores. Looking over travelling bags. And they do say. Them—know. Or think they do. That all this anticipates a trip to Hollywood. And that maybe—just maybe—Samuel will be back. Among the producers. Soon. Very soon.

ROAR OF BATTLE

PLAYING PERCENTAGE

Talking with big producer. Very important man. Thinks exhibitors are kidding themselves. By not playing percentage. Thinks in the end they would see they were better off. Than paying very big prices. For all pictures. Because they are supposed to be "big"—and usually overpaying. And again paying regulation prices. For ordinary program figures. And he puts it right—"they overpay for these.

The answer is simple. The right way is percentage. You can't get away from that. Of course exhibitor's still oppose it. They don't want producers to know their income. And their operating expense. Fearful producer's will come in as opposition. And possibly wipe them out in business. And possibly they're right. It might happen.

But—and golly what a big BUT it is—there isn't a producer in the business. Who owns theaters. But what would give them away. To speak. And be glad to get rid of them. If he felt he could "get a bunk." In certain cities and towns. Surely these houses aren't making money for them. Not if their statements are to be believed.

And if this producer is right—and he owns a lot of theaters—the average exhibitor is paying too much for the "big" pictures. And too much for the little ones as well. But it's a tough job. To make exhibitors believe in producers. Maybe an angel could. But hardly a mortal.

GO AND GET A LAUGH

If you're in the picture business. And you live anywhere near New York. Come on over. And get yourself a treat. Go and see "Merton of the Movies." It's full of picture interest.

There should be advertising rates for this department. But there isn't.

THOSE BOOKING COMBINATIONS

Everybody's busy with 'em now. Since their danger was pointed out this column. The Right Honorable Wm. A. Johnston. Advises in his usual way. In the News—suggesting to exhibitors to go slowly, very slowly, in connection with booking combinations.

And The Exhibitors Trade Review runs a symposium. On the subject. And in the events of the week. Comes the news that in Chicago Mr H. Bush is guiding such a movement. But keeping dark the names of the houses. In his organization. Which proposes to fight Aaron Jones. All the other big strings. Like Ascher's and Lubリンler & Trinz. And Hagan & Katz. And in Los Angeles Glenn Harper. A strong Sidney Shen man. Has a string of 40 houses. In his Exhibitor's Association. All that's the way it goes.

To Johnston's idea let's add this: Don't bother about going slow. Mister Exhibitor. Learn how to crawl on this subject. And after you start. Think it over. And crawl a little more. Before you "shout." You'll start something worse than circuit booking. If you don't watch out. And if you exhibition writers are high today. You'll have a wet towel on your forehead. And maybe something else. Because you'll just force the producers. And distributors to combine. As sure as you are alive. And on top of that. Maybe you'll have trouble. In your own booking organizations. For a booking combination. Is as attractive to gentlemen of easy living. And slippery fingers. As a speckled fly. Is to a trout.

To Bill Johnston's "go slowly" add this: "Beware!"

THE NIGHT OF NIGHTS

Is in sight. Next Saturday. When the T. O. C. C. Trips the big fantastic. Gentlemen who haven't taken the moth balls out. Will adopt this as due notice. Men's styles in hips for Saturday is that they hold bulge.

More Distribution

or Independents—Vitagraph Announces Special Attention to This Department

In a statement issued yesterday by resident Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph, the following appears: "Vitagraph's activities during the mining year, according to the statement by Mr. Smith, will be further increased by the distribution of errititious productions by independent producers. With its thoroughly organized sales force, distributed in its exchanges throughout the world, at the highest point of efficiency in its history, this particular branch of the industry is to receive special attention."

The statement tells of the release of the Jesse Robbins specials and the release of the Urban Popular Classics. No additional information regarding the proposed widened distribution for independent producers appears in the statement, and it was impossible to obtain additional information at Vitagraph offices.

The announcement added that 24 reels would be released during 1923.

Goldwyn to Coast

Possibilities of His Return to Production Activities—Some Comment

"Special to THE FILM DAILY"

Chicago—Samuel Goldwyn, former president of Goldwyn Pictures, passed through here yesterday en route to the coast.

There has been considerable discussion in film circles recently of the possibility of Goldwyn reentering production independently. This comment has been occasioned by reports that he had a number of appointments with authors as well as stars.

An effort was made to reach Goldwyn several days ago at the S. S. Benicia in New York, for the purpose of clarifying the situation, but he could not be located.

Bert Adler Back

Bert Adler representing Distribution, Inc., returned yesterday from an extensive trip in which he visited exhibitors in Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Toledo, Cleveland, in the interests of "The Man to Play God."

Schenck's Views

Believes Russia Not Yet Ready for American Picture Help—Opening New Pictures in England—Production Plans

The Russian situation is not yet in readiness for co-operation of Americans either for distribution or production.

English exhibitors should have the benefit of showing the newest American pictures. First National's London office has started a plan to make this feasible.

Connie Talmadge will make "Madame Pompadour," the big Parisian hit. "Ashes of Vengeance" and "Dust of Desire" have been purchased for screen material.

These are the high spots of Schenck's European trip, as he talked of them yesterday. "The Russian situation is not as important as some people may have been led to believe."

"I was willing to go to Russia to discuss production and distribution. But I made it clear to Racht, the Soviet representative who met me in Berlin—by the way he is a New Yorker—that I would not deal with any except the heads of the Government. It was no use to waste time with bureau chiefs. He said he would get things straightened out and I received a cable from one Lieberman in London, a bureau head, in charge of the Kino's, or cinemas of Russia. I referred him to take all matters up with Al Kaufman of Famous Players, who is in Berlin and would transmit the ideas to the Hays organization. That is how I left it."

Schenck deplored the showing of old American pictures in England. "The people want the new American pictures, he said, "and while some exhibitors in an effort to be patriotic show the English pictures the people are not yet in condition to be discussed."

Novelty Features at Ball

"In the Spotlight" is the title of the special attraction, which will be presented at the Theater Owners' Dance at the Astor on Saturday.

It is understood that this will be a novelty sensation in which all the stars will appear in pairs and one of Broadway's most prominent comedians will introduce them.

In the box party with Governor-Elect Alfred E. Smith, who will be the guest of honor, will be Senator-Elect Copeland, James Walker, and others.

Due to an error which appeared in yesterday's issue F. M. Brockell appeared to have been appointed manager of First National. The item should have read "sales manager."

First Nat'l December Releases

Schenck's Views

of the picture which was booked several years ago and is shelved, is split between the exhibitor and the distributor. This seems to be an equitable way of handling a difficult problem.

Discussing the plays he saw abroad, Schenck declared that there was little material which his stars could use. "Madame Pompadour" the big hit in Paris which Charles Dillingham will produce on the stage here has been acquired for Constance, so he said, and he also told of buying the two books mentioned above.

When the Talmadge party leaves for the Coast he expects to go along and except for special visits from time to time expects to remain on the Coast for a year making three pictures with Norma and three with Connie, for First National.

High Rentals

A letter from an important film man in the mid-west west yesterday says: "The exorbitant demand of film rentals are driving intelligent capital out of the field, and when I say intelligent capital, I mean men who have a Broadway rating of from monos to billions."

"The discord and discontent of some of the big money men in this business is appalling, and they are actually seeking means to withdraw their capital from the retail end of our industry, that they might invest it in a more honorable and safe business."

Uncensored Movies

The Times of the Times carried statements from Jesse Lasky and Douglas Fairbanks relative to the prospect of uncensored pictures in New York State in anticipation of Gov. Elect Smith revoking the present censorship act.

Pete Smith Writes

Pete Smith takes his Underwood in hand to say that the item regarding Frank Lloyd making scenes in the Subway in New York is not, as noted, for the first time, and goes on to say that Mickey Neilan did it, with his aid, and with Georgey Cohen in the picture, five years ago.

Newspaper Opinions
"The Toll of the Sea"—Technicolor—Rialto
TIMES.—"The Toll of the Sea" is notably superior to that of "The Glorious Adventure"—almost uniform in the first role. It is clear, true and bright without being harsh. The producers of the picture have been wise in selecting it for their subjects of a similar kind.

WORLD.—Is really something quite marvellous. The picture is an interesting experiment, but a poor photoplay. The Technicolor pictures seem to be the best colored films. The acting is good, but we cannot believe that different pictures of the same nature, it is so beautiful.

TRIBUNE.—We are afraid that it has spoken for all other pictures of a similar nature, it is too beautiful.

MORNING TELEGRAPH.—The effect is rarely beautiful at times. This commendation does not, however, cover the length of the film. It is in many places unsatisfying, even mediocre.

SUN—This experiment should be seen by all those who have any interest in moving pictures. It is undoubtedly the foretaste of great things in the department of colored photography, and while we cannot call it anything but gorgously beautiful, as for instance many of the colored scenes in "Kings Row" are. "Robins Hood" are beautiful, it is uneden-

TELEGRAM—Predictions had been made that Technicolor's first film production would mark a revolutionary step in photoplay production, and from the reception which "The Toll of the Sea" received at its first showing, it was easy to sense that the public's approval endorsed the opinions of famous artists who had previously shown them.

JOURNAL—It is with difficulty the specta-ator is made to realize that he is not looking at the actual persons and places, for every tint and tone in nature, is reproduced exactly as the human eye views the original.

MAIL—What is undoubtedly the greatest advance yet made in color photography for the films. It is not yet, of course, a perfect art—there is still room for improvement—but for reproduction of natural colors this film, in the reviewer's opinion, has come closest to the goal.

"Hungry Hearts"—Goldwyn—Capitol
MORNING TELEGRAPH—"Hungry Hearts" is the best thing since "Humor par Excellence." The pictures are charged full of human interest. It is all true to life, the characters are so well played and Director E. Mason Hopper has screened it admirably. Standing out prominently in a brilliant cast is Rose Rosenthal, who plays the role of the Jewish mother. "Hungry Hearts" ranks high among the finest motion pictures.

TWICE.—There is one—and really only one—stirring moment in "Hungry Hearts," The photoplay does not face the situation, however. It approaches it through a fictional retelling of the "Offerings of a Russian Jewish Family, "it is not the restrained performance of Helen Ferguson as the daughter of the family, the acting consists largely of self-conscious posing before a camera.

HERALD—"Hungry Hearts" registered an emphatic hit. It deserves to succeed, for it possesses many of those rare qualities which go to make up a great picture. It does not achieve real greatness, but it threatens the heights several times. Ross Roth has a very fine performance as a Jewish mother.

AMERICAN—A vivid account of immigrant life, with an understanding blend of humor, in great part due to the titles written by Montague Glass. The mother's craving for "a beautiful woman," the girl's loneliness and aching desire for life, and the consequent situations are sympathetically inter-

GLOBE—"Hungry Hearts" is one of the finest things of its kind ever done with any form of expression. The magnificent liter:

cy efforts of Israel Zangwill, Fannie Hurst and Montague Glass along similar lines are all surpassed by this screen portrayal. As a motion picture it is far better in every way than "Great Expectations." One feels safe in saying that much of the success of the present picture is certainly coming to the picture at the Capitol due to E. Mason Hopper, the director. No one should omit "Hungry Hearts" from his theater-going schedule. It is one of the pictures of the current season.

JOURNAL—An emotional study of immigrant conditions rendered from the social point of view. The trend of the play is dramatic, there is a light love there, and the acting is well done. The pictures of the production is appealingly sympathetic and well rounded.

F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn pictures Corp., will leave for the Silver City Studios on Thursday. The duration of his stay is not announced. Edward Bowes, vice president, has been at the studios for the last month.

This announcement came from Goldwyn offices yesterday.

It was impossible to secure any additional information from the Goldwyn offices, but it should not be surprising that Godsol is anxious to speed up production and to look to the future in anticipation of products, not only for the season starting later Jan. 1st but for next year's product as well.

While no one in the organization talking, it can hardly be a secret at Goldwyn is anticipating much, due to the forthcoming production, "Ben-Hur," and though work is progressing on the scenario, and in various departments regarding properties, etc., it is a fact that at this time the director has not yet selected who will handle this production which is expected to take me to time to complete, and to cost considerable.

Second Arbuckle?

Some Film Folk Figure This May Be Behind Hiers Starring Contract

"Fatty" Arbuckle's place on the screen to be taken by Walter Hiers. Film folk who were speculating on this yesterday when it became known that Lasky had placed Walter Hiers under a five-year contract to star him in Paramount pictures.

Hiers is a jovial, rotund type who weighs 250 pounds and who has appeared in many pictures made on the Lasky lot. His first starring venture will be "Mr. Billings Spends His Last Time," work upon which will be started immediately at the Lasky lot in Hollywood.

Those in the know figure the Hays office will not change the before noted attitude of disapproval of Arbuckle running to the screen, and it is far from an impossibility so some simple figure, that Lasky wants to develop some one to take his place.

Vitagraph Sues Famous Players-Lasky for $6,000,000 Under Federal Anti-Trust Act

The Vitagraph Company of America, Inc., organized in 1896, the oldest motion picture company in the world, yesterday commenced suit against the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., alleging certain unlawful acts in violation of the Federal Anti-Trust Acts by which the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $2,000,000 and demanding treble judgment in the sum of $6,000,000. The bill of complaint was filed late yesterday afternoon in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, by William Marston Seabury, attorney for the plaintiff, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jules E. Brulatour, Frank A. Garbutt, Cecil B. DeMille, Daniel Frohman, Emil E. Shaefer, Eugene Zukor, Sidney R. Kent, William H. English, Frederick G. Lee, Maurice Wertheim, Gayer G. Dominick, Felix E. Kahn and Theodore F. Whitmarsh are named with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. as defendants.

The suit is based upon the claim that in 1919 the defendants conspired together to control a large number of "first run" theaters of the country for the purpose of restraining trade and suppressing competition among the producers and distributors of motion pictures by booking all the pictures produced by Famous Players and its subsidiaries in all the first run theaters owned, controlled or influenced by Famous Players, and by excluding the pictures of the plaintiff and of other producers and distributors from such theaters.

The complaint contains much that is of great interest to the trade in general, especially at this time, and presents to the courts, for the first time, the legal status of the first run theatres.

Smith's Statement

Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph said last night:

"In filing suit against Famous Players I want the industry to know and understand that the suit represents much more than a personal controversy between two producers and distributors of motion pictures. Alleged Monopoly

Wagner Amusement Co., the defendants directly or indirectly acquired and now control about 40 per cent of the stock of the Metropolitan Amusement Co., which, in turn, owns and controls more than 25 motion picture theaters, some of them first-class, first-run theaters, and in the process, the exclusive right to book pictures in more than 60 theaters all within and throughout the state of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Alabama, and Western Florida, and that by reason of these controlling interests in all or almost all the pictures of the plaintiff have been excluded with negligible exceptions from all, or almost all of the theaters.

Complaint is also made that Famous whenever possible under closed contracts, sold its entire output and "the whole of all possible these contracts are made with franchise holders for First National and the effect of such contracts is to monopolize all or almost all of the exhibition time of a large number of exhibitors."

The complaint describes the Real Corporation as a bogy independent.

As further evidence of attempts of Famous to interfere with Vitagraph, business the complaint sites that an announcement was made by Famous layers with regard to Alice Joyce, Vitagraph's best known star allegedly at in 1920 "public announcement is made in London that thereafter the defendants company are to market a large number of pictures in which Alice Joyce is starring without mention that Joyce was under contract with Vitagraph until June 1922 but of such the defendants were well aware."

As further evidence of unfair competition, the complaint alleges a letter written by R. Kent, as sales manager for Famous layers under date of January 31, 1922, and addressed to the defendants branch manager, Mr. E. W. Wilson, at Denver, Colo., in which he advised, in part, to "kick out every Vitagraph account to the best of your ability, irrespective of the things you may have to make, just so you can cancel the contracts and get them out of the way. As long as they insist on a fight it gives us an advantage."

These instructions, the complaint alleges, were further carried to various salesmen in a letter signed by Wilson which reads in part:

"Please do not permit anyone to read this communication and work quietly on this subject, but get results. You will note that he has down the barriers regardless of the fact which you may have to make, but you will have convincing proof that you will be on your way to Vitagraph out."

The complaint states that these instructions have been extensively circulated among famous layers and that almost immediately after this the Vitagraph's American and Canadian gross income showed a drop of more than $22,000 a week, and that the loss continued for upwards of 46 weeks. It appears to be the basis of the plaintiffs' claim for over $500,000.

It is impossible to obtain a statement in famous layers with reference to the motion pictures. In all likelihood, however, while and Henderson will represent Famous in court.

William M. Seabury, attorney for the defendants, commenting on the suit brought on behalf of Vitagraph, said:

"Perhaps one of the most significant allegations in the whole of the lawsuit is the statement of interest and importance to the trade and general isn't that in every country and indeed, wherever possible, Famous Players makes a booking contract for the exhibition of all or almost all of the films with the franchise holders of the Eastern F. letters, the legality of several of the booking circuits, particularly those in New England, in Philadelphia, in the South and in the Atlantic and Gulf states, and demands an inquiry into the extent to which producers and distributors of motion pictures may invade the field of the exhibitors.

The complainant goes into the question of the value of the run theaters and the effect on bookings by exhibitors, claiming that the exhibition value in the run represents "at least 20 per cent" of American-Canadian gross receipts of a production.

The complaint was that since 1890, Vitagraph has built up a great business which uniformity since 1909 showed a large profit each year sometimes exceeding one million dollars.

A description of the business of Famous Players is also given, and the substantiation of the charge against Famous theater is about 1919 they conducted and conspired to monopolize a number of large first run theaters in the United States and Canada.

The complaint goes into the New Angle situation following the "combinations and agreements" with Alfred S. Black and William Gray. Famous excised almost all of the plaintiff's pictures and the pictures of a number of other producers" from those theaters.

It alleges that through one or more contracts with Jesse Lasky, the Stanley Co. of America and the Stanley Booking Corp., the Famous Players exchanged 34,000 and 15,000 shares of the common stock of Famous Players, for a large interest in these two companies, one of which is said to own or control more than 57 theaters and has an exclusive booking contract with 92 other theaters, making a total of 149 theaters, all in the Philadelphia territory, and including the control of the entire eight first-run theaters in Philadelphia, and that as a result of these contracts all, or almost all of the pictures made by Vitagraph and a large number of other producers are excluded from this territory.

It is further alleged in the complaint that as a result of similar contracts with Stephen A. Lynch and the Stephen A. Lynch Enterprises, Famous Players caused a corporation known as the Southern Enterprises, Inc., to be formed under the laws of the State of Delaware, which corporation is owned and controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and which owns, controls and operates a large number of desirable motion picture theaters, upwards of 140 in number, throughout the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma, and that by reason of a contract with one or more stockholders of the

Ten Nights in a Projection Room

Frankly, my friends—I am an exhibitor. I am one of those strange American men of business who make my living by projecting a series of celluloid imprints onto a white screen. I have a box office where I sometimes sell tickets— and I have a big lobby which leads into a rather nice theatre crowded with plush-covered seats. Every friend I have tells me that my little showshop is a perfect gem. I haven't yet been able to find out whether they are flattering me get free tickets for my shows. All I know is that so far they haven't succeeded in getting anything out of me.

"Try and get it," is what I say, but somehow, though at first they don't succeed they try—try—again—and again.

So much for that—

As I said, I'm an exhibitor— But that's not all the confession I have to make. Here's another . . .

I rent pictures from the various motion picture distributors. And I've spent the last ten nights in a projection room looking over all the films to be booked. I reached an important decision—along about the 10th night.

I decided to book Goldwyn Pictures, because they've got the best product on the market. I'm all set to play some daisies right now, and soon I'm due to get Marshall Neilan's "The Stranger's Banquet," Maurice Tourner's production of "The Christian" by Hall Caine, a great Pola Negri picture, several other bearcats, and the great and only "Ben Hur." So Brother exhibitors, that's my confession. Get wise like me and spend ten nights in a projection room seeing the Goldwyn stuff.

Vitagraph Suit for Millions On Grounds of Monopoly Awakens Unusual Interest

Interesting Figures Showing Decline of Vitagraph's Profits

Appearing in Complaint—Other Charges Include Unfair Methods Used by Famous in Distribution of "The Little Minister" and "The Son of Wallingford"

Vitagraph's suit for millions against Famous Players on the grounds of monopoly and unfair competition was the sole topic of discussion among film folk yesterday.

But much as film folk were willing to talk to each other they became strangely silent when asked for expressions for publication relative to this matter. Their attitude seemed to be: Let Vitagraph fight it out. Even some of the "independents" usually in the forefront of such an affair thought it best not to say anything at this time.

Efforts to secure a statement from Asso. First Nat'l Pictures relative to the charges made in the complaint regarding Famous booking the First National houses and thus blocking out other distributors were non-productive, the point being made that no statement could be made until there had been an opportunity to see the complaint.

Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. was "too busy" to issue a statement regarding the suit, although the complaint contains a letter signed by S. R. Kent of Famous telling of how Vitagraph was working with State Unions on a 3 per cent basis, the money to be paid to the various state treasurers.

Among attorneys versed in the practice of the Federal Courts, it was maintained that it would be a long time—perhaps several years—before a decision could be expected in the case.

Considerable comment was developed in some quarters over the point that the complaint virtually reiterated many of the charges which appear in the bill of complaint filed by the Federal Trade Commission against Famous, Mastbaum, Black, Lynch and Richards relative to "un-

By Sir Film Daily:

Well, you're getting this letter from a ticket owner. I bought that house in C.K. But at that, I ain't happy. After I got it, I found it had a flex seating capacity. It seats two hundred in dry weather and only 85 when it rains. The place is owned by some of those broad minded church groups, the roof leaks in twenty places, they won't fix it, and when it rains no one can sit in any seat of the first eight rows. There's twelve as told. Well, it sure makes a feel important when he owns a house. I guess I'll get in bad with the T. O. C. C. crowd for expanding it may have to come east (when to pick up) and sort of form some sort of protective league with Mars Loew. (Continued on Page 4)

Vitagraph Suit for Millions On Grounds of Monopoly Awakens Unusual Interest

Interesting Figures Showing Decline of Vitagraph's Profits Appear in Complaint—Other Charges Include Unfair Methods Used by Famous in Distribution of "The Little Minister" and "The Son of Wallingford"

Vitagraph's suit for millions against Famous Players on the grounds of monopoly and unfair competition was the sole topic of discussion among film folk yesterday.

But much as film folk were willing to talk to each other they became strangely silent when asked for expressions for publication relative to this matter. Their attitude seemed to be: Let Vitagraph fight it out. Even some of the "independents" usually in the forefront of such an affair thought it best not to say anything at this time.

Efforts to secure a statement from Asso. First Nat'l Pictures relative to the charges made in the complaint regarding Famous booking the First National house, and thus blocking out other distributors were unproductive, the point being made that no statement could be made until there had been an opportunity to see the complaint.

Considerable comment was developed in some quarters over the point that the complaint virtually reiterated many of the charges which appear in the bill of complaint filed by the Federal Trade Commission against Famous, Marxbaum, Bell, Lynch and Richards relative to "unfair competition."

In addition to the many charges made in the complaint, some interesting additional data is discovered in a more careful perusal, some of which follows:

"The Covered Wagon" is on the way!

After three months continuous work in the Utah desert, ninety miles from a railroad, the exteriors on "The Covered Wagon" have been completed.

Another month or so will be spent at the studio, making the interiors.

Last week the great scenes showing the attack of 1000 Indians on the two mile wagon train were completed. We had hoped to show a still from this, but heavy snows have cut the Camp off from mail service, and none have arrived. Telegrams advise us, however, that this episode is more thrilling than any similar scene ever staged.

Other thrill scenes include the buffalo hunt, with 500 bison, the fording of a mile-wide river, the prairie fire, and the rescue from quick-sands.

"The Covered Wagon" is not all spectacle, however. One of the most beautiful romances ever written runs through this epic-drama of America's making, enacted by a distinguished cast including Lois Wilson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Ernest Torrence, Charles Ogle, Alan Hale, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver and a supporting cast of 3000.

There never was a picture like "The Covered Wagon." There never will be another like it. It is the most gigantic undertaking ever attempted by any motion picture producer.

James Cruze is producing the picture, from the novel by Emerson Hough, adapted by Jack Cunningham.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

It is funny how a person changes their minds. Before I bought that old box of Slapstick off of Mr. Marcus Loew out of the exhibitor society, then I grabbed the other joint and now I am all for it. I sure makes a difference to you where you sit.

You remember I told you about that print in the box of Slapstick; well it got me in terrible bad with my clientele at Pneumonia. It turned out to be the fourth episode of a serial, and when the would-be stopper with no finish to the story, they wanted to tear my house down. Now I'm hooked and it looks like I got to book the rest of it or get into some kind of boycott here. This catering to the public ain't all orchids either.

I wish you would give me some advice as to who I should deal with. Sidney Cohen, Jimmy Walker or Will Hay? All three are bad to the bone. I'm on the fence. Naturally I listened to Hays a couple of years ago and voted his way, and I'm not kicking on this either for fear of getting in with any guy two chances, but as your business is to advise, why, I'll wait.

I wish you would take up the matter of that leaky roof with Famous Players-Lasky company for me and find if they are willing when I pay them four bucks for a feature, and rains and I can only use four of the rows, (losing eight of them) if they are willing to share this with me. I can always get it from my customers when the roof is leaking, to prove it. You see, I buy on the strength of having two hundred seats, then when my capacity shrinks through no fault of mine, I only get eighty-five—should I get a break?

Also let me know if that firm that used to give one feature for every feature you booked, is there any more. I will give you a chance to get every other one from them.

Will send you story on my opening at my new joint in my next.

"Singed Wings"—Rivoli

AMERICAN—Miss Daniels acted buoyantly alert and amusing and Mr. Nagel treats Miss Henley as the villain, and Mabel Truettle as the heroine. Perhaps "Singed Wings" means a little more than I thought it did. It is to tell of "material" that somebody will surely find amusing and entertaining.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—It has been turned into an amusing picture by Penrhyn Stanlaws.

TRIBUNE—"Singed Wings" is almost as much a comedy as for goonp, Grover. Perhaps "Singed Wings" means a little more than I thought it did. It is to tell of "material" that somebody will surely find amusing and entertaining.

EVE. WORLD—The story proper is tense drama, with comedy and will be appreciated by those who like to think a little with their thumbs. Conrad Nagel and Bebe Daniels are both well cast in the leading roles.

"East Is West"—Strand

HERALD—"East Is West" succeeds in being a good vehicle for Constance Talmadge, and is well directed by Ernst Lubitsch. Fortunately, "East is West" doesn't shirk emotional romance or melodrama. It is a comedy, and should appeal to the masses.

FORUM TELEGRAPH—Occidental comedy with a generous amount of melodrama by Warner Oland, as Charley Yong, is central.

WORLD—To us at least, Tin Pan Alley is no more than a thing of the past.

THE EXHIBITOR MUST SOLVE HIS OWN PROBLEM

No Producer, Distributor, or Booking Circuit can solve it for Him

IF THIS BE TRUE:

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way to protect his investment in theatre holdings and the good will he has built up with his patrons?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward permanently securing film rentals that will assure a profit to himself commensurate with the risk he takes?

What is the Exhibitor doing to protect himself against any movement in the industry that ultimately must be a burden to him?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward safeguarding his investment against any alignment that will tend to confine or restrict production or distribution?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward securing equitable film rentals during his good season, in order that slack periods do not absorb all his profits and more?

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way toward keeping the independent producer independent and in business?

THE ANSWER IS THAT THE EXHIBITOR IS DOING NOTHING.

These problems relate not only to the present and the immediate future—they affect vitally the Exhibitor's destiny.

The purpose of this advertisement is to advise the Exhibitor that a plan has been created to cover every phase of Exhibitor protection, which will sweep the country.

Every Exhibitor in America owes it to himself, irrespective of location, size of house, priority of run, or population, to write for details of this plan. Address your first letter to:

Theaters Owned by Famous

In addition to the connection of Famous Players with the Black, New England, Cleveland, Shirley Co., Southern Enterprises and the Sanfier Amusement Co. as noted in yesterday’s issue, beginning with paragraph 59, the complaint includes the statement that Famous proposes “in the near future to erect a thirty-story building at a cost of upwards of $3,000,000 which building is to contain a first-class, first-run motion picture theater on the first floor and a playhouse on the second floor at Broadway. The complaint goes on to say that Famous own “recently completed” theaters in Canada totaling upwards of $900,000 and its said defendant leases the Majestic Theater in the City of Detroit, Michigan, and erects and operates the Star Amusement Co. which holds a 99 year lease on the English Hotel Building at Indianapolis, Indiana, upon which Famous Players proposes in the near future to erect an office building containing a first-run theater. And Famous Players is erecting an office building and first-run theater in St. Louis, and recently by means of one or more contracts with the franchise holder of the Associated First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., in St. Louis, has undertaken the operation of theaters in the Missouri, Illinois, and Iowa states. A corporation known as the Famous Players, Enterprises, Inc., has increased the number of theaters controlled or whose having power is influenced by it in the state of Missouri, and has thereby excluded plaintiff’s pictures therefrom.” The complaint charges that Famous has been associated with the Motion Picture Studio of the West Coast, the Grandwa and the California Theaters in San Francisco, and to build and operate some other theaters throughout the State. And said defendant has also acquired, owns and controls first-run theaters in Denver, Col-

Oppose Selling Entire Program

That it’s organization go on record as opposing the method used by the Corporation, and any other Corporation, which attempts to give the entire product of a distributor, without giving the exhibitor the right to select any part of such product, and to control such product without the necessity of buying the entire output of such distributor.

Furthermore, it is resolved that this condition should be brought to the attention of all the exhibitors throughout the country, and that a recommendation be made that to all exhibitors cease buying product from any exchange or distributing company, which attempts to favor any particular method of sale.

The name of one company was used in this resolution. The influence of using this name, when the term “any other corporation” is part of the resolution, thus covering all companies so far operating, is obvious.

In connection, Vitagraph claims that Famous gave special instructions to its sales force to offer “The Little Minister” to exhibitors “at any price” which the exhibitor could afford to offer therefor, and that except in some instances, without any price or charge whatever, and that the number of prints to be made to distribute this said unfair attack upon the plaintiff, and in order to induce exhibitors to sell such pictures other than to exhibit Vitagraph’s “Little Minister,” Damage of $100,000 is claimed for this particular action.

In addition to the connection of Famous Players with the Black, New England, Cleveland, Shirley Co., Southern Enterprises and the Sanfier Amusement Co. as noted in yesterday’s issue, beginning with paragraph 59, the complaint includes the statement that Famous proposes “in the near future to erect a thirty-story building at a cost of upwards of $3,000,000 which building is to contain a first-class, first-run motion picture theater on the first floor and a playhouse on the second floor at Broadway. The complaint goes on to say that Famous own “recently completed” theaters in Canada totaling upwards of $900,000 and its said defendant leases the Majestic Theater in the City of Detroit, Michigan, and erects and operates the Star Amusement Co. which holds a 99 year lease on the English Hotel Building at Indianapolis, Indiana, upon which Famous Players proposes in the near future to erect an office building containing a first-run theater. And Famous Players is erecting an office building and first-run theater in St. Louis, and recently by means of one or more contracts with the franchise holder of the Associated First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., in St. Louis, has undertaken the operation of theaters in the Missouri, Illinois, and Iowa states. A corporation known as the Famous Players, Enterprises, Inc., has increased the number of theaters controlled or whose having power is influenced by it in the state of Missouri, and has thereby excluded plaintiff’s pictures therefrom.” The complaint charges that Famous has been associated with the Motion Picture Studio of the West Coast, the Grandwa and the California Theaters in San Francisco, and to build and operate some other theaters throughout the State. And said defendant has also acquired, owns and controls first-run theaters in Denver, Col-

Oppose Selling Entire Program

That it’s organization go on record as opposing the method used by the Corporation, and any other Corporation, which attempts to give the entire product of a distributor, without giving the exhibitor the right to select any part of such product, and to control such product without the necessity of buying the entire output of such distributor.

Furthermore, it is resolved that this condition should be brought to the attention of all the exhibitors throughout the country, and that a recommendation be made that to all exhibitors cease buying product from any exchange or distributing company, which attempts to favor any particular method of sale.

The name of one company was used in this resolution. The influence of using this name, when the term “any other corporation” is part of the resolution, thus covering all companies so far operating, is obvious.

In connection, Vitagraph claims that Famous gave special instructions to its sales force to offer “The Little Minister” to exhibitors “at any price” which the exhibitor could afford to offer therefor, and that except in some instances, without any price or charge whatever, and that the number of prints to be made to distribute this said unfair attack upon the plaintiff, and in order to induce exhibitors to sell such pictures other than to exhibit Vitagraph’s “Little Minister,” Damage of $100,000 is claimed for this particular action.

Out Jan. 1st—Bigger and Better Than Ever
"The Covered Wagon" is on the way!

FTER three months continuous work in the Utah desert, ninety miles from a railroad, the exteriors on "The Covered Wagon" have been completed.

Another month or so will be spent at the studio, making the interiors.

Last week the great scenes showing the attack of 1000 Indians on the two mile wagon train were completed. We had hoped to show a still from this, but heavy snows have cut the Camp off from mail service, and none have arrived. Telegrams advise us, however, that this episode is more thrilling than any similar scene ever staged.

Other thrill scenes include the buffalo hunt, with 500 bison, the fording of a mile-wide river, the prairie fire, and the rescue from quick-sands.

"The Covered Wagon" is not all spectacle, however. One of the most beautiful romances ever written runs through this epic-drama of America's making, enacted by a distinguished cast including Lois Wilson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Ernest Torrence, Charles Ogle, Alan Hale, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver and a supporting cast of 3000.

There never was a picture like "The Covered Wagon." There never will be another like it. It is the most gigantic undertaking ever attempted by any motion picture producer.

James Cruze is producing the picture, from the novel by Emerson Hough, adapted by Jack Cunningham.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

It is true that a person changes their minds. Before I bought that other house, I was in favor of firing Marcus Lowcex out of the exhibitors company. He was a stubborn man and now I'm all for him. It sure makes a difference to you where you live.

You remember I told you that print in the express office: well, it got me in terrible bad with my clientele at Peaceland. They all turned out to be the fourth episode in a serial and when the damn thing stopped with no finish to the story, they wanted to tear my house down. Now I'm hooked and it looks like I got to book the rest of it or get into some kind of boycot here. This catering to the public aint all orchids either.

I wish you would give me some advice as to which I should take with, the Sidney Cohen, Jimmy Walker, or my Hays. All three being strangers, why I'm on the fence. Actually I listened to Hays a couple of years ago on a talk show of his. But if I would not go on this either for I'm willing to give any guy two chances, but as your business, I would go for you.

I wish you would take up the matter of that leaky roof with Famous Players-Lasky company for you. I always find if they are willing when I pay them for a buck or a feature, and it rains and I can only use four of the rows. If they would charge me I would be willing to share this with me. I can always get lots of affidavits from my clients to prove it, etching, to prove it. You see, I buy on the strength of having two hundred seats, then when my capacity shrinks, through no fault of mine, I only have eighty-five—should I get a break?

I also mean let you know that that firm that used to give you one feature for every feature you booked, is there any more. I got a scheme how to get every other one from them.

Well, end of story on my opening at my new joint in my next.

Yours,
Clem Deneker

THE EXHIBITOR MUST SOLVE HIS OWN PROBLEM

No Producer, Distributor, or Booking Circuit can solve it for Him

IF THIS BE TRUE:

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way to protect his investment in theatre holdings and the good will he has built up with his patrons?
What is the Exhibitor doing toward permanently securing film rentals that will assure a profit to himself commensurate with the risk he takes?
What is the Exhibitor doing to protect himself against any movement in the industry that ultimately must be a burden to him?
What is the Exhibitor doing toward safeguarding his investment against any alignment that will tend to confine or restrict production or distribution?
What is the Exhibitor doing toward securing equitable film rentals during his good season, in order that slack periods do not absorb all his profits and more?
What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way toward keeping the independent producer independent and in business?

THE ANSWER IS THAT THE EXHIBITOR IS DOING NOTHING.

These problems relate not only to the present and the immediate future—they affect vitally the Exhibitor’s destiny.
The purpose of this advertisement is to advise the Exhibitor that a plan has been created to cover every phase of Exhibitor protection, which will sweep the country.
Every Exhibitor in America owes it to himself, irrespective of location, size of house, priority of run, or population, to write for details of this plan.

Theaters Owned by Famous
In addition to the connection of Famous Players with the Black, New England Circuit, the Stanly Co., Southern Entry National, and the Sugar Amusement Co., as noted in yesterday's issue, beginning with paragraph 59, the complaint includes the statement that Famous proposes to the near future to erect a thirty-story building at a cost of upwards of $3,000,000 which building is to contain a first-class, first-run motion picture theater on the Putnam Bldg., site on Broadway. The complaint goes on to state that Famous owns "recently completed" theaters in Canada costing upwards of $3,000,000. The said defendants today erected the Majestic Theater in the City of Detroit, Michigan, and owns all of the stock of the Star Amusement Co., which holds a 90-year lease on the English Hotel Building at Indianapolis, Indiana, upon which Famous Players proposes in the near future to erect an office building containing a first-run theater. And Famous Players is erecting an office building and first-run theater in St. Louis, along with contracts with means of one or more contracts with the franchise holder of the Associated Exhibitors' National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. in St. Louis, i. e., a company known as Skouras Bros.
Enterprises, Inc., has increased the number of theaters controlled whose building policy is influenced by it in the State of Missouri, and has thereby excluded theater owners therefrom." The complaint charges that Famous Players of California, has been incorporated with capitalized of $8,000,000, and has been controlled and conducted the "Imperial, the Portola, the Granada and the California Theaters in San Francisco, and to build and operate theaters throughout the State. And said defendant has also acquired, owns and controls first-run theaters in Denver, Colcades; Quincy, Massachusetts, and Dover, New Hampshire, and owns and enjoys a large interest in Loew's Ohio Theaters, a corporation owning and operating six theaters in the City of Cleveland, and a large number of theaters in other cities throughout the State of Ohio and elsewhere.

Opposition Houses
The complaint also declares: "that only about one-half of the theaters in the United States are open continuously for six days in each week, that more than 7,000 theaters or more than one-half of the said 14,000 have no "opposition," which means that approximately half of the said theaters in the United States are operated and conducted without direct competition from any other motion picture theater in close proximity thereto, and that the strictly first-class, first-run theaters in the United States do not exceed 14,000 number, and are so situated as to be within 10 miles of the said distinctions, that the said "key" cities in that many instances only one or two such first-run, first-class theaters are operated and conducted in each such "key" city, and that by producing and controlling from one to three pictures a year for exhibition in first-class, first-run theaters Famous Players is able to and does "monopolize and control" the entire output of film and the average of the time of far more than one-half of the said first-class, first-run theaters, thereby excluding the whole or almost the whole of the producers and distributors therefrom."

Vitagraph Employees Interfered
With
This portion of the complaint reads:
"That in order with whose contacts with plaintiff the said defendants so interfered are the following: Alice Joyce, Victor Smith, Frank Ranes, of the Still Picture Department; Frank Heath, of the Producion Department; Edward Unitt, of the Production Department; Leon Sheldrer, of the Camera Department; Harry Waldron, connected with the plaintiff's garage; Al Olsen, Manager of the Cutting Department, Flashby, of the Electrical Department."

After detailing the situations as reward to Alice Joyce, as noted in yesterday's issue, the complaint charges that Famous withheld its distribution of "Get-Rich-Quick Wahl-endorf," made by Comunidad, on "until it would do the greatest injury to the plaintiff" which was releasing another Gertie O'Neal Picture," "Wahl-endorf."" And Vitagraph maintains that it sustained a loss of at least $100,000 through this,
"controlled and operated for some time between Famous Players and Vitagraph with reference to the production of "The Little Minister" and its way into the complaint. In this connection it charges that Famous caused a copy of the "Restoration" by the Vitagraph Laboratories in 1922 (which contained criticism of the rival productions of "The Little Minister") to be "scattered broadcast throughout the nation." And defendant knows that the statements contained therein were false and highly advertising value at minimum cost.

Plan Suggested
By Baron Dewitz to Improve Artistic Tone of Pictures

The following has been received from The Baron Dewitz, 79 Haven Avenue, New York:

November 23, 1922.
Editor, The Film Daily.

If the producers and distributors of this country are really in earnest about cooperating on progressive lines to accomplish better results, they can suggest a plan that may be considered a trifle more important than preserving John Barrymore in a film version of "Sherlock Holmes."

Thanks to Mr. Griffith and his numerous imitators the motion picture has been advanced to the status of the highly refined Broadway show. That is to say, about a dozen motion pictures are produced annually that may be said to be in this class, but in no sense are these productions to be considered as original works of art.

The screen still remains largely imitative of stage craft, and persists in matching its effects from arts and crafts that have nothing to do with the making of pictures better the better grades of pictures still remain on a commercial basis and exhibited on the box office angle. The producers and distributors are wedded to this plan because as business men, they cannot conceive of any better way of making pictures.

39 From Famous
For Next Six Months Makes Total of 80 for Year—Less Production But More Costly

Below will be found the complete list of the 39 productions Famous Players will release for the six months period beginning February 1, 1923. This, with the 41 released beginning last August, totals 80 pictures from Famous that will be available to the public next August. While this is the smallest number of releases Famous has made in any one period, it is, we understand that the amount expended for production is larger than heretofore.

The complete list of the releases beginning Feb. 1, 1923 follows:

"The Great Rib," Cecil B. de Mille production.
"A Romance of the Moon," an Allan Dwan production. From the story by Edith Wharton.

By Baron Dewitz to Improve Artistic Tone of Pictures

The following has been received from The Baron Dewitz, 79 Haven Avenue, New York:

Editor, The Film Daily:
If the producers and distributors of this industry are really earnest about cooperating on progressive lines, I can suggest a plan that may be considered a trifle more important than preserving the lawyers who portray in a film version of "Hamlet."

Thanks to Mr. Griffith and his numerous imitators the motion picture has been advanced to the status of the well made Broadway show. That is to say, about a dozen motion pictures are produced annually that may be said to be in this class, but in nonsense are these productions to be considered as original works of art.

The screen still remains largely imitative of stage craft, and persists in matching its effects from arts and crafts that have nothing to do with cinematic values. The production of even the better grade of pictures still remains on a commercial basis and crucified in the box office angle. The producers and distributors are wedded to this plan because as business men they cannot conceive of any other.

This undoubtedly means that Pettitjohn will have charge of the various matters pertaining particularly with regard to the Sunday closing and censorship problems which will come under the jurisdiction of the organization. Hays On Coast

Thomas G. Patten to be Western Representative—Some of His Work

Thomas G. Patten, who was Postmaster of New York from 1917 to 1921, and who was in Congress as a representative of this city for six years previous to that, has joined the sales division of the Western office which started for Hollywood on Thursday, for his new chief. He will remain there indefinitely, it is understood, as Hays’ Western representative.

At the Hays office, where this announcement was made, the exact duties of former Postmaster Patten were not set forth; but part of his work out there, it is understood, will be to maintain the friendly spirit of cooperation between Hays and all the actual makers of pictures—the writers, directors and actors and all employees which Hays established during his visit last summer, when he made it clear that he was not a (Continued on Page 2) dictator or a Czar, but actually a "partner with everybody" in the industry. Hays has for years been a member of the Players Club and has long had a deep interest in the drama. He has an unusually wide acquaintance among producers and actors, and has many friends in the Hollywood colony. When asked about the possible activities of his western representative, Will Hays said: "The industry is going to be sure that it discharges its full duty in helping to maintain an industrial community which shall stand as a model not only as to the activities of the industry itself, but also in its relations to the splendid civic community of which it is a part."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

A Real Campaign

Portsmouth, Va.—Frank L. Norton of the Tivoli and Roy LaVoice, of the Goldwyn Washington office, put over a real campaign on “Remembrance.” Personal letters and post cards were sent to the theater’s mailing list. Plenty of stickers were used on autos. By a tie-up with the Victory dealers, records of old time songs were played for an hour every noon and evening. An extra loud sound box was used on the show in front of the building. Hit men were employed to block the windows. North says “the results from this campaign were all that we could ask.”

Bargain Sale Tie-Up

Waterloo, Iowa—The real stunts arranged by J. M. Schultz, manager of the Plaza, for the run of “Sherlock Holmes” was compared with a local newspaper and its advertisers. In several stores bargain counters were arranged and passed for “Sherlock Holmes” and were placed in some of the articles on sale. The publicity was carried in the merchants’ ads and in special stories in the paper under the caption “Do you think you would make a good detective?” The contest was carried for a week in advance of the show, and every salesman was asked to talk. “The results were assured” says Schultz.

A cut-out shadow box, illuminated from the rear, was also shown in the lobby for a week in advance. This attracted the attention of all the regular patrons.

On the Front Page

Evansville, Ind.—Getting on the front page of a big city newspaper for two weeks is a feat of motion picture publicity that any exhibitor might covet. Manager Brentlinger of the Strand got such publicity for “Remembrance,” in the Evansville Press, through a “Happiest Remembrance” contest, “Tell Your Happiest Remembrance” was the 3-column head over the announcement.

A single-page advertising tie-up was used twice in the Press. Prizes of $22 tickets to “Remembrance” were offered in connection with this advertising tie-up. The page was divided into eleven equal squares, considered across the page. Each ad was limited to the space in one box. The entire space of each box, at the left hand side of the page, was occupied by one of the letters to be found in the title, “Remembrance.” Each letter began the first word in the commercial advertisement. The prizes were offered for the best substitute for the first sentence in each ad, retaining the same initial letter in “Remembrance” in heavy type ran clear down the left side of the page.

Furniture Van Stunt

A large furniture van loaded with furniture and with banners along the side stating that this furniture was on offer because of non-payment of insurance, was conned into waiting no one to buy furniture on that plan until he had seen “Brothers Under the Skin.” Then being shown at the Capitol, New York City, was a most effective exploitation stunt for the showing of the photoplay. The van was driven about the streets for several days in advance of the showing and during the screening. Heralds and other accessories were distributed from the van.

Following immediately upon the publicity concerning the filing in a small civil suit the articles of incorporation for an “Association of Brothers Under the Skin,” to maintain the right of the company, the van proved an unusually good tie-up.

Several laundry carts were requisitioned and boys sent out pushing them through the streets in the White Light district. On each side of these carts was a banner: “Use Artistic Laundry Service and avoid the matronly mix-ups that occur in ‘Brothers Under the Skin.’”

Sketches of Famous Men

Cumberland, Md.—The Strand theater has proved anew that if you give the newspaper a good story you can have plenty of space.

Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount exploiter, drafted seven stories under the general title of “The Man Who Saw Tomorrow,” in which he sketches of the careers of some of the greatest visionaries of the age, including the sketches of the careers of some of the greatest visionaries of the age, including the

Hindu Seer Told Fortune

New London, Conn.—Walter Murph of the Croton told “The Young Rajah” with a ballyhoo representing an Indian fortune teller.

With the cooperation of Russell B. Moon, Paramount exploiter, a cigar store window was secured and the dressed-up ballyhoo sat in it, playing cards. Early one morning the crowd collected he began to show them some stunts of the picture.

It was planned to get a crowd, and then he stepped out a moment and distributed a herald fold so that one side read: “Your prophecy foretold. Inside was a false message leading into advertising for the picture.”

Mr. Meighan’s lobby was decorated in red and green with the mummery head of Valentino cut-out of the 42nd displayed on the marquee. Two large cut-outs taken from the stock—Paramount six-sheet flanked the lobby.

other plan. And it is this very commercial plan of outputting movie merchandise in quantity which is responsible for the fact that only 5% of our producers are success- ful financially the very box office stand they have taken.

Some ten years ago I set to work on a plan of production whereby it should be possible to produce motion pictures as works of original artistic art—not imitations or re- productions such as our present form of motion picture. If the pro- ducers and distributors will get together on this I would be willing to give them the benefits of my experience in this new field.

It so happens that the industry, which has developed on purely mechanical and com- mercial lines of effort, has not as yet developed cinematic artists of adequate caliber for the new kind of work. If producer and distributor will stand together and go through with one picture on the new lines it will mean that we shall have on the screen a work of cinematic art original in the same sense that other works of bona-fide art are original. It means that the audience will see on the screen no scene which the stage could do as well as the screen, and that nothing would go on the screen which is not truly inter- pretative in a purely cinematic sense. Then, and not until then, shall the cinema have achieved the position of an art original in itself, and it is this very work done to satisfy the persistent public demand for something better than million dollar "meller" and star thrillers, and fancy labeled movie merchandise of the well-known commercial brand.

Inspiration along truly artistic lines of originality is what is wanted, not precipitation. Progress along lines of creatively artistic work, not progression in a routine circle.

FIRST BIG NEW YORK PRESENTATION AT THE RIALTO THEATRE on DECEMBER 10TH
Is It Another "Miracle Man"?

Thousands of exhibitors are asking this question.

For "Heart's Haven" isn't like any other picture released in many years.

It is a masterly handling of the subject uppermost in the public mind today—does my will control my body?

Do you remember "The Miracle Man"? Nobody thought it was "what the public wanted" until the public itself stepped in and settled the doubt forever. Many critics have called "Heart's Haven" another "Miracle Man." Maybe it is; the first few big exhibitors who show it and exploit it will quickly find out.

The thinker will tell you that it is a masterpiece of psychology. The seeker after entertainment only will rate it a bully good picture.

So you've pleased both orchestra and gallery, and you won't have to defend your judgment when they file out after the show. If you are honestly trying to give the public "What it wants," this is what it really wants, because it is the one big topic of conversation on the tongue of everyone old enough to think!

A week's prerelease showing in Los Angeles turned into a three weeks' sell-out. Another prerelease showing in Boston not only registered capacity business, but received the critical endorsement of every big newspaper in the city. Three hundred theatres booked it before release date, for a total of one thousand days!

When you deal for "Heart's Haven" you are playing with a big-time picture. It is the clearest-cut answer to the query, "What does the public want?" that has been given by any picture released in months. If you doubt it, listen-in on the next conversation you can, in club, in church, on the street corner, or right in your own theatre! Folks no longer talk about "How do you feel?" It's all about "How do you think?"

A Mighty Fine Picture With a Tremendous Cast

"QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER"
S-L Prod.—Metro

DIRECTOR .................. Clarence G. Badger
AUTHOR .................. Charles Felton Pidgin
SCENARIO BY .............. Bernard McConville
CAMERAMAN ................. Rudolph Bergquist

AS A WHOLE.........It climbs right into the band wagon. It's there with both feet. Sure fire in its appeal

STORY.............Charming village romance full of smiles and tears

DIRECTION.........Excellent. Mingles comedy with drama and pathos and has picked with rare decision necessary village types

PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Generally very fine
LIGHTINGS ................. Very good

PLAYERS...........What a cast! Practically all-star. You have something to talk about

EXTERIORS.........Very good. Whirlpool rapids stuff fine

INTERIORS.........Faithfully kept in harmony with New England village life

DETAIL.........Excellent except for weakness during biggest thrill of whirlpool rapids sequence. Titles excellent

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 7,800 feet

If "Quincy Adams Sawyer" doesn't start a new era of smashing box office records there is something wrong, because boys, this has got it all. For the first few reels they are going to chuckle and laugh. And they are going to feel good when the story starts to roll and the various characters are planted and then Director Badger slowly begins to twist the smiles into tears and the tears into thrills. And after that, much too soon, the clinch comes and you know it's all over.

If Clarence Badger did not have a long line of successes to his credit this one would put him up among the real directors. Perhaps Arthur H. Sawyer, who supervised, had something to do with it, but there is glory enough for a lot of people in the result. They hand out a cast that begins with Blanche Sweet, who as the girl who becomes blind gives a most realistic and sympathetic performance. Your crowd is just going to choke up at the trifling little incident which shows her returning to the village, blind, and unable to see the kiddies who are waving their hands to her. Then there is Lon Chaney, who adds another to his long list of splendid characterizations as the village attorney, with his special haircut for the party and his elaborate use of facial expression. He practically steals this picture. Then there is John Bowers as the hero, and Barbara La Marr, Elmo Lincoln, Louise Fazenda and Gail Henry—and what a riot they are—Victor Potel and so many more that you wonder where they all come from. Everyone is fitted to their part.

The big wallop of the picture comes in the sequence when the blind girl is set adrift on a rickety old ferry-boat through the hatred of the villain and his scheming accomplice and the hero effects her rescue. This sequence is splendidly handled. There is a real thrill when Bowers, astride of his horse, plunges about two hundred feet from a cliff into the whirling rapids. There is just one weakness in the whole production and it occurs in this sequence. The manner in which the hero and heroine escape from the ferry which is smashed to smithereens could have been done much better, otherwise it is excellent.

Put This Over—It's a Cinch—or Quit

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you don't get "Quincy Adams Sawyer" don't blame anyone but John W. Yourself, and if after you get it you don't go to the bank every morning with your chest puffed out and your pockets heavy it's again your fault. If you don't revive or stimulate the whole picture business of your community with this one, suppose you quit and give somebody else a chance because if there ever was a blond-haired, blue-eyed baby doll of a box office picture, it is this one.

You have so much to work with it is a crime to have to tell you about it. You have the names of a half dozen real stars and about ten more who are almost as important. You have a great production with a tremendous thrill. You have a story that keeps them chuckling, smiling, choking-up and all the rest, and so if you don't know how to do business with this sort of a production and get yourself a lot of money you can do one of two things: watch a brother exhibitor who knows how to do it or take a special course in some institution where they supply brains.
Neilan’s “Minnie” a Sure-Fire Comedy Entertainment

“MINNIE”

DIRECTORS..........Marshall Neilan and Frank Urson
AUTHOR..................Marshall Neilan
SCENARIO BY........Marshall Neilan CAMERAMEN.............David Kesson and Karl Struss
AS A WHOLE........Original and sparkling comedy feature that offers sure-fire entertainment

STORY..........A first rate idea and contains fine comedy possibilities; it has real laughs and plenty of them

DIRECTION.......Very good; gets genuine humor out of story and plays to the audience from all angles

PHOTOGRAPHY...........Excellent
LIGHTINGS..............All right

PLAYERS.......One of the best acting parts Leatrice Joy has ever done; Matt Moore in just his type of role; Raymond Griffith excellent comedian; fine cast all the way

EXTERIORS..........Many very beautiful shots
INTERIORS..........Look like the real thing
DETAIL.................Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY....Homely girl's search for happiness which leads into highly amusing complications

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......6,696 feet

They are going to get a lot of enjoyment out of this picture, that's sure, because Marshall Neilan's latest, "Minnie," is a sure-fire comedy entertainment that doesn't miss the mark. It hits every time and if they cannot be amused by it, there is something radically wrong. The picture is a genuine comedy number with plenty of real laughs; it doesn't merely try for laughs.

Neilan's basic theme is fairly familiar—the homely girl who is ridiculed and hasn't a beau like the other girls—but its familiarity ends there. Everything else is original and the idea is certainly cleverly carried out. Neilan has taken the joke about the girl who walked home from an automobile ride and worked it into the story in great style. The first fellow that takes her for a ride runs out of gas and when he asks her for a kiss, Minnie gets out and walks home. The next time she goes for a ride, with another fellow, and they run out of gas at the same place, Minnie knows just what's coming. On the way home she is stopped and invited to ride, but informs the fellow she's just coming from one. But the best laugh comes when Minnie, now in the company of one who loves her, goes riding to the fateful spot and they again run out of gas. Minnie is prepared for the emergency and has brought along a pair of old shoes to walk home in. The telling of this doesn't do the comedy half justice. You have to see it.

Throughout Neilan has taken advantage of every comedy possibility so that the feature offers a first class entertainment with humor that is sure-fire. Besides the troubles of Minnie and her struggle for happiness there is plenty of by-plot. In this connection the director has used a little too much footage in dovetailing the sequences into a climax. Of course it probably gives things a more satisfactory conclusion to finish up each sequence separately and make the hero and heroine beautiful through plastic surgery. However, as far as the comedy goes, it might finish up with Minnie and her lover strolling down the lane hand in hand.

Undoubtedly the role of Minnie gives Leatrice Joy the best opportunity she has ever had for character acting and she does it splendidly. Matt Moore is an ideal hero in a role that just suits him. Raymond Griffith as the fast working gum salesman is fine. The cast on the whole is very good.

If They Want To Be Amused Don't Miss It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The story of "Minnie" is a bit too complicated to give an idea of it in a short synopsis, but it is safe enough for you to book it without knowing the story because if you are out for a sure-fire comedy number, you'll want to get it. If your audience appreciates comedy pictures, they'll surely enjoy “Minnie” and you can make promises for its originality and be sure to let them know it has plenty of laughs.

Do your best to assure them of its humor and say that Leatrice Joy appears in a role very much different from anything she has done yet. Make promises for her performance and that of Matt Moore, who has the kind of a role that he does best. Use plenty of stills in the lobby and whatever exploitation you can in the way of stunts to get them interested. A girl dressed up like Minnie would attract a good deal of attention and you might invite them in to see how Minnie became the envy of all the beautiful girls. Exploitation should be easy and the results worth your effort. Go after all the “Minnies” in your town.

"THE TOLL OF THE SEA"

DIRECTOR .................. Chester M. Franklin
AUTHOR .................... Frances Marion
SCENARIO BY ................ Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN ................... J. A. Ball

AS A WHOLE ............ Certainly an advancement as far as artistry is concerned; a really delightful offering

STORY ...... Rather a pathetic little romance of the "Madame Butterfly" variety; a thoroughly sympathetic tale

DIRECTION .... A... always directed toward the artistic; shows less effort in connection with story's dramatic value

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Excellent
LIGHTINGS .................... Fine
PLAYERS .............. Anna May Wong delightful and charming as the little Chinese girl; Kenneth Harlan her American hero; Etta Lee and Ming Young good as the gossips EXTERIORS ................ Very pretty
INTERIORS ................ Attractive
DETAIL ............................ Suffices

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Chinese girl, deserted by her American, gives their child to his wife and throws herself into the sea

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,600 feet

Technicolor's production, "The Toll of the Sea," is undoubtedly the best example of colored motion photography that has yet been secured. While the coloring in this is still somewhat removed from perfection, it is the closest approach to the natural that any of the experimenters have obtained. The tones are clear, unconfused and the colors do not jump. This is one particular satisfaction, not to have the various hues running into each other where they are not intended to combine. The outlines in this are always very definite and another excellent feature of this process is naturalness. They have shown good judgment in the selection of colors and there are no harsh mixtures. "The Toll of the Sea" looks like a decided advancement in this field of endeavor.

The producers were also keen to recognize in this sympathetic Chinese story by Frances Marion, a decidedly appropriate vehicle for their experiment. The atmosphere lends itself especially well to coloring and provides a fine variety of combinations. The scenes in the garden, those by the sea and those in the Chinese girl's home are all mighty attractive. Pictorially the feature has almost unlimited appeal.

The story, in plain black and white, might not have been so attractive and even in its delightful color presentation, it may not appeal to some. The racial question arises in the marriage of the American to the Chinese girl and later in the adopting of the girl's baby, of which the American is the father, by his American wife. There may be those who will take exception to this. But the theme is really a very sympathetic one made doubly interesting and sincere by the splendid work of Anna May Wong. She is a clever little actress and displays fine emotional ability.

Chester Franklin has directed with the artistic side more particularly in view. He has paid less attention to the building of dramatic sequences and effects although his climax is very good. There is no sugar-coated happy ending and the story closes as stark tragedy with the pretty little Chinese girl "paying her debt to the sea" by throwing herself into it. Kenneth Harlan is Lotus Flower's faithless American husband, Beatrice Bentley his wife, and little Baby Moran, the child of Lotus Flower and Harlan whom Beatrice adopts in compliance with Lotus Flower's last wish.

Should Be Well Received Where They Like Artistic Photoplays

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It may be that "The Toll of the Sea" will not prove a god box office attraction because there are probably not enough theaters catering to a class of people that would appreciate it. It is essentially an artistic accomplishment and will best appeal to a high class clientele. But it is worth your while to try and interest them in it and you certainly have something to talk about in Technicolor's achievement in colored motion photography.

You can tell your folk that "The Toll of the Sea" is a very big improvement over any colored feature ever shown. You can let them know about the story if you think well of it and of course, you must make it clear that it is a full length feature. Anna May Wong deserves mention for her performance as Lotus Flower and you can use Kenneth Harlan's name also. A trailer should be very good advertising.

ENTERTAINMENT ... Excellent

PRODUCTION ... Good

DIRECTION ... Not directed in the usual sense of the word, but rather shows the tremendous nerve of Martin Johnson, who persuaded the natives to pose.

STORY......A thrilling narrative of the adventures of a white man and his wife among head-hunting cannibals.

CAST .........Natives in their daily pursuits, also Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson; all are excellent.

PHOTOGRAPHY ... Excellent

TIME ... One hour

Seventy-five per cent of the complaint against the motion pictures is that one is too much like the other. Well, here is something different. It tells no story of a neglected wife, gives no pictures of the horrors of crime, and the players cannot be criticized, for the simple reason that they are not acting—they are just living their daily lives; and for real interest, for thrills and for the absolutely unusual, this feature can be recommended.

There is no plot to "Head Hunters of the South Seas." Martin Johnson, the young American explorer, who had his first taste of adventure when he accompanied Jack London on the cruise of The Snark, went to Malekula several years ago, and was eaten by the cannibals of that island. Only the timely arrival of a British patrol boat saved him. One would have expected that he would not care to repeat the experiment, but in spite of all dangers Johnson went back to Malekula to get the motion pictures which are now released as "Head Hunters of the South Seas." The picture shows him arriving at the island, his reception by the fearsome savages, how he accompanies them inland to one of their villages, and the strange rites and ceremonies that he was permitted to witness, always in danger, and yet never afraid. The picture has several outstanding incidents. The native dances are weird, but nothing compares to the shots that show the natives proudly displaying their trophies of human heads. The monky men fascinate because they show how closely the lower forms of civilization resemble the apes. Also there are scenes taken among the pigmies, beautiful scenery, shark fishing and excellent views of a volcano in eruption. All in all it is one of the greatest screen novelties, and made more so by the fact that in the past year or two there has been a growing interest in the United States regarding the South Seas.

As this is the type of picture that is sure to gain you new patrons, it is well worth exploiting. Martin Johnson is well known among the better class of people and has a new book that has recently been published. Use the book tie-up. There is a great woman's angle to the feature, for Mrs. Johnson accompanied her husband. Run her photograph and use a good interview with her in your papers, it undoubtedly being possible to get this interview from the distributing office. Be sure and call the attention of the schools and clubs to this feature. They will endorse it, and it will help future business. For a ballyhoo dress a man in black tights and beads, and have him in front of the theatre. For prelude and lobby use tropical palms, and by cutting out posters you will probably make a most startling display. But the best bet is that the picture is a great novelty and one that will thrill as well as educate. Also watch your music—you need good music to put the picture over.

A feature that will bring patronage to your theatre and which will cause a great deal of favorable comment once you get them in.

Screen Adaptation Based On Famous Persian Poem—Just a Movie

DIRECTOR .......................James Young
AUTHOR .........................Not credited SCENARIO BY ............Adaptation of stage play
by Richard Walton Tully
CAMERAMAN ......................Not credited

AS A WHOLE...........Just a movie with a Persian background. Will probably disappoint those who expect big artistic production of The Rubaiyat

STORY......Th familiar quatrains of the great poet are seldom used and there is a long slowly told double love story; first of Omar as a youth and then later of his daughter

DIRECTION......Some artistic touches but many sequences allowed to drag needlessly

PHOTOGRAPHY .................Generally fine
LIGHTINGS.......Average good. A few harsh shots

STAR.......As Omar the father and wine bibbler, excellent. Hasn't a great deal to do

PLAYERS.......Well cast generally—very pretty in the earlier sequences

EXTERIORS .................Several beautiful shots
INTERIORS .................Fit the character of the story

DETAIL .................Generally well handled

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Nothing objectionable. Will do for any audience

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 8,000 feet

Guy Bates Post was regarded as a box-office clean-up several years ago when he presented "Omar the Tentmaker" on the stage. In all probability there will be a great desire on the part of many to see this on the screen, but excepting that the picturization follows the stage story, generally speaking, there is little to it to appease the desire and appetite of those who attend pictures and who, knowing their Rubaiyat, will probably expect something materially different than what they will see.

"Omar the Tentmaker" despite its excessive gorgeousness in costumes and trappings is just a movie with a Persian background. Disappointing is the failure of the producer to present a picturization of some of the more famous quatrains or excerpts which have made this volume the chief emissary of sentiment between young lovers. There is of course the famous quotation ending "wilderness were paradise now." This is used early in the production during the love affair of Omar and the daughter of the Imam, but other than this it is difficult to find even a trace of these famous lines, even in titles.

The picture rolls along showing Omar as a student in love with the daughter of his teacher, and her forced marriage to the Shah after she has been secretly married to Omar, and her imprisonment and the birth of her daughter who is turned over to Omar for protection. How the mother becomes a slave and the daughter, growing up, falls in love with a Christian slave and how Omar and his wife see their daughter finding happiness completes the story which is rounded out with sketches of villainy on the part of Omar's former friend who becomes governor of his city. It is more or less disappointing and unsatisfactory and to add to this the sequences are carried so long that at times they become tiresome.

Stick to Title and Go Easy On Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Fans and picturegoers will undoubtedly be interested in knowing that "Omar the Tentmaker" based on Fitzgerald's immortal character in "The Rubaiyat" has been picturized. There is a natural and easily understood desire on the part of those as well as others of far more serious inclination to see what has been done with this. The chances are that the average fan will be satisfied but if the so-called "highbrows" of your neighborhood come out of curiosity and interest they are probably going to be disappointed and when they leave you will probably hear them say something like, "Oh, it's just another movie."

Production values are excellent and there are several names in the cast which you may be able to capitalize but in all probability your best bet is to stick right to the title and use the exploitation matter offered without making enthusiastic promises. Then you will probably have no comeback.

James Young the director is responsible for many well known pictures and probably is known by a lot of people so his name can be used to advantage. The star has only made one other picture, "The Masquerader" and if your crowd liked this you can use his name as well.

AS A WHOLE...... Fantastic picture but is isn’t likely the majority will take it seriously enough to make it good entertainment.

STORY...... Looks like an attempt to get around a spicy theme by building it up with fairy tale setting.

DIRECTION...... Always very artistic; picture is good to look at but drags badly and is often very tedious.

PHOTOGRAPHY ....................... Excellent.

LIGHTINGS ......................... Very good.

PLAYERS...... Bebe Daniels and Conrad Nagle work hard enough in fairly unattractive roles; a good cast including Adolph Menjou, Ernest Torrence and Mabel Trunelle.

EXTERIORS ......................... Suitable.

INTERIORS ......................... Pretty to look at.

DETAIL ......................... Overdone.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Dancer sends lover away because of dream in which she dies when she has found her true love.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 7,788 feet.

“Singed Wings” is quite a novelty and offers a very fantastic atmosphere but its appeal will not reach beyond those who are satisfied with these things alone. It is not a good entertainment in a box office sense and it isn’t likely that it will interest a very big majority of picture patrons regardless of class. The picture quite obviously did not find favor with the audience in the Broadway house where it was reviewed and its most dramatic moments were greeted with audible chuckles.

It seems more or less apparent that the original story contained more spice than would ever get by the censors so it has been neatly camouflaged in the guise of a fantasy with a fairy tale prologue to give it an atmosphere of the unreal but here and there the real objective appears and you are given a hint at it although the harm is immediately removed by a counter-acting title or another scene. This isn’t to say that there is anything objectionable in the picture. It just looks as though they would liked to have given you the real thing but knew it couldn’t be done, hence the fairy tale version of a cabaret dancer and a man who tried to buy the rose she wore in her hair and which she reserved for the man she would truly love.

A most exaggerated character drawing is that of the clown, also in love with the dancer. His performance is at times boring and particularly so in the last reels when Stanlaws consumes so very much footage to reach the climax. The picture drags badly in the latter sequences and excess footage is going to harm the picture’s entertainment value even more than its rather unappealing story. Director Stanlaws has conceded it a very attractive and artistic production but pictorial appeal alone doesn’t make for entertainment. The fairy tale prologue is quite beautifully done.

Bebe Daniels is pleasing as the dancer but they could find much better material for her. Conrad Nagel is the lover who goes sailing each time he doubts the girl’s love. Ernest Terrence is the over-capricious clown and Mabel Trunelle, a favorite of the old Edison days, the wife of the sporty Bliss Gordon, in love with Bebe. Menjou plays the latter part.

Story: Bonita, daughter of an old Spanish settler in San Francisco, fears that she will be killed by the half-wit clown, Emilio, if she meets the man she loves. So runs her dream and when she meets John Peter she sends him away, meanwhile accepting the attentions of Gordon, husband of Peter’s aunt. Following numerous complications the jealous Emilio finally shoots Mrs. Gordon in mistake for Bonita, making it possible for her to marry Peter without further fear.

Better See This One For Yourself and Decide What You Can Do With It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You had better see this one first and decide what you can do with it. It is a case where you will probably have to use your own judgment. It looks like you can do anything with it, there are enough angles to exploit it and get them interested. But for the average crowd it isn’t very likely that it will do very much for the box office. The average picture-goer doesn’t go in for the fantastic sort of thing that it offers.

Of course on the strength of its being a novelty you might get it over. In all events it would be well for exhibitors to see it first in order to get the angle that will be best to exploit for their own particular clientele. Bebe Daniels’ name and Conrad Nagle’s can be used and they have undoubtedly come to expect good production values from Penrhyn Stanlaws. The title lends itself to the moth and the flame idea and could be easily exploited along these lines.

Good Atmosphere and Action In Mayo’s Latest

Universal

DIRECTOR .......................Lambert Hillyer

SCENARIO BY ............Geo. Randolph Chester
CAMERAMAN ..................Dwight Warren

As a whole... A good action entertainment that suffers a bit from implausibility but a good many will like it.

Direction...... Quite good; South Sea sequences fine and first rate action in sea episode in last reel.

Support...... Adequate; includes Louise Lorraine; Lawrence Hughes and others

Exteriors .................. Attractive

Detail ..................... Ample

Character of Story..... Man comes face to face with the one who wrecked the life of the woman he loves

Length of Production ........ 4,641 feet

Frank Mayo’s latest is a good short entertainment that will please a good majority of picture-goers. It contains first rate action, plenty of interesting atmosphere and a fairly original story that should help to make it a popular attraction. It is a bit more pretentious in production than the average offering and Director Hillyer has gone to quite a little trouble and expense to provide a thoroughly worthwhile and attractive production.

There are plenty of fine South Sea Island shots that will appeal to a great many. The photography throughout is very good. The feature has a strong pictorial appeal. The South Sea Island stuff is a bit off color as far as the natives are concerned, or at least their presentation is more on the order of burlesque. In this connection Hillyer might have rung in some good comedy bits especially where he shows the island ruler decked out in native garb but wearing a pair of fancy patent leather shoes. It looked as though he was getting around to comedy here, but it didn’t come through. And there were some chances for it.

The plot depends quite a good deal on coincident for its development but Hillyer manages to keep things more or less consistent and sustains the interest satisfactorily. The continuity takes some big jumps in the first and second reels in bringing the three principal characters together. It is in this respect that the coincidence is involved. But after this the story moves at a good pace, ending up with a first rate bit of action in the last reel.

Hillyer has gone to quite a little trouble to get the storm scene and it brings the story to a fairly thrilling climax. Miniatures are employed for the long shots of the ships floundering but the close-ups are realistic and good. Frank Mayo gives a good performance as Red MacLean, captain of a trading schooner and the supporting cast is adequate. Mayo has had better leads than Louise Lorraine, however.

Story: MacLean, South Sea trader, saves Heritage, a derelict, from savages. Heritage steals Red’s money and leaves for France. There he marries Joie Malet, daughter of a French commandant about to leave for a South Sea post. Immediately after the ceremony Malet learns of Heritage’s past. Joie seeks to forget on the island where she meets Rod. The two fall in love. Later Rod again befriends Heritage, not knowing that he is the one who prevents his marriage to Joie. The eventual death of Heritage brings about the happy ending.

Talk About South Sea Episodes and Use Star’s Name
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one is quite a good bit better than the usual average offering and it should satisfy a majority of any audience. You can let them know it is somewhat out of the ordinary and will probably interest them most with catchlines indicating the South Sea atmosphere and the action contained in the last reel. You can secure trailers on all Universal features and one on this should work very well.

Let the star’s admirers know what he has to do in this and you can interest them with stills in the lobby. You might also mention for those interested in the private lives of the players, that Mayo’s wife, Dagmar Godowsky, appears in the picture. There are plenty of attractive posters that will also help to get them interested.

There are a lot of picture goers that will come out strong for a picture like this. In view of the flapper craze it should prove quite popular and should be a good one for the box office. It has fine exploitation possibilities and contains a definite audience appeal in its story. The theme, incidentally, is a boost for the flapper in that it goes to show that the girl is harmless in spite of her extremes and made of "good stuff" if it is only given a chance to come out. And that is what happens in "What Fools Men Are"—the "good" comes out strong and wins a place for the flapper in the hearts of all those who were so very much opposed to her in the earlier reels and she also wins over the audience to her side.

The theme involves the familiar eternal triangle situation but it is subordinate to the flapper's adventures and not likely to detract from the story's appeal because of its familiarity. What will please a good many are the scenes in which the flapper is shown enjoying life in her own way with her friends. The studio party is well staged and they'll like to see how a regular flapper "flaps." Faire Binney does very well in the role and manipulates a variety of cigarette holders in true flapper fashion. She is very well suited to the part and makes the most of it.

Terwilliger has secured fine atmosphere for his picture for one thing and a suitable cast for another. Besides Faire Binney there is Joseph Striker, who does a good bit as the rich man's son, and Huntley Gordon and Florence Billings as the husband and wife. J. Barney Sherry is another member of the cast—the rich man who welcomes the flapper into his family when he discovers she really loves his son.

Lucy Fox plays the part of a maid but her connection with the rest of the story is somewhat vague. Other than the fact that she copies her mistress in making fools of men it isn't clear why she is in the picture. Some sub-titles might clear up her actions, especially in the last reel, where she calls on the flapper. Otherwise the story is coherent and easy to follow. Undoubtedly a good many will find it thoroughly entertaining.

Story: Kate Claybourne, a writer, divorces her husband, Bartley, when she believes him in love with her young sister, Peggy. Bartley is ready to marry Peggy but she elopes with Ralph Demarest, son of a millionaire. How Peggy eventually proves to the elder Demarest that she is worthy of his son and re-unites Kate and Bartley completes the story.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,749 feet

Lambert Hillyer is a capable director and has many good entertainments to his credit, but he has missed out on this one. The trouble is that the story's comedy possibilities have not been used to the best advantage and excess footage smothered the few really good comedy twists that Hillyer did catch. He seems to have seen them, snatched at them, but lost track of them again. In nearly every case he misses getting the humor out of the situations.

"The Super-Sex" will still stand a much better chance of pleasing if it is given a careful editing. Numerous close-ups, especially those of Robert Gordon, who usually overacts when he does get a close-up, could readily be eliminated and help speed up the story. Some improvements could also be made in the sub titles. Many of them are unnecessary and they could have been written in a more humorous vein.

Frank Adams has some pretty good comedy ideas in his story, originally published in Cosmopolitan Magazine as "Miles Brewster and the Super-Sex," but somehow in transferring them to the screen, considerable of the comedy has been lost. They get it off to a good start with the introduction of the characters and it promises to be a very amusing picture, but it drifts into slow-moving incident and drags along until about the latter part of the fourth reel when it picks up again and holds the interest pretty well to the finish.

Gertrude Claire, as the gossiping old grandmother, virtually steals the picture. She is an ideal type and has a fine comedy sense. Robert Gordon is not very well suited to the role of Miles Brewster and doesn't appear very real in the character except in the part where he gets the money and spends it to show off before the girl who jilted him. He does this bit quite well. Charlotte Pierce is adequate as the girl. She is also given too many close-ups. Tully Marshall is good as the father, and Lydia Knott is the mother.

Story: Miles Brewster gets the surprise of his life when the finds that his stocks turn out profitably. He spends money freely until advised that it was a mistake. It turns out to be a practical joke of his grandmother to test Miles. The stock is really good and Miles is the hero of the family and his girl.

Will Be Much Better if Carefully Edited.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can't make promises for this as a comedy offering because they are going to wonder where the laughs are. Unless it can be re-edited so as to bring out the comedy business to better advantage—and certain cutting and new titles could do it—then be careful abont promises. The players are not very well known with the exception of Tully Marshall.

If you want to let them know say it is an adaptation of Frank R. Adams' story, "Miles Brewster and the Super-Sex," which appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Catchlines will give an idea and you might satisfy the younger crowd with it, so let them know about the youth who invested in Baby Blue Oil and made a thousand dollars and spent it before he collected it. The regular exploitation stuff is sufficient.

incidentally falling in love with the rancher's pretty daughter, manages to purloin the money, substituting worthless paper in arrives on the scene just as the highwaymen make their hold-up.

But in the fight that follows the money is found on him and there is trouble until he subdues the crook and the envelope tells its story. There is plenty of action and a good fight.

Type of production...........................................1 reel comedy Quite an entertaining little comedy is "Their Steady Job," in which Neely Edwards and Bert Roach are seen as two tramps. Some of the gags are sure to get laughs. In the opening footage, they are badly in need of new clothes.
Throwing a pair of stuffed gloves in a lake they hide in the bushes and steal the clothes of all the gallant rescuers.
After numerous happenings, they are unable to find work and are dejectedly sitting on a park bench when they see a man drowning. Yelling to him "where do you work," they leave him to his fate and rush to his office to get his job. But they are too late; the man who pushed him in has already obtained the position. They are about to turn away, when the boss recognizes his clothes on them and they are thrown in jail.

"Graphic No. 2549"—Educational
Type of production...........................................1 reel magazine
A novel feature of this number is an introduction to Dixie's Baby Orchestra—located in New Orleans and composed of self taught children between seven and thirteen. Queer fish in New York's Aquarium make interesting camera subjects.
Of particular interest to women will be the bit in which Paul Rilling, well known hairdresser, composes coiffures to fit faces. A visit to some Great Dane kennels in Long Island complete the issue.

"The Man Who Laughs"—Aesop's Fable—Pathe
Type of production.............................................1 reel animated cartoon Old Farmer Al Falco carries out the doctor's advice and shouts "Hoo Ray!" whenever anything goes wrong. This leads him into a lot of trouble especially when things begin to happen to his wife and he shouts "Hoo Ray." A mule on which he is riding becomes wild and will not stop running, finally entering a race track where a horse race is in progress.
He wins the race and Farmer Al is given a bag of gold. Just as he shouts "Hoo Ray" a steam roller comes along and flat-tens him out like a pancake. But even this does not stop him.
Was there ever such optimism.

"True Blue"—Century—Universal
Type of production...........................................2 reel comedy Queenie the horse is starred in this two reeler and if your folks liked the "Maudie" comedies they will no doubt like this.
Without doubt the horse is marvelously intelligent and those who like to see animals perform will be more than pleased with Queenie, although it is a question whether they would not be just as well pleased if "True Blue" was not quite so long.
The plot is slight and deals with Queenie's troubles in taking care of her master, a bachelor.

"The Beryl Coronet"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational
Type of production...........................................2 reel detective story
This one of the famous Conan Doyle stories deals most interestingly with the theft of a coronet that to all circumstantial evidence has been taken by the son of the banker to whom it was entrusted overnight as security. How Sherlock Holmes, the great detective, very well played by Ellie Norwood, unravels the mystery makes very good entertainment. The suspense is well held and though you are comparatively sure of the villain, the way in which the case is slowly drawn around him by the detective holds the interest closely. The picture will hold its own on any program.

"The Counter Jumper"—Larry Semon—Vitagraph
Type of production.............................................2 reel comedy
This latest Semon comedy has some brand new stunts, and despite the fact that a lot of the footage is slapstick and rough, there are laughs aplenty. The action takes place in a trading post in the Northwest and the store gets pretty well smashed up before the finish. One of the funniest stunts is that in which an egg suddenly sprouts real little legs and walks around, jumps from place to place and eludes all pursuers.
They will wonder how it's done. Another funny incident is that in which a coon falls from a balcony onto a red hot stove and then bounces up and down from the ceiling to the stove like a jumping jack on a pole. When he finally escapes he sits on a big cake of ice which melts almost instantaneously before one's eyes, letting the coon down on the floor with a bang. This will surely get a laugh. In the cast are Lucille Carlisle and "Babe" Hardy.

"A Lot of Bull"—Universal
Type of production.............................................1 reel comedy
Gil Pratt, the director, has inserted a great deal of incident in this one reeler. It moves very swiftly and deals with an automobile salesman's troubles in Mexico. These include being stabbed by a Mexican, locked in jail, and finally being the toreador in a bull fight, and chasing four bulls from the arena with a broom. The bull fight footage is good, and a little more money seems to have been spent than usually in one reelers. Charles Molina is the salesman and the incident in which he drags a mattress into the arena and protects himself against the bull will surely get a laugh.
Short Stuff

"The Fortune Hunters"—Aesop Fable—Pathe

Type of production......................1 reel cartoon

Henry Cat and Milton Mouse break out of prison in pursuit of a phony legacy left them by their uncle. After many adventures, including escape from a hundred thirsty blood-hounds, they reach their uncle's home, only to find that the "pile" left them is a rock pile. In an effort to escape the prison warden they have many trials and tribulations, including a stolen ride in an airship, but finally fall and land just where they started from—in the prison courtyard, making little ones out of big ones. "The Fortune Hunters" is decidedly up to the average of this series and has a few more laughs than usual.

Graphic 2548—Educational

Type of production......................1 reel magazine

This issue of Educational's Graphic will no doubt prove interesting entertainment. It deals first with one of New York's oldest postmen, who has carried letters for 47 years. Then Evelyn Law of the Follies dances quite a bit, demonstrating her technique in both ordinary and slow motion pictures. Next, F. Scott Fitzgerald, popular creator of flappers in fiction, is introduced at his Long Island home. The cartoon is particularly interesting showing the life and training of the New England Coast Guard both in actual pictures and pen and ink drawings.

The Kinema, Los Angeles notable for the premieres of many box-office successes enjoyed unusual business last week with “Shadows,” a Tom Forman Production for Preferred Pictures. On all sides were heard words of praise. That’s actual fact, no bookeum—Advt.

Millions

That’s all; just a few. Maybe six. To be exact. That’s what Vitagraph wants from Famous. In the suit filed last week Which sure started a lot of talking. And caused one prediction: that this whole business. Would be torn to pieces. From stem to stern. Within the next two years. And brought forth the interesting point. From another quarter. That Famous’ sales policy was causing all the booking combinations to develop. And meanwhile Albert E. Smith’s statement: “As I see it, this suit is not only the case of Vitagraph against the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., but it is the suit of every independent producer and every independent exhibitor in this country.” But these independent producers and exhibitors. Don’t seem to be clogging the roads to Brooklyn. To offer their aid. Financially or otherwise. To Vitagraph. In the action. That is; not so as you can notice it.

BOOKING COMBINATIONS

Says Martin Quigley. In conclusion. On this subject. “If after they (booking combines) have gained great strength they continue to adhere to the principles which guide them at the start, all is well. But if, on the other hand, they eventually reach a point where they are able and willing to dictate to the producer what he shall receive for his product. Then there is a grave danger because such a situation that taxes human nature to the limit.

“If such a situation came about it undoubtedly would be answered by producers with the formation of a booking combination among themselves and the exhibitors would therefore have afforded the grounds

West Coast Combine

West Coast are bringing exhibitors into their organization on the grounds that they can reduce film rentals from 40 to 75 per cent through block booking, and all they ask as their share is 25 per cent of the profits, the exhibitor taking out his salary as bookers. In other words, the reduced film rentals provide the profits and the reduced rentals are possible by virtue of booking the large circuit instead of the individual house.

It is understood that the T. & D. J. Circuit recently turned over 25 small houses to the West Coast.

When officials in charge of National Distributing organizations were questioned regarding the West Coast Theaters situation on Saturday, most of them said that for the time being they preferred to say nothing.

Big Cast for "Rupert"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—Victor Heerman has put together a very strong cast with which he will produce for Max Selznick, "Rupert of Hentzau," sequel to "The Prisoner of Zenda." Bert Lytell will play the dual role of Rudolph Rassendyll and King Rudolph. Elaine Hammerstein will have the role of Queen Flavia and Lew Cody will play Rupert. Others in the cast will be Hobart Bosworth, Bryant Washburn, Margery Daw, Irving Cummings, Claire Windsor, Elmo Lincoln and several others.

Would Censor "Birth"

Although "The Birth of a Nation" has been shown since 1915, a hearing on a request to revoke its license was held Saturday before the Motion Picture Commission. No decision was reached.

Commissioner Lifton stated that the members would wait until affidavits supporting charges and defenses on both sides had been submitted.

Alderman George W. Harris, colored, Assemblyman Henry W. Shields, colored, and Walter F. White, representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, alleged that the picture glorified the Ku Klux Klan, fomented race hatred, and would lead to riots and disturbances, particularly at this period.

J. J. McCarthy of the Griffith office, denied these charges, discredited the statement that there was any connection between the Klan and the contemplated running of the picture, and declared it a true version of the history of the Ku Klux Klan.

for the creation of a condition which thinking theatre-goers have long regarded as just about the most serious menace that could overtake them.

WHAT CAST?

Famous plans for “Hollywood,” The big special. Spring release Cecil DeMille—not only to direct, but act well. Pola Negri, Gloria Swanson, Tom Meighan, Theodore Roberts and George Fawcett. Lila Lee and all the rest. Of the Paramount stars. Here’s hoping the script is as good as the cast.

HARD LUCK

Frank Newman had a $90 slave. At the Statler, St. Louis. Just a few days ago. Do it’s a real one, but some Mammy his purse. And Pratts had to call up Spyros Skonas. And made a touch. So he could get some. Now he’s going in for shaves a la Gillette.

SKELETON STUFF

Rattling it. Reminding that Abe Lehr, Goldwyn studio manager, is a long collection. Friends, and Sam Goldwyn. Are great friends. And Sam is in Hollywood. And maybe Abe—well, it’s still a good guess as to just what may happen.

CO-OPERATION

Out in Seattle, Old Doc Clemmer, and Ray Cronbacher. Have possession houses. So that hasn’t stopped them. From chipping in a buying a special projection machine. For reviewing work. That’s eat co-operation.

PUTTING IT OVER

In Paterson the Rotary Club. Asked Perry Charles, publicity man or “The Dangerous Age.” To speak. And Perry did. And boosted it picture. Of course, by telling them that every Rotarian should see it. “And how do we get it?” asked one of the Rotarians. “Buy your seats,” said Perry.

HITTING IT

Arthur H. Sawyer, Of S-L. Releasing through Metro. Finally got a good one. A real one. In “Quincy Adams Sawyer.” Been plugged hard. Some time. But he’s hit it at last. And there are a lot of people who say they’re mighty glad of it.

A MEAN GUY

That sort of a thief is a bad one. Which the exhibit. Out in St. Looney. Should chip in, and help the church. Get another outfit.

TAKING NO CHANCES

Goldwyn has insured von Stroheim. For a million. Also June lathis. Where’s that comedian? Who said some people were more worth dead than alive.

WINNING HIS SPIRITS

Up at First National, F. M. Brockell. Been working a long time, but official recognition. Of his job. Finally came. When the announce- ment went out a few days ago. That he was in charge of distribution... congrats.

HOW TIMES CHANGE

Talking in Hollywood. To the Lasky staff, Zukor said he remem- bered. When they had Mary Pickford. Making “Hearts Adrift.” On the East Coast, Production was delayed. Because of the difficulty of finding leading man. Who had a dress suit. Or who could wear one gracefully.

Nowadays. There are lots of dress suits. But dana few leading men.

WHAT AN OAT WILL DO

In his new book of smikes. “Listen to These.” Tom Masson. For- mally editor of Life. Runs this one: A movie actor was suing a company for an immense sum for breach of contract. Upon being asked why he emended such a sum, he replied: “Because I am the greatest actor in the world.” Later, one of his friends took him to task for so loudly singing his own praises. “I know,” replied the actor, “it must have sounded somewhat conceited, but I was under oath, so what could I do?”

AN EXHIBITOR’S FRIEND

Joe Unger, First National New York Exchange. Has a heart. He loves his exhibitor friends. He likes to help them. When they’re sick, or blue. Or rentals are high. So when he read the “Oliver Twist” special, “de luxe,” “gold illuminated,” contract gotten out by Irving Lesser, himself, Joe nearly fainted. A girl gave him smelling salts. That helped. But the poor exhibitor. As he hit the contract. Died with that blue ribbon. And to each ribbon. Attached a small bottle. Of smelling salts. So when the exhibitors faint at the price of “Oliver,” Joe will revive them long enough. To sign. On the dotted line. He and all the same. Do likewise.

This is great service. For the exhibitors. Any way. The exhibitors all admit. That the contract. Is pretty. Nice paper. And good photogra- phs. And each contract. Has four pages. Each one for signature, not each a different color. Exhibitors will appreciate Joe’s service.

Universal Wins “Buffalo Bill” Suit

Wire reports from Denver to Seigfried F. Hartman, attorney for Universal, indicate that Universal has won the injunction action brought against it in the United States District Court of Colorado by the W. F. Cody (“Buffalo Bill”) Historical Pictures Corp., to prevent the sale of Universal’s chapter picture “In the Days of Buffalo Bill.” The W. F. Cody Corp. based its stand on the allegation it had acquired exclusive right to the name “Buffalo Bill” from the famous scout himself.

The court arguments show that the name “Buffalo Bill” had been used in 44 copyrighted works and in several moving pictures; and the court ruled that Universal had the right to use the name in its chapter picture.

Pending the decision, no bookings were taken in the Denver City territory for the chapter picture. It is now released for that city, where Buffalo Bill was so well known.

INTRODUCING GALLAGHER AND SHEAN

Over at Goldwyn, they're stepping. The Gallagher and Shean of press agentry (Howard Dietz and Eddie Bonns). Not content with their big splash in the "Brothers Under the Same Roof" Club. They grabbed all the papers Thanksgiving Day, with front page stories.

They had a man named Jack Cohen. Selling silver half-dollars for twenty-five cents. In an envelope marked "BLIND BARGAIN." He proved that New Yorkers were too wise to grab a hundred per cent profit unless they could see what they were getting. An arrest followed.

The reporters grabbed the story.

Timely stunt. "A Blind Bargain" plays the Capitol. This week.

The story went on the Associated Press wire as well as every news bureau. And it was featured everywhere. That's why they're singing a song over at the Goldwyn offices which goes. To the tune of "Gallagher

JOHN EMERSON AND EDDY GOULDING WATCH OUT

The following is part of a letter. Received by an important picture concern. From H. Schiff, Who manufactures fur coats. In New York, "I had one play written by you, which I think will be one of the greatest shows in the world. This will interest a child of 3 to a person of 75 years. It isn't what I say in this letter that counts. When you people are interested, you will see that I will write about it. This show calls "The Poor Man, Clever Rich Lady, Banker and his Daughter. These are the four most important characters in this show, and I think that you will be able to make the biggest success with a play like that, and if you will try it, I can say that you will succeed, and I will be surprised for the people, and a big success for your concern, as I have mentioned before that I go to a show because I have much interest in it, and as I see how many people play in a show, so I see that this show can be played something wonderful, and of great interest to the world.

Hoping to be favored with an interview.

"Very truly yours."

He hadn't had that interview yet.

Then the negative cost wouldn't be what it is. It takes De Milles more than 12 days. To figure his scenario. Under the present schedule.

HOW TIMES CHANGE

WHAT IT COSTS

Censorship figures handed out by State Commission. Shows it cost approximately $300,000 a year. For New York censorship. Maybe it's worth that much. To those who hold the jobs. But to no one else. Still, it looks as if that cost will be wiped out. Pretty soon after Smith gets in Albany.

Only in few instances did exhibitors report returns below normal. Any way, below normal. The majority of theaters in the cities referred to, Feinman reports, have made arrangements for the presentation of extensive Christmas and New Year week programs.

Announcing Angelus Pictures Corporation
a new National Distributing Organization

IN announcing the Angelus Pictures Corporation, we feel that we are entering the field at the psychological moment, and with a product for which the demand has exceeded the supply.

to MR. EXHIBITOR.
We intend to specialize in the higher type of "outdoor" productions, featuring well-known and popular Stars, and made by Directors of proven ability whose names really mean something at your Box-Office. Productions good enough for the very finest theatre in the country, but at rentals that will put them within the reach of the little fellow while they are still fresh.

We will release such a picture every Monday morning, fifty-two times a year, and every one of them will be an INDEPENDENT production.

to MR. PRODUCER.
If you are an INDEPENDENT producer, and are in a position to make the kind of picture described above, and if you have not yet digested our proposition, you have been missing something. We have arranged for sufficient product to carry us for several months, but there are other months to come and we would be glad to talk to you about it. Come in and see our Mr. White.

to BRANCH MANAGERS and SALESMEN.
We will open Exchanges at Albany, Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Butte, Charlotte, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Des Moines, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Louisville, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Haven, New Orleans, New York, Oklahoma, Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Portland, Salt Lake, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, and Washington.

We desire to employ only the very highest type of Branch Managers and Salesmen at these points. Has Beens and professional "gyppers" are barred. We want only experienced, successful men with a real record behind them. We want the type who can be depended upon to give the Home Office and the Exhibitor both an absolutely square deal all the time. To such men we are willing to pay a generous salary and a liberal bonus.

If you think you are the man we want, drop us a line giving us an outline of your experience and any other facts in which you think we would be interested. All communications of this character will be received and treated with strictest confidence.

Protection

By Big Houses Against Neighborhood Theaters Brings Kick From Michigan Exhibitors

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Detroit—The M. P. T. O. of Michigan through H. M. Richly, manager, in a letter sent to all exchanges and distributors, says, in part: "We are unalterably opposed to granting more than 30 days protection on any production, and more than seven days protection on second runs."

Our attention has also been called to the fact that in some instances neighborhood houses have asked long protection on other neighborhood houses. The sanctioning of such a request will mean the elimination of scores of theaters upon whom the producing companies are dependent for a portion of their revenue. The organization, therefore, feels that it is working for the best interests of the industry to oppose such petition.

"It has also come to our attention that the practice of salesmen canceling contracts between competing exhibitors is still in vogue. This is unfair, unbusinesslike and not conducive to the cooperation which should be maintained between exhibitors and distributors."

Harry Knapp, chairman of the board, will most likely be reappointed in view of his association with the Inquirer as dramatic editor. The (Continued on Page 2)

The 10 Best

What were the 10 best pictures released during 1922? Everybody wants to know. THE FILM DAILY, in making an effort to ascertain this, has about completed a survey among the more important motion picture critics of trade papers, fan magazines and daily newspapers. The complete result will be found in the forthcoming issue of The Film Year Book.

Beginning with tomorrow's issue a percentage table will show the manner in which some of the more important productions are accorded their position. This table will be corrected from day to day.

Kitchen's Attack

Tales of Illiterate Executives and Copycat Evil—But Believes "Situation is Not Hopeless"

Writing in "Columbia," the official organ of the Knights of Columbus, in its latest issue, Karl K. Kitchen under the caption "What's the Matter With the Movies" attacks certain phases of the industry strongly. In part he says:

"In the first place, the film industry in America is controlled by a group of foreign-born speculators, the majority of whom are actually unable to speak the English language with any degree of correctness. Pants pressers, delicatessen dealers, furriers and penny showmen started in the picture business when it was in its infancy, and they are the type of magnates who preside over its destinies today."

Stanlaws May Join Woods and Others

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—Pennyll Stanlaws, who was slated to direct the next Pola Negri vehicle for Paramount, who has resigned as noted from Famous Players to enter production on his own account, states that his business representative, Robert Lee, is in England at present observing conditions for possible production there. Stanlaws said that relations between him and Lasky were unruled but, even so, he could not produce on same scale as he intends to independently.

It is reported here that Sam Wood, who is in New York, has left the Paramount fold and that there is possibility of him and Stanlaws joining forces with Elmer Harris, Frank Woods and Thompson Buchanan, who is also in New York.

At Famous it was said they knew nothing of Sam Woods resigning, and did not credit the report.

Kitchen's Attack

"The whole industry is in a grrip of men of this type—sinister opportunist, with a mind of his own, from whom, until they are retired from the motion picture business, American public can never hope for any real improvement in photoplay. A few better pictures will be made, of course, but the great bulk of the product will be nothing without taste—like the men who make them. **

Hard words, you say. But it necessary to point out this fundamental fault with the movies before setting forth the others. When better class of producers make interesting pictures there will be best pictures.

However, Kitchen believes that the situ-at is not hopeless and it is his belief that "founders from Central Europe will be out of their high positions." He adds, "I days of alien domination of the American picture industry are numbered nobody knows it better than the illus-tary 'magnates' who between them are controlling the present time.

When this change comes about the will be less of the 'fascitarian' than it is now.
across the globe, the industry is.

Naturally, in any business where beautiful women are employed in any form, there are bound to be instances of favoritism and preferential treatment of chosen young women who are foisted on the public.
It will be considerably lessened in the new producing companies.

"Practically all the film companies are turning out in the same type of pictures.

Photos are as standardized as sausages, a picture is made to order.

When they make money in the past the company spends it today—then go into debt to make money in the future. They are made with the same formula, with the result that when a director-actor has seen four pictures he has really seen four or five.

The best proof of this is the fact that there has been a so-called unusual picture shown—a photoplay that is a little different from the others—it is almost invariably a financial success. But let one company make a successful sea story and every other company will follow suit. Soon the stories are swamped with sea stories and public is satiated with them.

In conclusion he says: "The fact that of名誉 comes to glory, to criminals and that they make heroes of some,
and become of prostitutes in course, deplorable, but not necessarily so. But to be the same crime then, and chronicle all the minor furors would require a small sized volume.

Furthermore, it is assumed that the director is dealing with it's of course, with its curse of relative,
and the copy-as methods employed by every company.
We are made—so they say— but we shall have fewer and better movies.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother expounded on the 'how's' of putting it in a show correctly and let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Created Record Run

Hibbing, Minn.—P. R. Tomney put over "Sherlock Holmes" at his Homer by active exploitation work which earned a record run. For four days in advance of the showing he carried a scatter ad campaign in the dailies. He distributed 3,000 heralds and 2,000 teaser cards. He also had a man dressed as Holmes for street ballyhoo.

He followed this by streamer ads in the paper and bannering his lobby. He billed the town liberally and created a good deal of advance comment.

Pastors Invited

Superior, Wis.—Frank C. Buckley invited the Swedish pastors of the city to the first day's showing of "The Sin Flood" at the Princess on the strength of the author, Henning Berg, being a Swede.

Buckleyst worked several good stunts as follows:

For street ballyhoo he had a boy walking around with an umbrella painted to read "The sin flood is coming."

He used teaser ads in the newspapers and lettered the sidewalks with chalk, using the same copy.

He heralded the coming of the picture with many personal appearances. He used 10 lobby display paintings in store window tie-ups.

He also had an auto with "Sin Flood" banners as street ballyhoo.

Matinee for Old-Timers

Chillicothe, O.—That there is more than one way to gain newspaper representation was proved by the Meyer Brothers, who operate the Majestic, during their recent showing of "Remembrance."

Neither of the local papers will give the theaters a line of free publicity, so Meyer and Phil Gersdorf, Cincinnati Goldwynner, dug up something that would be real news for them.

The Majestic arranged a special "Remembrance" matinee, at which time every Chillicothe citizen sixty years of age or more would be admitted free. The inmates of the Women's Home were special guests, arrangements being made to transport them to and from the theater by automobiles. Then, one of the newspapers was permitted to sponsor the whole affair. This they did, and in order to let local citizens know what they were doing they donated a special story and a splendid two-column cut, all of which was direct, though gratuitous advertising for the picture.

A double page truck of co-operative ads playing up on the word "Remembrance" was secured in the other paper, this marking the first time that such a procedure had ever been attempted in Chillicothe.

Oberholtzer is backed by various ministerial organizations, who are stood that other candidates will be represented for the position by promi-

"Outcast!"—Famous Rivoli

HERALD—Miss Ferguson is good—better, in fact, than she has been in any film seen with this critic. But "Outcast!" is not a picture by her, but by a different maker. It is as much as if a different play had been staged as "Lorna Doone." It is not a perfect production, but neither is it good. It is never unbearably offensive or dull, nor is it ever extra-ordinarily entertaining. It is simply a sad story, with no vehemence of condemnation or steam. "Outcast!" is made with a certain amount of sympathy, and some success. Miss Ferguson, as the former Mme. Maccabe, has her moments of pathos, and is never less than interesting, but it is difficult to be on the defensive in a story that is, at all events, a poor show. We cannot help observing, however, that this is a very poor picture. And its acting is all very well carried out. But it is a great shame to have any film that is capable of being so well carried out. "Outcast!" is distinguished by some excellent acting, and the novelist, Frank Keenan, and at stated intervals, John Bowers. "Lorna Doone."—Director, Maurice Tourneur, who has already made a number of classics of literature, reaches the highest point yet touched by him in his handling of the rather difficult, but a movie of "Lorna Doone." The film is "Lorna Doone," is, to our way of thinking, as good as the novel. What more need one say in praise of it? "Lorna Doone" is a picture worth while.

SUN.—In the film presentation of "Eve," Dr. Blackmore's famous romance, now playing at the Strand Theater, as a choice of a few sequences of the novel, it is evident that the audience gazed upon a photographic image as Maurice Tourneur has crowed in these six reels. But there is an attendant yawning that cannot be denied. And something, nothing, is evident in the screen version of "Lorna Doone," although it is difficult to say just what the sensibility is. EVE, WORLD—Director, Maurice Tourneur, who has already made a number of classics of literature, reaches the highest point yet touched by him in his handling of the rather difficult, but a movie of "Lorna Doone." The film is "Lorna Doone," is, to our way of thinking, as good as the novel. What more need one say in praise of it? "Lorna Doone" is a picture worth while.

The overture is "Mignon," followed by "The Split Dollar," a short wild West comedy. The Capitol Magazine precedes "Impressions of Ethelbert Nevin," which is staged before the feature, "A Blind Bargain." Arv Van Loon then renders a flute solo, playing " utiliser Parabola." The much heralded Einstein film is the number two film. An organ solo finishes the program.

Rialto

Selections from Massenet's, "Manon," and Rosenfield's Classical Piano by the Rialto Orchestra, opens the bill. The regular weekly news sheet is then screened. Lillian Bond gracefully dances an Algerian dance that is played by Dan Mason in "Pop Tutty and Miss Emma's Grass Widow," a comedy of rural life. Mary Fabian, sopranos, sings "Sweetheart." The feature, "A Daughter of Luxury," with Agnes Ayers, next. Regina Denny in one of the Leather Pinner Series, "The Chickahoe Bone Crusher," is the last number.

Rivoli

The regular Pictorial follows the overture, "The Carnival of Venice," after which Susan Cough and Frederick Hager sing "Dreaming Alone in the Twilight." "Outcast," starring Elie Ferguson is the feature. A piano concerto played by Vera Jacek and a Klezmer comedy are the final numbers.

At Other Houses

"The Town That Forgot God" holds over at the Capitol; "Who Knows What Day is Flower" remains at the Criterion, and "Robin Hood" still plays the Lyric.

Busy at Tec-Art

Tec-Art Studios are operating companies, Ashley Miller, "The Night Before Christmas" for Bray, Jack Dillon is making "The Evil Men Do" for Atlantic Features, and Dr. Lee De Forest is making talking and sound pictures.

Box December Releases

Canadian Notes
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
St. James—W. L. Caplin has opened a $60,000 theater in this city.

Toronto—Harold Stafford, formerly booker with Canadian Educational has been appointed salesman in the same office.

Toronto—At the next meeting of the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, the Board is expected to be reorganized and new directors appointed.

Toronto—Haskel Masters has resigned as manager of the local Regal office. O’Connor of Pathé succeeds Masters.

Charles T. Boulware, former ringmaster of Howe’s Greater London Circus, has been appointed assistant production manager at the Ince Studios.

Toronto—William Sturgess, former manager of the Imperial, has been appointed Toronto sales representative of Canadian Educational, here.

Toronto—The Rialto is showing a series of British made pictures, produced by the British Mastercraft people and the management of the house reports that the pictures are meeting with great approval.

AMERICAN—Masquerade, make-believe and clever connivance are the impressive qualities in “A Daughter of Luxury.”

MORNING TELEGRAPH—There is nothing new about the problem presented in “A Daughter of Luxury.” The great weakness of this film is that the performance is so wooden, so unlike, that one never really believes in it.

Actual story there is little in “A Daughter of Luxury,” which is an adaptation by Bradis Marie Dill of “The Imposter,” a play by Leonard Merrick.

SUN—The only remarkable feature of the production is the personal charm of the star, but the plot is good entertainment and it gives plenty of exercise to that human attitude called sympathy.

EVE. TELEGRAM—The title role is ideal for Miss Ayres, who appears as a toneless beauty introduced in society by a married man who thus attempts to hide a slight indiscretion.

EVE. WORLD—It is all very light, but entertaining in spots.

The star’s work is good, as always, and the balance of the players are acceptable.

POST—Leonard Merrick’s play has been adapted into a solid form of poor rich girl sort of screen entertainment, with good photography and settings. “A Daughter of Luxury” has a big point in its favor—it is not a lengthy picture.

“The Supersex”—Cameo
EVE. WORLD—It is a garish sort of a film, but nothing that will cause any great excitement.

AMERICAN—The best thing about this picture, based on a Cosmopolitan story, is the remarkably fine character work of Gertrude Claire as Grandma Brewer of the bitter tongue. The story itself is interesting.

SUN—It depicts in amazing fashion the hopes and fears, the trials and tribulations of a boy of twenty whose self-consciousness of his age brings about his revolt against family and friends.

TELEGRAM—Fully of delightful human qualities. It has delightful comedy, and it has its serious sides as well.

JOURNAL—The adventures of a youth who knows, or thinks he knows, all about women are bound to be of interest on the screen, and so “The Supersex” fairly may be said to appeal to both sexes equally.

But the film is too long—the appeal is too prolonged.
The Troubles of an Exhibitor

"I would put the folks from Broken Sock, eight miles away," and Lord knows what else.

Well, dear fellow, I swallowed him whole, and paid him five dollars cash for it.

With such an investment I knew I would have to throw it in a big way, so I went to the local grocer and bought a barrel of smoked herring and then announced I would give one herring free with admission. The herring cost me two cents a piece and as I charge fifteen cents admission I figured it wasn't a bad buy.

I only run on Tuesday and Saturday but I thought this "Cape Cod Folks" was a whale of a picture so I decided to run it on Friday.

Now for the fireworks.

I forgot to ask the peddler how many spoons this picture of his was in and when I did he was knocked for a row of spoils to find out it was only one spoon, and a short one too. I was so confounded mad I could have swallowed a fly. If it hadn't been for the herring I would never have run the darned thing.

Well, I made the best of it and got all the advertising I could find and secured the services of Elmer Hecup, the local barber, to play a zither solo and this along with the picture and my speech of apology would take up the time.

It's funny I can never see ahead of my nose.

Friday morning, play date, I found out the following going on.

Don't practice at the Baptist Church.

Lodge meeting at Redmen Hall.

Three hay rides.

Cy Mowder's barn-raising party.

Free band concert.

Laying the cornerstone for the new horse-trough.

Epworth League Bazaar.

And the funeral of Hezekiah Short, the meanest man in Sassafras County.

None of this there was nothing doing.

To make a long story short, I didn't even open and am holding the picture until that salesman comes through again.

Somebody tried to tell me Robin was a brother to Little Red Riding Hood. How about it?

Yours truly,
ZEKE BEESUN.

In the Courts

Harry L. Reichenbach, Inc., has filed a suit in the Supreme Court against George Clark Pictures, Inc., a London corporation to recover $27,000. The plaintiff is suing on a claim assigned to it by Harry L. Reichenbach, individually. It is alleged that in December 1921, the Clark Company made a contract with Reichenbach, to act as general manager, with a salary of $100 and certain commissions. The employment began with the defendant on March 8, 1922, and on July 4, it is alleged, Reichenbach was discharged.

A judgment for $1,131 has been filed in the City Court against the Effanee Photoplays, Inc., in favor of Baumann & Co. The defendant rented from the plaintiff, furniture and other properties to be used in a film set, which were to be paid for when the picture was sold. Baumann & Co., alleged that the period for which the articles were rented, expired, but the Effanee Company, did not return the property. The defense contended the rental period had not expired.

The declarations were made at a meeting where the constitution of the society with the M. P. T. O., and the objections in concrete form were embodied in the complaints filed.

Lichtman's Faith

In Independent Product Backed Up By Reports From Field

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Complete faith in the future of the independent market was the sentiment voiced by Al Lichtman and B. P. Schulberg at a dinner which they tendered to visiting First National executives at Marceil's Cafe, Monday. The dinner followed a directors' meeting of the First National group.

Lichtman is here to discuss future productions plans with Schulberg.

Connick Homebound

From Hollywood—Interesting Developments Expected Following His Arrival

H. D. H. Connick, formerly chairman of the Finance Committee of Famous Players, is due to arrive home today from Hollywood. Connick, who has been in New York, kept more or less under cover, but it is reported that he went West on a plan which promises to involve one of the most exciting and important producers in the business, and which may result in the establishment of a new distributing organization.

Thomas H. Ince is the producer reported involved in the Connick development. Ince is now releasing through Also, First National, and prior to this released through Associated Producers of which he was one of the organizers. Reports on this he had a contract with Famous for a large number of productions annually.

Some time ago there was considerable talk of Connick being interested in the development of a big organization, and the name of one of the oldest concerns in the business was coupled with this. The Ince product was also included in the gossip. Connick quietly left New York a short while ago, and while much has been printed of other important picture folk being on the Coast Connick evidently managed to avoid being seen by the newspaper men out there. At all events nothing has "leaked out" of his visit.

Think This Over

"I wonder if the day will ever come when there will be a real understanding between producer and exhibitor? Seems to me that if we don't get to that point soon, all the Will Hays' in the world can't save the industry from eventually petering out. I am not a calamity howler—business is good—we are making money, but the eagle eye of the public is upon the picture industry our squabbles are known to the world and the reputation of stars is known to them too—all the producers. Ego has had its day in this business, and business methods must be injected pretty soon, or this business will never reach its 'place in the sun.'"

ROSS D. ROGERS,

Dye, Ford & Rogers,

Amarillo, Texas
Valentino Argues (Continued from Page 1)

Valentino further charged that Famous Players was pursuing a policy of acquiring rival companies, and minor plays which would tend to decrease his popularity and cause him to be forgotten by the public, while Famous Players would reap large profits from him.

On advice of his counsel he declared he preferred to return to St. Louis at 6 P. M., and appeared at both evening performances of the Delmar. He was greeted by large crowds, girls predominating. It is estimated that more than 6,000 persons passed the Delmar doors while he was there.

Counsel for Famous Players has a copy of the Valentino remarks, but refused to discuss the matter yesterday.

The night of the dinner Lichtman declared the talk of the market closed. It has small producers was sponsored without definite reasons for making such a statement. For ten years, he said this type of business has stirred the business. In many cases caused 'near panic' among producers whose bankroll was not particularly extensive. That will never happen. I have keen in close touch with the boys in the field, and I can say truthfully that exhibitors are holding too open for independent pictures. They base this action on the kind of product they have secured from producers in the past.

Schuberg declared that the sentiment among independents on the coast was optimistic. He said exhibitors were encouraged by the reception given their pictures in important theaters and felt spurred on to make better films.

Fight "Music Trust" (Continued from Page 1)

It is the contention of the M. P. T. The methods of the Music Trust representatives, using their assumed advantage to browbeat and threaten exhibitors and other unbusinesslike elements, were detailed to the departments interested in the matter.

Why I Show Paramount Pictures

By G. A. Rea, Manager
THE COLONIAL
Washington C. H., Ohio

PARAMOUNT has the one Home Office that I know of that remembers the small town exhibitor, and Paramount is one company that I know of that remembers a small town exhibitor after he signs on the dotted line.

When I sold out at Hillsboro last July, Paramount was the only company to express regret, and here's a line that came from the Home Office that I will always remember—"Be assured of PARAMOUNT'S well wishes wherever you go."

I struck it lucky here. I was able to secure 22 of the 41, and believe me they are 22 without an Alibi. Here's a few of the knockouts I have of Silent Men," "Gilded Cage" and proud to announce "The Young Rajah" for my Thanksgiving attraction and "The Old Homestead" Xmas week
ALL WEEK. Oh boy! what pictures they are.

It's a great pleasure to exhibit a PARAMOUNT Picture. You know they are half sold before you begin. Any Paramount Picture is easier to sell than most any other SPECIAL and when you make a noise about a Paramount Special—Oh boy! how easy it is.

How I want the next 39! If I get PARAMOUNT just watch my dust.
Anyhow I am sure saving a date book full of open time and HOPING.

Issue Statement Informative of Change of Policy Caused "By Absolute Lack of Co-Operation" from Producers

The following statement was issued yesterday from the offices of the American Associated Booking Corp.:
"A change of policy has been adopted by A. B. C. due to certain conditions that the members think have made it necessary. The fact that these independent exhibitors have received an absolute lack of cooperation from most of the larger producers, despite the fact that they have demonstrated that they are ready and able to handle large productions, and the antagonism which has been shown by several of these producers who are financially and otherwise interested in opposition circuits has made it, in the opinion of the members, necessary to discard their first policy of remaining completely out of the distributing or producing end of the industry and they are now laying their plans for state right purchases of all suitable productions which they are offered.

"The immediate buying power of this group of first run exhibitors and the fact that immediate playing dates and cash returns are possible, make them a big factor in the New York State and Northern New Jersey territory.

"Immediate action along these lines is contemplated by this Corporation.

In some circles the announcement did not come as a surprise. The head of one distributing company commented, "It was to be expected."

Hays to Coast

Hays to be Make Hollywood an "Ideal Industrial Center"—Patten

Alas Tere

Will Hays is on his way to Hollywood. He is in Washington today, and will leave Chicago tomorrow night for the Coast. The purpose of this visit is definitely laid out in a statement which Hays issued before leaving, and which, in part, says:

Some months ago we have been planning to inaugurate such activities as our Association in Los Angeles, would make certain that the industry discharge its full duty in seeing to maintain a model industrial community not only as to the industry's own activities, but in its relations to the splendid community which it is a part.

The working conditions in the industry are very good, now, the idea of cooperation among the workers is much above the average, all the industry's activities already is a very definite and creditable part of the commercial and social fabric.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

For Film Daily, there was interested in my brother exhibitor's letter from Split Lip and I trouble he is having with the 'Richard Theater. I wonder if we could get together in some way, make a convention and exhibit here and do it. Do you think I could do the same of the big companies to buy vice.

A trouble is flapped with the Fox of Minneapolis, I played it. One of the big men in Reuben and Felson is a cousin of my first wife's aunt, and I played it on their concern and tied up with the Pillsbury people. They sent me two hundred signs reading "Eventually Why Now" and everyone came event.

Hollywood—Several productions are under way or in sight which will tell all about Hollywood. They will have spring release. And while they will not be made for the purposes of propaganda, at the same time they will include material which should help in a real way to show the serious side of picture folk and picture making.

Valentino Loses

Appellate Division Affirms Injunction Secured by Famous Players—Cannot Work Elsewhere

During Life of Contract

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday affirmed the order of the lower court without opinion, granting Famous Players-Lasky a temporary injunction against Valentino. There is no further appeal from this order.

This means that Valentino will either work for Famous Players during the remainder of the life of the contract, or not appear publicly either on the stage or in pictures until after Feb. 1, 1924, when the contract expires, although Famous has an option for one more year at an increased salary.

Valentino could not be reached yesterday for a statement as to the plans, and Arthur Butler Graham, his attorney, was reported out of the city.

As before noted, Valentino claimed that he was forced to undergo humiliation at the Lasky studio, and that Famous had broken the contract in regard to advertising him as a star.

Lubitsch Due

"Lab" Men Die

Manufacturers Urge Keeping Out Foreign Raw Stock—Courtland Smith Talks

How laboratory men have become bankers, and an appeal of manufacturers to the "lab" men to use American made raw materials in place of foreign material were the outstanding features of the several talks at the second annual dinner of the Allied Laboratories at Delmonico's Thursday night.

Courtland Smith, representing Will Hays, was the first speaker, and dwelt on the possibilities of the development of the industry in the production of films for non-theatrical use. He said that while there were 15,000 theaters showing pictures in this country, there were over 275,000 schools in which pictures would be shown in time, as well as...
“Lab” Men Dine

churches and other non theatrical institutions. Smith urged the formation of a huge advertising fund which should be used to publicize the industry as a whole, to the public.

General Charles H. Cole, who led the fight against censorship in Massachusetts, and who, incidentally, is an important executive of the Bay State Film Co., was greeted enthusiastically. He said he was a newcomer comparatively, in the field, but that he also saw vast opportunities in the non-theatrical field. It was his belief that in time 85 per cent of the homes of America would use a circulating library of films, just as today they received books from circulating libraries. The General believed that bankers should do the financing in the industry, and not the laboratory men, just as bankers finance all other reputable businesses.

Joseph Coram, one of the old-timers in the industry, also of Bay State, urged that the "lab" men use the American made raw stock in place of the foreign, and Jules E. Brulatour of the Eastman Kodak made the same point. The other speakers included publishers of the trade press.

THE ONLY ONE-REEL FEATURE

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

Tell down on another tie-up. I had up with the guy who owns grave-yard here. It was one the worst nights, by two dollars, I ever had. I guess my mind and I had at Split Lip is having the trouble I had at Danduff, Nebra, when I was in the Flour and business. I had quite a stock hand and was thinking of selling it, going to a city like Pneumonia opening the Elite. I hired a pub- lity man to write my advertisements, used to be with a big film company and got fired because he could not learn to spell his bosses name right. He wrote the damn ads so bad, I decided the shop was too active to sell, and stuck until business got so rotten, I had to close up. I had a conference with four visitors out here yesterday. We were going to follow the lead of the New York crowd and form a com- pany. They are from the following town:

Artemis, Pneumonia, Nev.

Clem Deneker, Pneumonia, Nev.

Dana Genster, Chafee, Idaho.

T. K. Bloom, Artmest, Nev.

Dean Hanf, Cutie, Colorado.

We started "Motion Picture Execs Protective League of the Al- set Far West." Our idea is to tip the other off on good stuff and give the other the low down on the bad bad. If the owner of the Smallest theater of Split Lip wants to come in, we be glad to consider him. I have eye on two other houses now. Union Pacific is willing to co- operate with me if I open at Roach, Neda, to the extent of renting me upper floor of the station. The Box office is not bad. Considering it. Wonder if I could get the Paramount crowd to come here on their way back from the east—if their policy isn't too drastic might tie up with them for my Sunday nights (when print sets in).

Sincerely,

Clem Deneker
Circuit Owner.
Putting It Over
Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over.
Send us your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Veterans Sold Tickets
Hartford, Conn.—Harry Needle, manager of the Princess arranged a tie-up with the American Legion, whereby the veterans were to receive a 20% cut of all tickets they sold for his run of "Sin Deep." Before the picture actually opened the Legion had disposed of 5,000 tickets, mostly to people who ordinarily might not have attended the picture show.

Signs on Newboys
Erie, Penn.—Manager Rainey of the Lyric sold a new stunt to help the run of "Night Life in Hollywood" when he had from 50 to 60 newboys work out in the picture house a week. The signs fitted the backs of the boys' coats and each sign was worded differently. The newboys could not read but.

Rainey arranged 24 store window tie-ups in addition to billing the town liberally.

All Dog Cast
Chicago—Manager McCurdy of the Randolph and Walter Hill, Universal exploiter, co-operated, in an easy effective stunt for showing of "Just Dogs." They sent out nearly 40,000 post cards with a picture showing a billboard and a row of dogs reading the lettering as follows: "Pols.—We are putting on a show all by ourselves. We call it 'Just Dogs'. Nobody in it but us dogs. All comedy. Dogs can't understand that. And anyway, young things like dogs oh yes! and a monkey. Just dogs — an all dog cast."

There was also a line on the card which read "this card will admit any child under 11 years free at any matinees during the entire showing."

"Silver Wings" Ideas
Indianapolis—The A-O-Jo, successfully exploited "Silver Wings," in the following manner:
Special paintings in a silver effect were made for the lobby frames in front of the house. This is the only advertising that could be used because of the narrowness of the lobby.
Window cards, placards on the front of the signal advertising cars and a large newspaper advertising cam-signs were used. Newspaper criticisms called this picture better than "Over the Hill." A microphone screen and stage was placed in the most conspicuous window in the city.

Two Singer sewing machines were used in very good locations were used for a sewing machine display. A machine fifty-two years old was found and placed in the window. It is one of the latest models and cards describing the display. A nine foot blue cloth with "Silver Wings" over it was hung upon it was run through the machine by a woman, apparently sewing the name "Silver Wings" over and over.

Is It Fair?

Second. You may be told that it was offered one feature only. There are three first run exhibitors in Denver, at least three of them having been willing to buy it, had he been given the chance, on the same terms that were paid by the fraternal organization now running it. Instead, the case exhibitor was given a chance by long distance telephone and within a day and a half to decide whether or not to pay $30,000 for a picture he had never seen.

Third. Won't the playing of big price pictures by long distance telephone and the like, if permitted, milk the productions before you make the public believe that the picture was played in motion picture houses?

Fourth. Is this your reward for the money you have spent for former Douglas Fairbanks productions, and for exploiting him, advertising him, and assisting him to the position of a star, whence he may turn his back on the exhibitor when he has a product like "Robin Hood"?

Fifth. If such a practice is permitted, what will happen to other producing companies do? What will happen to you if this practice becomes general?

What Are You Going to Do About It?
The Motion Picture Theater Owners of America have asked for an investigation into the practice of using our attorneys, Judge Murphy, to New York, to see Mr. Fairbanks' representatives but to no avail.

It is understood that Mr. Fairbanks is a part owner or shares in the profits of United Artists as a distributing organization, although United Artists do not get the distribution of this picture until Mr. Fairbanks has earned in some of the big centers — has taken off the cream, in other words, and then it will be ready for you as an exhibitor.

If he is willing to turn his back on an exhibitor because this is his big picture, productions, isn't it fair that you turn your back on him and consider this an interview, in which he comes to subsequent runs and puts your productions to the other productions distributed by that company?

This isn't a matter for Detroit alone. Already fraternal organizations in the state are planning to run big productions during the winter months and leave you free to buy them when they thero meter stands at the height of public interest.

If the cream goes to a non-theatrical exhibition and cuts into your investment, then it's a matter for all of us, as exhibitors.

The circular also contains a cartoon showing John Fairbanks acting as a waiter and serving a big turkey to a stout prosperity, labeled "Fraternal organizations," and a thin waiter tagged "United Artists" serving a hungry looking individual tagged "Mr. Exhibitor in a Nate." The caption indicates that the Fraternal Organizations "have the goods on the industry," and is telling "Mr. Exhibitor" that the "transient gentleman has been served the best."

Suggestion to Exhibitors
The National Committee, for Better Films affiliated with the National Board of Review submits this Christmas plan to exhibitors: It suggests that they single out the names and address of the persons who come to express appreciation, to the National Committee at 70 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C., with $2 for each name. A cover membership for the persons thus enrolled as Associate Members will receive Christmas greetings with a membership card, a copy of the magazine to be given to the donor and, to the Committee's publications, "Film Progress" and "Exceptional Photo-Graphs." This action will stimulate interest in better pictures, and help key up communities to watch for selected films.

"Ideal Industrial Center."
We are going to make certain that everything that is possible to be done shall be done by the industry to make the activity of the motion picture business in that territory constitute an ideal industrial center, with the very best possible relationships within its own ranks, between the producers themselves, between the producers and employees, between the industry and the public, with the fullest use of all the approved and recognized best methods in industrial community life.

This, I hope, will be one of the steps in the development of the fullest confidence and cooperation within the industry itself, in all its branches, and between the industry and the public.

The inevitable consequent results from the development of the situation along these lines, which will be reflected in many ways, of course, including the quality of the picture product.

"Something like 75 per cent of our motion pictures are produced in Los Angeles, and it is an interregnum in the fact that not generally known that the third largest industry in Los Angeles County is food production, which spent last year about $92,000,000 with a weekly payroll of $260,000; the second largest industry is petroleum, which spent last year $104,000,000, with a weekly payroll of $333,000 and probably one fourth of the oil produced in the country last year was produced in Los Angeles County.

The largest industry in Los Angeles County is motion picture industry, which spent last year nearly $140,000,000, with a weekly payroll of over $600,000. This makes, of course, the motion picture industry of the importance commercially there, and places upon the industry a definite responsibility in the commercial and community life of that section."

Popularity of “Tess” Should Extend Through Generations

MARTIN J. QUIGLEY, in Following Review, Says New Pickford Film “Will Go on Year After Year, and Is Deserving of It”

Comment on Mary Pickford’s “Tess” might properly be confined to a few words. With equal correctness, volumes might be written. It is necessary only to say that what “Way Down East” was to the stage for several generations, “Tess” will be to the screen. On the other hand, a huge task would be encountered if one were to set out to deal fully and consistently with this production. It would take a deft wielder of words indeed to do justice to the consummate art of Miss Pickford except in a very lengthy document.

We shall not be surprised if Miss Pickford’s new production of the famous story of “Tess of the Storm Country” becomes the most popular picture ever made. We do not view it as one of those sensational and timely successes which creates a great furor for a moment and then quickly shifts away to make room for another similar sky-rocket hit. This picture is almost here to stay; it will go on year after year—and it is eminently deserving of it!

How has this miracle of the amusement world come about? The answer is chiefly Mary Pickford and partly John Robertson, one of the most able men in the directorial profession. And Miss Pickford, great as she is, has by no means attempted to carry the story alone. On the contrary, she has surrounded herself with a cast of even merit and a tremendously fine production. There are a number of views of sheer gorgeousness and the whole production is decidedly creditable.

In the first place, “Tess” is an ideal story for Miss Pickford. It is difficult to conceive that there has been or that there will be another story which suits her so well and to which she is so well suited.

We think that this new “Tess” should be scrutinized by the most lteroy,” for instance, was a worthy attempt but the result was not altogether satisfactory. In “Tess,” however, there are no lights and shades; she is brilliant throughout.

Miss Pickford’s “Tess” is a human story that points a fine moral but the moralizing effect is accomplished automatically and without any sacrifice of entertainment. It is a story that is brimful of sentiment, pathos and humor. It is, perhaps, not the sort of thing that drama league enthusiasts get excited about nor yet is it what the ultra-sophisticated seek in the theatre. But we doubt that there is any normal person from nine years to ninety who cannot find in it great interest, entertainment and inspiration. If there be such the wrong is with them and not with the picture.

The story is a real test of the leading player’s skill. From the start as a rollicking waif she is quickly swept through almost the entire gamut of human emotions and nowhere does she falter in the least. She brings a tear or a laugh with equal facility and in her tragic moments she is awe-inspiring.

The picture is beautifully executed. There is a great deal of pictorial charm about it and there is a very graphic impress of technically fine direction upon it. For Mr. Robertson it comes as a worthy successor to his splendid achievements in “Peter Ibbetson” and “Sentimental Tommy.”

The supporting members of the cast measure up to the responsibilities of their selection. Lloyd Hughes as the “hill-topper” who succumbs to Tess’ charms presents a manly and sympathetic figure. David Torrance as his father is splendid. Other very good characterizations are given by Jean Hersholt, Forrest Robinson and Robert Russell. The photography by Charles Rosher is distinctly notable.

Maurice Tourneur presents
“LORNA DOONE”
Ass. First Nat’l Pict.

DIRECTOR .................. Maurice Tourneur
AUTHOR ...................... R. D. Blackmore
SCENARIO BY .......... Katherine Speer Reed, Cecil G. Mumford and Wyndham Gittens
CAMERAMAN ............ Unusually beautiful production
AS A WHOLE .......... Unusually beautiful production STORY ............. Blackmore’s popular romantic melodrama splendidly visualized; development rather anti-climactic DIRECTION ...... Very good; certainly gave story delightful production, but the interest does lag slightly at times
PHOTOGRAPHY ............ Excellent
LIGHTINGS ................. Fine
PLAYERS ........ Madge Bellamy a pensive and appealing Lorna; John Bowers the romantic hero; others Frank Keenan, Norris Johnson and Donald MacDonald
EXTERIORS ......... Many exquisitely beautiful shots
INTERIORS ........ Very good
DETAIL ................... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY .... Girl held captive by outlaws is freed upon death of leader and after numerous adventures is happy with her childhood sweetheart
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 6,200 feet

Certainly Maurice Tourneur must be commended for the very beautiful production which he has accorded R. D. Blackmore’s famous novel and as an artistic endeavor “Lorna Doone” is entitled to a prominent place in the list of productions notable for their pictorial appeal. With the cooperation of Henry Sharp, Tourneur presents a picture that is unusually good to look at and that unfolds its story in a series of pictures, many of which suggest gorgeous pastels. The settings are unique and always excellently photographed. The soft tones and suggestions of soft focus often enhance the natural beauty of set.

The adaptation of the novel does not make quite as thrilling an entertainment as might be expected, although there are many good action bits in the picture, starting with the hold-up and ending with John Ridd’s capture and killing of Carver Doone. Perhaps Tourneur started the story off at too fast a pace and the material would not warrant a continuance of it. Then there are two prominent anti-climax in the story. This also causes the interest to lag for a time even though the director quickly gets into the next sequence and regains the interest.

The first episode ends with the rescue of Lorna by John from Carver Doone and the second is the attack upon Lorna’s life after she has forfeited her right to a title in order to marry John. It is after this last anti-climax there follows some fast action and fine thrills in the attack of John and the townsfolk on the Doone outlaws. This battle has been lavishly staged and offers genuine thrills. Probably the most spectacular bit is the christening of the prince where John meets his childhood sweetheart, now Lady Lorna, but returns to his home realizing that he is not equal in birth.

Madge Bellamy is very appealing as Lorna and John Bowers does good work as John Ridd, although he is not quite the romantic hero that Blackmore pictures him. The others in the cast all do good work.

Story: Captured in childhood by Sir Enson Doone, an exiled nobleman who is head of an outlaw band, Lady Lorna Dugal returns to her rightful place upon the death of Enson. She gives up her title to marry John Ridd, but is shot by the jealous Carver Doone, who is later killed by Ridd.

Story is Popular Enough to Get Them Interested

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“Lorna Doone” as a novel has been a popular favorite for so long that it should have fine possibilities as a picture entertainment. Everyone nearly is familiar with R. D. Blackmore’s story so that you can appeal to both young and old and feel sure that it will reach them all. You can go the limit on promises for pictorial appeal. They rarely see such beauty in scenic investiture and “Lorna Doone” certainly has it.

First National has prepared such an extensive press sheet it should only be necessary for you to make use of the ideas contained in it to put the picture over. The title is your big drawing power, pictorial appeal next and the name of the director. At the Strand the makers of Lorna Doone crackers were giving away samples. You might be able to arrange the same tie-up.

SCENARIO BY ............... Josephine Lovett
CAMERAMAN .................. Ernest Hallor

AS A WHOLE...... Really very interesting if for no other reason than the star's performance

STORY...... From the stage play; has been very nicely handled and attractively mounted

DIRECTION...... Quite smooth and uses material to good advantage; an attractive production on the whole

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. First rate
LIGHTINGS .................. Good

STAR...... Always interesting and does exceedingly fine work in role she originated on stage

SUPPORT...... Also very good. Includes David Powell, the lead; others Mary MacLaren, William Powell and Charles Wellesley

EXTERIORS .................. Not many INTERIORS ................. Some rather elaborate
DETAIL ..................... Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Girl saved from street by man she falls in love with and finally wins despite his love for another

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 7,390 feet

Elsie Ferguson's work is so thoroughly absorbing that it doesn't make very much difference with the story of "The Outcast," a not wholly logical regeneration theme, which nevertheless makes for a good entertainment under careful treatment. The star's performance as Miriam, a model forced to desperation through the death of her baby and deserted by her husband, is the chief point of interest. It is not so much as Miriam, the model, as it is Miriam, the partner of Geoffrey Sherwood, that the star does her best work. Her efforts to win the love of the man who saved her are delightfully portrayed, and you are forced to sympathize with her no matter how contrary you may feel toward her attempts to win a man who apparently does not appreciate how fine she is. Her many admirers will be delighted with her work in "Outcast."

The story has been adapted from the stage play in which Miss Ferguson was also starred. The scenario conforms closely to the original, and it is smoothly told and developed in a fashion that keeps the ending entirely oblivious. The elements of popular appeal that are included in the theme are drama, love interest and interesting characterization all coherently worked out and touched off with slight but wholesome humor.

The picture has been splendidly mounted, and yet Director Withey has not taken advantage of some opportunities where he might have included a lot of elaborate settings and used up footage in presenting cabaret shows and the usual trimmings that are supposed to dress up a picture. "Outcast" didn't need it and it was good judgment not to include it. There are many attractive settings, however, and Withey brings the story to a fairly thrilling climax in the last minute rescue of the heroine by the man who eventually realizes that he loves her. The airplane stuff is real, but Withey evidently didn't want to go to the expense of chartering a real ocean liner so they have used shots of a miniature for this.

The star is supported by a fine cast headed by David Powell, who is also an interesting performer. Mary MacLaren is suitable as the other girl and William Powell has a minor part which he handles capably.

Story: Abandoned by her husband, Miriam is forced to "go on the street." She has reverses, but meets Geoffrey Sherwood, a dissipated young man, determined to "go to the dogs" because he was jilted. How Miriam reforms him and finally wins his love is told in the rest.

Make Promises For Star's Performance. They'll Surely Like Her

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The big thing in exploiting "Outcast" is to let them know about the performance of Elsie Ferguson. You may be sure they are going to like her as Miriam, the outcast. Use plenty of stills of her in your lobby, and by all means let your women folks know about the wonderful array of costumes which she wears in the picture. This will certainly get them in.

Play up the climax when Miriam is saved from drowning by a seaplane. David Powell is a well liked leading man. Also use his name and that of Mary MacLaren. Make sure to get them interested in the picture because it should satisfy. Appeal especially in favor of the star and say that she appeared in the stage play as well. A trailer of some of the attractive restaurant scenes and those showing the star in beautiful costumes will be one sure means of bringing them back.
"BREAKING HOME TIES" is an inspiring drama of hearts and the home, rivaling in its widespread appeal the strength of "Humoresque."

Its cast is nothing short of perfect to portray the various roles:

LEE KOHLMAR    RICHARD FARRELL
BETTY HOWE      REBECCA WEINTRAUB
JANE THOMAS     ARTHUR ASHLEY
MAUDE HILL      HENRY B. SCHAEFFER

Inspired by the opening words of the heart song of centuries, "Eili, Eili," the most poignant melody ever conceived of hearts, life and love.

Written, directed and produced by FRANK N. SELTZER and GEORGE K. ROLANDS.

Recommended with enthusiastic confidence for all ages and classes of people, for it deals with life as we live it and concerns the things we all know.
Theory of Rejuvenation Exploited in Vehicle That is Good For Chaney

“A BLIND BARGAIN”
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ................. Wallace Worsley
AUTHOR .................... Barry Pain
SCENARIO BY .............. J. G. Hawks
CAMERAMAN ................ Norbert Brodin

AS A WHOLE......Deals with recently discussed theory of rejuvenation; not a pleasant theme but may appeal to some

STORY........Provides first rate vehicle for Lon Chaney, who plays a double role; at times quite gruesome

DIRECTION....Adequate; makes atmosphere even a little too realistic at times

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Good
LIGHTINGS ................... All right
PLAYERS......Lon Chaney displays a few of his “thousand faces” to advantage in this; others Raymond McKee and Jacqueline Logan

EXTERIORS .................. Suitable
INTERIORS ................... Satisfactory
DETAIL ...................... All right

CHARACTER OF STORY......Scientist’s desire to prove theory of rejuvenation leads to his death at the hands of one of his unfortunate subjects

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,500 feet

The newspapers have been so full lately of the idea of monkey glands restoring youth to the aged that it is probably more or less timely for a film story based on the theory. Such is “The Blind Bargain,” a theme that is thoroughly appropriate and suitable for Lon Chaney, providing him with two distinct roles in which he is given plenty of opportunities to live up to his reputation as “a man with a thousand faces.” Both as the mad scientist and the hunchback, a result of one of the doctor’s experiments, Chaney displays his ability to handle grotesque characterization. Those who like his particular type of portrayal will find plenty to satisfy them in “The Blind Bargain.”

On the other hand the picture may be too gruesome for many. The mysterious movements of the physician in his plans for experiments on human subjects is not especially wholesome and the sequence in which he prepares to use the young hero of the story as another experiment is certainly likely to cause chills more than anything else. The series of mysterious passageways leading to the doctor’s experimental quarters are equally uncanny and also the scenes showing the compartments where he keeps in hiding the humans ruined through his tests. The subjects themselves are not shown. The strangling of the doctor by the ape just as he is about to perform another operation isn’t a very pleasant touch.

Director Worsley has shown good judgment in the handling of the situations and he doesn’t strive to overdo things usually although the atmosphere at times is a trifle too real. The tensility of the theme is slightly relieved by the ball room scene which is very attractive and delicately colored.

Besides the good work of Chaney, there is also a first rate performance by Raymond McKee, the hero of the story who is willing to submit to one of the doctor’s operations in return for the doctor’s saving the life of his mother. Jacqueline Logan is pretty and the remainder of the cast quite adequate.

Story: In his effort to perfect a scientific operation aimed to create a race possessed of eternal youth, Dr. Lamb has used human beings for his experiments. Among the unfortunate ones ruined by his experiments is a hunchback who warns a youth, Robert, against agreeing to submit to an operation in return of the doctor’s promise to care for his sick mother. How Robert is saved from a similar fate by the hunchback and the doctor meets his death at the hands of an ape, also a part of the experiment, completes the story.

Let Them Know What it is About And of The Unusual Order of Thrills

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is plenty to exploit in this one if you care to go after the patronage. But you will first have to take into consideration the people you cater to and decide whether or not such a story as that contained in “The Blind Bargain” will appeal to them. To be on the safe side, if you do show it, make it clear just what it is about. Use catchlines explaining the sacrifice of the young man who was willing to submit to a scientific operation to save his mother’s life—his life for her’s.

Those who like thrills of an unusual order will find plenty to satisfy them in the picture and you might take advantage of the recently discussed monkey gland operations to get them interested. “The Blind Bargain” is a good title and should be easy to exploit. Of course let them know about Lon Chaney’s work and his grotesque role of the hunchback.
Unreal Characterizations and Heaps of Sentiment Plus a Fair Enough Thrill

"THE TOWN THAT FORGOT GOD"

Fox

DIRECTOR ......................... Harry Millarde
AUTHOR ............................ Mr. X
SCENARIO BY ................. Paul Sloan
CAMERAMAN .................... Joseph Ruttenberg

Millarde’s storm episode does furnish a thrill but it is a question whether or not it would be successful without the aid of the orchestra and mechanical effects back stage that are a prominent part of showing at this point. While the men in the pit pound away, the stage hands supply any crashing effects that the musicians miss, and all the time the screen is flooded with intermittent lights from the sides of the stage. This all helps to make Millarde’s storm thrilling but without outside assistance it is doubtful if these shots can compare with some of the storms shown in much more ordinary scenes, with no pretense of a “special.” Millarde shows his storm in short shots that are visibly mechanical. A dam is supposed to break but instead of a steadily approaching torrent you are shown down-pours from all sides. There are few realistic long shots.

The story is supposed to be a bit of real life and while the thread is plausible it is highly implausible in the way it is told, with every little detail stressed beyond probability. It is chiefly narrative, starting with the marriage of a young teacher to a surveyor and the disappointment of the half-wit lover (annoyingly portrayed by Warren Krech who is given all manner of close-ups showing his eyes dilated and his mouth wide open). Before the long cheerless process of making the couple’s boy an orphan is commenced, you are treated to some delightful school room comedy, the only really light, pleasing scenes in the picture. Then comes the death of the husband, followed by the death of the mother who is criticized by the school committee because her super-intelligent child knows more than the others.

The agonizing loneliness of the bookworm boy who seeks consolation in stories of Washington and Lincoln, until the hard hearted squire destroys the book, is depicted by Bunny Grauer, an unchildish player, who suffers convincingly enough especially when he tries to save his mother’s chair from the auctioneer. Following the flood in which the half-wit lover rescues the boy, there is a lapse of about twenty years covered in one title and the next thing you know young Davey is a man, married, prosperous and dedicating schools and churches to his mother’s memory. If ever there was a lad with a mind as old as Davey’s he would be worth knowing.

Not Worth The Price of a Special—if You Have it Coming That’s Different

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It isn’t fair to the exhibitor to get him to contract for a series of specials and ask the same price for "Nero" and "Monte Cristo" on the one hand and "Who Are My Parents" and "The Town That Forgot God," on the other. Both groups of two are in widely different classes from every standpoint. An exhibitor could not honestly make the same fuss about the showing of "The Town That Forgot God" as he would about "Monte Cristo." His patrons wouldn’t stand for it in the first place. There is something radically wrong in this arrangement.

As an entertainment "The Town That Forgot God" may appeal to a very unsophisticated crowd or those who like sentiment piled on thick with little relief in the way of any counterbalancing element. Where they like thrills and you think the storm and flood scenes will send them out satisfied you may go to it. If you can supply the same effects used in the Broadway presentation you will be in a fair way to getting your audience all keyed up to break into applause.

LIGHTINGS ..................... Fair
PLAYERS....... A satisfactory cast and quite capable; Edward Earle, Barbara Castleton, Anders Randolph and Leslie King
EXTERIORS ................... Satisfactory
INTERIORS ..................... Ordinary
DETAIL ...................... Too much of it
CHARACTER OF STORY .... Man who became rich by robbing another of life's savings is confronted by latter's son years later

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............
For a certain class of patronage, and one that numbers a pretty large percentage of the picture-going public, "The Streets of New York" will probably prove a thoroughly acceptable offering, and it may also make a profitable return for both exhibitor and producer. All of which is to say that it contains the sort of situations and atmosphere that goes big with a good many and as far as this particular crowd is concerned, it can probably be termed "sure-fire" stuff.
But the picture's appeal stops there. It won't reach the better class clientele. They are already completely fed up on the very familiar variety of melodramatic hokum that is contained in "The Streets of New York." It is a most commonplace "movie" concoction that has already been done so many times that you know just what to expect from the start. Almost every conceivable twist and situation that has ever been used is found in the story, and it gets around to all the emotional elements that you could think of.

The theme in the main is the old oppression idea, in which the rich man who has gained his wealth and position by preying upon the poor, stealing their hard earned savings and playing the popular hard-hearted landlord, is eventually exposed and meets his just reward in a tragic death.
But to arrive at this climax there are any number of side-tracks which are intended to build up a strong sympathy for the oppressed and a tense hate for the oppressor. The poor old woman who was bereft of her husband and her fortune through the false dealings of the rich man suffers and suffers. Hers is just one slap of hard luck after another, and you can't always feel sorry for her, especially when, after receiving $500 to pay for an operation that will cure her crippled son, she strolls leisurely along in a crowd with the precious bills carried carelessly in a hand-bag and the bag is "picked."
Burton King uses altogether too much footage, and toward the close the story drags very badly. He does work up a thrilling climax and a frightful storm once more helps to make a fight more exciting. The wicked rich man meets his death in a tragic fashion, while out of the chaos blooms a love between his daughter and the son of the man he had robbed.
Edward Earle and Barbara Castleton do good work in this and the cast, on the whole, is ample and quite satisfactory. Others who do very well are Anders Randolph, Kate Blancke, Dorothy Mackail and Leslie King.

Will Do Very Well if You Know They Like This Type of Meller

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Consider your own particular patronage before you decide on this one. You know whether or not a story of this type appeals to them. If you know you can please them with it, exploitation should be easy. The title is first rate and can be used to splendid advantage and in a fine variety of stunt advertisements. A good musical accompaniment is essential for your showing.

You might play up the idea of the rich man's gain and the poor man's loss and the usual order of catchlines will let them know all they need to about the plot. Of the players' names use Barbara Castleton and Edward Earle. A trailer of the climax showing the shack tumbling down into the river would very likely get them back.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Jealous mother takes son away from girl he loves but tries to win her back to save him when he falls in love with a married woman

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,462 feet

There is a good deal in the idea that—a mother trying to prevent her only son from falling in love—because it has been known to happen in life. It is doubtful, however, if any mother ever succeeded in carrying it as far as Mrs. Newell does with her young son Oliver in "Forsaking All Others." At any rate Mary Lerner's story offers good screen material and the picture will undoubtedly please a good many because it is light, played by an attractive cast and contains a well sustained interest that should hold them to the end.

Emile Chautard has handled the material to good advantage and succeeded in holding the interest very well despite the slight situations. Through skilful treatment and many good touches he makes a good deal out of very little. The opening shots are very attractive. You are shown Oliver, at an early age, already causing his mother anxiety because she finds him playing with the doctor's niece, Penelope Fearing, destined to be the cause of Oliver's eventual separation from his mother. There were plenty of opportunities for extreme exaggeration in the theme, but Chautard has not been tempted to overdo it. The idea might easily have become very foolish if the mother were shown hanging on her son's heels at every turn. Instead, her method of keeping him to herself is more logical. She invites him to spend a "musical evening" with her instead of going over to Penelope's to return her handkerchief. Her excuse is that it must first be laundered.

The sequence in which Oliver becomes infatuated with a married woman in the hotel to which his mother takes him when she fears he is falling in love with Penelope, offers some good situations and there's a good bit of suspense when Oliver is nearly discovered in the woman's rooms by her jealous husband.

Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis make a delightful couple as Penelope and Oliver, and May Wallace is a fine type for the mother. June Elvidge is the other woman, and Sam Degrasse is the doctor who hopes to some day win the hand of Oliver's mother.

Story: When Mrs. Newell discovers that she has made matters worse by taking Oliver away from Penelope, she begs the girl to help her win him away from Mrs. Morton. Penelope finally agrees and there is a surprise twist in the ending which brings about the reunion of Penelope and Oliver.

Pleasing Players and New Mother Love Angle Can Be Exploited

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors can satisfy the average audience with "Forsaking All Others." It is a satisfying feature of short-length and will hold their attention throughout. There is good exploitation possibilities in the theme, and you might make extra mention of the new angle on the mother love theme. Let them know that it is about a mother who was jealous of her son's love for his childhood sweetheart.

Use the names of Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis and the title can be used in connection with catchlines. There are attractive posters for your announcements, and you can secure a trailer if you know your folks can be attracted by this means of announcing your coming showings. Let them know that the story appeared in Collier's weekly and that Mary Lerner wrote it.
Good Audience Appeal in Agnes Ayres' "A Daughter of Luxury"

Agnes Ayres in
"A DAUGHTER OF LUXURY"
Paramount

DIRECTOR ......................... Paul Powell
AUTHORS...... Leonard Merrick and Michael Morton
SCENARIO BY ............... Beulah Marie Dix
CAMERAMAN ................. Bert Baldridge
AS A WHOLE....... Fairly good entertainment that will appeal to a majority; not very well con- structed, however STORY..... Will please a typical "fan" audience in all probability; has a choppy continuity DIRECTION....... May not be responsible for the big jumps; it looks as though a poor cutter had done the damage
PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Very good
LIGHTINGS ..................... All right
STAR .................. Quite pleasing except in first reel SUPPORT........ Suitable but not distinguished; includes Tom Gallery; Sylvia Ashton, Edward Martindel, Zasu Pitts and others
EXTERIORS ..................... Few
INTERIORS ................. Good to look at usually
DETAIL ....................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY.... Heiress, temporarily "broke," masquerades as heiress and eventually wins the one she loves
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,538 feet

There is sufficient in "A Daughter of Luxury" to make it an appealing number for a majority of picture audiences. They will find it a satisfying entertainment even though the more critical ones are probably going to find fault with certain points of both story and production. The points of appeal include the masquerade of a girl, in reality an heiress, but temporarily "broke." She is introduced as an heiress and immediately becomes very much patronized by a family whose only salvation is a rich wife for their son. The complications are interesting and sometimes amusing. Incidentally a pleasing love interest is developed in the romance of the son who really falls in love with the "heiress," but doesn't propose to her for fear she will think that he is merely following his folks' wishes while on the contrary he wants her for herself and not her money.

Robert Schable helps along with a humorous touch now and then when his position—the instigator of the girl's masquerade— is made precarious through the possibility of the truth being found out. The arrival of his wife and the real heiress provides some amusement and works the story to its climax.

Agnes Ayres is quite charming in the role and will please her admirers. In the first reel she wears her hair very unbecomingly, and it is certainly her "crowning glory." Tom Gallery isn't just the right type for the star's opposite, but he does good work and the supporting cast, on the whole, is capable.

Director Powell has provided a good production and it may be that he is not entirely responsible for the choppy development of the story. It looks very much as though an inexperienced cutter had been given the job of reducing the feature to the less than five reels that was shown at the Rialto.

Story: Mary Fenton is penniless while she awaits the result of a lawsuit which ties up her inheritance. She is befriended by Charlie Owen, who introduces her as his sister-in-law, Mary Gosgrove, when she is discovered in his room. The complications which this leads to are many, but the ending is the same—Mary falls in love and everything ends happily.

Star's Name And Title Afford Good Advertising
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a pretty fair audience picture and undoubtedly will please a good majority. Besides the name of the star you can exploit the title, which affords interesting angles for advertising, and let them know that the story deals with an heiress who masqueraded as one and found the man she loved. Catchlines would go very well. Say: "Ever hear of a penniless heiress? Agnes Ayres was rich, but she wasn't. Find the solution in 'A Daughter of Luxury' at the blank theater."

Paramount's exploitation suggestions are complete and should suffice to get your folks interested. The press sheet will give you all the information you should need to get it over. Stills of the star in the lobby should attract, and let your women folks know she wears many very attractive gowns in "A Daughter of Luxury."
A Fair Picture With a Thoroughly Appealing Star

Helen Jerome Eddy in
"WHEN LOVE COMES"
Film Booking Offices

DIRECTOR .................. William A. Seiter
AUTHOR ..................... Ray Carroll
SCENARIO BY ............... Winifred Dunn
CAMERAMAN ................. Lucien Andriot

AS A WHOLE......Average feature that has pleasing past to recommend it but is more or less commonplace otherwise

STORY........No new situations but the old ones are pretty well handled and will appeal to some

DIRECTION......Does fairly well with rather weak material and uses players to good advantage; didn't spend much on production

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. All right
LIGHTINGS .................. Good
STAR........Appealing and good sympathetic type SUPPORT.......Harrison Ford splendid lead; others Claire Dubray, Fannie Midgley, Joseph Bell
EXTERIORS .................. Suitable
INTERIORS .................. Adequate
DETAIL ...................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY......Sacrifice of girl who gives up sweetheart to take care of family but is later reunited with him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 4,800 feet

Considering the fact that apparently very little has been spent upon it and the situations are all more or less familiar, "When Love Comes" manages to come out pretty near the average mark, due probably to Seiter's efforts and the work of a competent and pleasing cast. With the exception of the salaries of players, the picture doesn't show much of an expenditure. Even the flood hasn't been worked up into a thrill, a very poor miniature serving for the breaking of the dam. This is about the only chance Seiter had to spend, but probably the rest of the picture wasn't considered worthy of an expense for this bit.

Ray Carroll didn't think up any very original situations when he chose a young small town girl for his heroine and a good looking engineer for his hero, and then brought about the death of the girl's father to prevent her marrying the fellow. Duty came first and she stayed to take care of her brothers and sisters, making the sacrifice by pretending she loved another. The rest is the old story of hero returning years later to find her still unwed. Of course he has a wife by this time, but a flood takes her life in time for a happy ending. The plot is a very simple one, and not as sympathetic as it is intended to be. You do feel sorry for the homespun heroine, but not deeply.

The small town atmosphere is, as is usually the case, greatly overdone. The townspeople are exaggerated types and they "fall" for the sad tale of the hero's faithless wife as though they knew all their lives, at the same time condemning the young girl who has grown up in their midst and who they know to be of fine character. Helen Jerome Eddy is the right one for the part and she is very wholesome and appealing.

The picture looks as though it had undergone considerable cutting, and it has not been done any too well. There are big jumps in the continuity. One bit of detail that can be fixed before it is sent out for general distribution is a short sequence following hero's kissing his baby good night. They forgot to tint it for night. Folk are going to wonder what happened. Either a change in titles or tinting is necessary to make it run smoothly here.

Usual Announcements Will Take Care of It Adequately

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"When Love Comes" is all right for the average audience, but it is just an ordinary attraction and contains nothing that will warrant promises or special exploitation. It has a theme that may appeal more particularly to some audiences, and if you cater largely to women folks, you can probably satisfy them well enough with it.

Where Helen Jerome Eddy happens to be popular you might use her name extensively, letting them know she is starred in this. Her name and that of Harrison Ford are your best points of appeal because the story doesn't suggest any particular exploitation and catchlines will take care of the usual announcements. Say: "Would you sacrifice love for duty? One girl nearly missed happiness through her desire to fulfill a duty. See 'When Love Comes' at the blank theater."
Another Poor Vehicle for John Gilbert

DETAIL ...................Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Deals with time when California was under Mexican flag; romance of a girl in love with man who would not fight the invasion
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .........3,892 feet

John Gilbert is running in a streak of decidedly poor luck when it comes to starring vehicles. His last three pictures, “Calvert’s Valley,” “The Love Gambler” and the current release have offered him little opportunities to increase his popularity and undoubtedly “A California Romance” is the weakest of the three. The only good feature of the picture is a very attractive old California atmosphere but that is hardly sufficient to make a satisfying offering.

The plot is a most meagre one and unoriginal.
There is no suspense and what little action they arrive at toward the end is of the helter skelter variety with the smoke from guns making it look like a big fight; but with all the firing no one is seen dropping. They must have been playing with blanks without pretending it was the real things. If this climax was ever intended to furnish a thrill it was a mighty weak attempt. Director Storm has done so many better things that the weakness of this is all the more surprising.

And again it looks as though the production has undergone considerable renovation since the director finished with it. They apparently started out to make a serious dramatic romance and realizing the weakness of it, with the aid of some typically Ralph Spence subtitles have turned it into a burlesque with the result that it is neither good drama nor burlesque either.
The title writer strives hard enough to make the more dramatic bits amusing and when the Mexican bad man plans to hold up the American troops coming to invade the place, you are given a shot of Canyon Pass with the explanation that it is “nature’s gift to the scenario writer.” It is doubtful if much of the intented humor will reach the public. It’s fair enough for those familiar with the picture business but the others probably won’t get it. The line of comedy runs like “shoot him in the plaza” and other similar so-called “wise cracks.”

John Gilbert could do something worth while if they’d only give him the chance. Estelle Taylor is adequate as Donna Dolores and George Seigmann is a good villain.

Better Not Make Promises For This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can’t do very much with this one unless you know they aren’t particular and you don’t have to worry about the way they feel after they have seen it.
“A California Romance” sounds good as a title but this one case where the title is much more attractive that the picture it names.

If it happens that John Gilbert has gained a following you might interest them by using his name although the picture probably won’t make him any more popular. If they would only secure some worth while stories for him he would have a fair chance to win the public. Stills in the lobby will be enough to let them know what the story is about and you can also say that Estelle Taylor is in the picture. Go easy on promises.

Short Stuff

"Plunder"—Pearl White—Pathe
Type of production........................................15 episode serial
Pearl White, the first to create the vogue of serial pictures, with "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" and numerous others, has come back in this Pathe serial, "Plunder." And all the regulation serial stunts are there, together with the scheming black-moustached villain and the tall good-looking hero. If your folks like serials at all, they will surely be pleased with this one. The stunts come thick and fast and the action is speedy in the extreme. Plausibility of story there is none. But that is not to be expected in serials. The plot in the main deals with the discovery of buried treasure of colossal value underneath a big building in New York City. The villain, Deering, played by Harry Semels, learns of the treasure and attempts to buy the outstanding stock, some of which Pearl owns. She is about to sell her interest when a mysterious young man who goes by the name of "Jones" steps out of the wall and warns her not to sell. Jones is played by Warren Kech, who fills the role of the enigmatic hero very nicely. Shortly after, Pearl is lured to the home of Richard Gale, one of the stockholders. After a struggle, she rushes to the roof and leaping over a wall crashes through a skylight in another house. Making her way to the street and grabbing a taxi, she finds Deering inside the cab with her. Again and again she escapes and "the villain still pursues her."

The story written by Bertram Millhauser closes each episode at an exciting moment. George B. Seitz has directed and produced the serial, which affords plenty of thrills and then some. A good deal of money seems to have been spent on the production and there are some good interiors. Altogether, a good serial.

"Social Errors"—C. C. Burr—Hodkinson
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
While not overburdened with hilarity, this comedy yields a few good laughs, and one or two hair-raising stunts. The settings and characters are familiar, a hotel, a cab, a reporter, a bogus count who is one of a gang of thieves, a social climber, and her crude husband, and their pretty daughter. Most of the fun is created by husband's difficulties with a dress suit trousers, which he nearly loses in a big ballroom scene, and his sleep-walking through the hotel lobby corridors and rooms, frustrating a burglary. He delivers a thrill when he balances himself on the edge of a roof, and is pushed down an air shaft. Considerable slapstick, and some coarseness in the elusive trousers passages. In the cast are Flora Finch, Charles Murray, Mary Anderson and Raymond McKee.

"Ben-Her"—F. B. C.
Type of production........................................1 reel novelty
Motion picture reviewers are not the only ones who find fault with film productions. The public has its own opinion, and a good many who like to pick pictures apart from various angles will probably get a good laugh out of "Ben-Her," a short reel novelty, that is a bit of parody on the customary introductory titles of a feature film. The subject consists of a number of titles all intended to burlesque the usual titles, introducing director, cameraman, producers, etc., such as one: Art Director—didn't show up. The reel is likely to hand a good many laughs. Some more illustrations would make it interesting, but the idea is good and might be carried out in another similar offering.

"The Law of the Sea"—Tales of the Fish Patrol—Universal
Type of production........................................2 reel drama
Jack London's "Tales of the Fish Patrol," being released periodically by Universal, makes excellent material for houses that like two reel dramas. "The Law of the Sea" contains plenty of action, excellent photography and the suspense has been well handled. This series will undoubtedly draw those who like London's stories, and they will not be disappointed. A good cast includes Jack Mulhall, Louise Lorraine, Robert Gray and John Wallace. The Chinaman, Yellow Handkerchief, seeks to make peace with Big Alek so they may take advantage of the run of salmon on Sunday, a day on which fish might not be legally netted. Le Grant of the Fish Patrol hears of the plot and manages to catch the poachers with their own nets.

"Newly Rich"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy Snub Pollard as chauffeur to a family which is struggling up the social ladder, beats the butler to the hand of the pretty daughter in the first reel of "Newly Rich." The second reel shows them living with the bride's parents where the bridegroom bathes in rose water and little luxuries like that. Then comes a dinner dance at which a countess is entertained. Snub is seated next to her and gets into her bad graces by eating spaghetti with her lorgnette. Just then some of his terrible relatives appear and demand family recognition. They have been invited by the butler-villain, who is still working for the family. They insist upon rushing to the table and when oysters on the half-shell are served, they flick the oysters out with thumb and finger and eat the shells. One fellow even makes a sandwich of the shell and two crackers. If you think your folks like this kind of stuff, go ahead with this one.

"Faint Hearts"—C. C. Burr—Hodkinson
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
Swift action, clever stunts, and an O'Henryesque twist at the end, pull this comedy up considerably and produce enough laughs to make up for a rather slow beginning. In his efforts to out-Doug Fairbanks, because the latter is his sweetheart's ideal, the timid lover swings into a top-story window, runs across the roofs of moving autos, climbs up a pipe, and beats up a rival. The girl's father, an irate politician, has some funny antics with a toy balloon. To get into a hospital, the lover goes through a few good stunts, finally landing there on a banana peel. Charles Murray, Mary Anderson and Raymond McKee are in the cast.

"Railroading"—Hurd—Educational
Type of production........................................1 reel novelty cartoon
This, another of the Bobby Bumps cartoon comedies made by Earl Hurd, will entertain any audience. Animated drawings and actual photographs combine in unusual manner, the drawings animating before they are entirely finished. The idea of the reel is that Earl Hurd Jr. is making a moving picture with Bobby Bumps, as the leading man assisted by Fido Bumps, a cartoon, and Kitty Bumps, a real cat. The combination of cartoons and real animals is a novel idea and makes an interesting series.
Short Stuff

“Blaze Away”—Hal Roach—Pathé
Type of production.................................1 reel comedy
Paul Parrott is a dare-devil Sheriff in this one, which is not particularly funny or new but will doubtless satisfy those who like this comedian. He learns to be a cowboy by reading a dime novel and is sent west by his landlord. He is made sheriff of a town which is at the mercy of “Bad Bill,” a desperate bandit. How he finally captures him quite by accident, makes up the action of the reel. There is a laugh at the end when Paul drags the handcuffed “Bill” into the jail and they push each other in and out of the doorway. Paul finally pushes him on one side of the door and locks it, throwing away the key, only to find he has locked himself in the jail and let Bill get away.

“Spending Six Hundred Million a Day”—Urban—Vitagraph
Type of production.................................1 reel industrial
New York’s water supply—its source and its uses—is the subject of this one reel which is interesting as well as educational. Statistics show that the average person uses one hundred gallons of water a day. To keep pace with this demand, a water supply system has been evolved larger than that of any country in the world. The journey this water makes on its way to the city is carefully pictured from the Croton watershed, through the Kensico dam, the Croton dam, the Central Park Reservoir and finally to the city. Shots of some of the uses to which it is put in the city will no doubt amuse country children, for instance the picture of the East Side kiddies bathing in a truck full of water.

Dr. Take the Consequences," Says Hodkinson in Collier's—Believes Percentage Booking the Solution

W. W. Hodkinson answers some of the most pressing questions in the industry in "Collier's Weekly," under date of Dec. 16th. Under the title "Why You Don't Get Better Films," Hodkinson declares that it is his firm belief that percentage booking is the answer. In the course of his article, he says:

"Today my advice to the motion picture industry is: 'Clean house—or all the consequences.'" When asked to elaborate his "Collier's Weekly" statement Hodkinson said:

"So long as the motion picture business is still a virtual stand-still bound by a system of bartering between the producer and the exhibitor, I cannot but believe that nothing but the adoption of a system of percentage booking between these two elements will cut the bonds. Just as the arbitrary selling of pictures on "footage basis" held the industry back until my original percentage plans got into effect upon the formation of the Paramount organization in 1914, so will present progress be retarded until we use as producers are definitely rewarded for good product through the pulling power of these productions at the box-office, and in a word, in a better way of the difficulties that lay in the way of this plan, I believe that the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages and I believe that ultimately, the adoption of the percentage system is inevitable.

"Upon the abandonment of the ten-cent-per-foot limitation, and the substitution of a percentage basis, whereby the producer had an indefinitely continuing interest in the ownership of his product, he was empowered to improve his productions, which had the result of spurring the distributors to a much better quality in product and in turn, enabled the exhibitor to get higher admissions on this improved product."

"Dr. Jack" Premiere

Harold Lloyd's latest feature, "Dr. Jack," will have its New York premiere at the Strand, Christmas Eve. The film has been booked for two weeks.

Author Sues Producers

Los Angeles—Benjamin B. Hamp-ton, Ethel F. Warner and the Zane Grey Picture Co., Inc., were made the defendants in a legal action brought in the courts here, when Zane Grey sued for an accounting of funds, alleging fraud and diversion of funds on the part of the producers.

Grey declares that practically all of the profits accruing from films based on his books have been appropriated by the defendants and that he has not received the 25 per cent stipulated in the contracts. The suit, which covers films based on "Desert Gold," "U. P. Trail," "Mysterious Rider," "Riders of the Dawn," "Man of the Forest" and "Wildfire."

Important Decision

Massachusetts Courts Decide Exhibitor Must Pay Whether or Not He Plays Pictures

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Boston—One of the most important decisions rendered during the year, affecting the entire picture industry, was filed in the Superior Court several days ago when the Vitagraph Co. of America was awarded $6,759.90 against the Park Theater.

The suit, which has been pending some time, was based upon grounds that Vitagraph sold the Park a number of pictures, and received a cancellation notice after several of the productions had been played. In turn, Vitagraph notified the theater that the management would be held to the contract, that the film would be held in -contract to the Park Theater and that unless the pictures were played as contracted for, suit would be filed. The Park never showed the pictures, and the suit followed.

The decision of the Massachusetts Court on this point establishes a precedent, which in the opinion of many film folk and attorneys, will prove of unusual importance. An important distributor said on Saturday that in the course of a year exhibitors damaged distributors to the extent of $1,000,000 by failing to play after they had contracted for a picture, and that the Massachusetts decision gave the distributors the opportunity of suing on a contract where it was thus violated.

Fairbanks Denied Injunction—Justice Wagner Makes Interesting Point Between Employee and Producer

Supreme Court Justice Wagner who several months ago heard the application of Douglas Fairbanks for an injunction restraining the Leader Film Corp., and others from reissuing and re-constructing films in which he appeared for the Triangle Film Co., under a contract made in 1915, has handed down a decision denying the injunction.

In his opinion Justice Wagner says that the Leader Film has announced its intention of making playlets out of the original pictures, and to use advertising and the answer is simple: the distributors don't show interest. At least not as they should. And the producer

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Important director. Makes big picture. Costing real money. In big gobs. And then brings the picture here. And tries to dispose of it. Without creating a market for it. By advertising. And the answer is simple: the distributors don't show interest. At least not as they should. And the producer is sour. And talks of the terrible market. And the "tight" conditions. Which block him from making a distribution contract on a real basis. All of which is true. But—
A Pow-Wow (Continued from Page 1)

What should get money—and a real contract—for a producer? Advertising. Publicity. Because this is the background of our whole industry.

Out in the Bad-lands years ago. There was a showman. Who coined a phrase: "You can't get any money unless you've got a band." And he was right. Advertising; publicity, the creation of interest, is to this business what red blood is to a human. You can't live without it.

So if every director-producer, Making a picture. Would save enough. To come into this market right. To properly advertise his big picture. And create interest in it. He would be a thousand per cent better off. Then the same men; the very men, who look at his picture and say "pretty good" wouldn't have the alibi they possess.

If this isn't gospel what is? Yes; there are some saying this minute: "Danny's trying to get more advertising."

Maybe they are right. But this is the fact: if you don't advertise in this business you're "out." You cannot find one real success that isn't based on it in pictures. If you can send it in.

Like to see it. Experts have figured. That in this business advertising and publicity represents from 80 to 90 per cent. And if that's so let every producer and director take heed. Don't forget: "You can't do any business if you haven't got a band." (Continued on Page 4)

Fairbanks Denied

Fairbanks sued on the ground that contemplated action of the defendant constituted a violation of the laws which prohibit the use of a name's pictures for the purposes of the defendant. The Court points out that Fairbanks was merely an employee of the corporation and not the producer of the pictures, for which reason he has no proprietary right in the pictures and his suit on those grounds is not upheld.

In his conclusion, Justice Hull said:

"The actual display of the pictures would be a garble, injurious to the plaintiff's well-known reputation. A legal remedy exists to stop their display. At this juncture, however, I see no basis for such proceedings as would justify the issuance of temporary injunctions."

Universal Premiere

Thomas Meighan's "Back Home and Broke," is to have its premiere here the most distinguished audience ever assembled in this country. The night of Dec. 15 the first print will be shown at the Governors' Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, and the executive heads of every theatre in the nation will be gathered.

The showing of the pictures was arranged by Mr. Meighan and Governor Morgan of West Virginia, who is acting as host to the governor. Dr. Riesensfeld is completing his program and will accompany the party to conduct an orchestra of 15 musicians which is being taken from New York.

George Ade, who wrote "Back Home and Broke," Alfred E. Green, who directed, and Charles E. McCarthy, Publicity Manager of Film Players, will make the trip.

Clean House

"Now, however, another danger looms up. The gradual acquisition of distributing chains by the mass producers has reached a point where the distributor has been almost eliminated as a neutral factor, and the producer, in effect, has direct control with the exhibitor. Faced with the necessity of manufacturing a large quantity of product, the producer is exerting every power within his reach to force the exhibitor to pay exorbitant rent regardless of the quality of his product. Often he has had to resort to over-statement and misrepresentation, to the creation of false values, to force these prices. The exhibitor has begun to lose confidence in the producer and his promises and an insecure condition results, which is reflected in the present continual controversy between exhibitor buying groups and the producer-distributor interests. The exhibitor is continually endeavoring to assert his independence against the producer-distributor's desire to strengthen his domination over exhibitor interests.

"Where he has thought it necessary, the producer-distributor has even entered the exhibiting field and has purchased theaters for the express purpose of forcing the outlet of his picture factories, regardless of their fitness for exhibition."

May Limit Footage

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Milwaukee — The Milwaukee Exhibitors Association will consider at its next meeting a resolution to limit the amount of film that may be kept in projection booths of picture houses. Four reels of slow burning film is the limit suggested.

SOME LANGUAGE
Says Larry Giffen anent his talking over the picture interests of an author: "Pleasurably announcing the clientory acquisition of Booth Tarkington. * * *" Oh, Larry!

WATCH HAYS
Soon to arrive in Hollywood. To get things started. To make it an "ideal" work place. Which in other words. May mean that a lot of things are about to happen.

THE NEXT CHAPTER
In the Valentino case. Will be watched with interest. The appeal is over. Valentino must work for Famous. Or not in pictures. At least until February, 1924. That's what the courts say. So it's up to Rodolf. Who has been saying he wouldn't work for Famous.

All right. But this is a fickle industry young man. And if you don't work for Famous; and you don't make pictures. For 14 or 15 months. You'll need a Reichenbach. Plus all the others in the Advertising fraternity. To have the public recall who you are; or were. There isn't anything in the world as ethereal; as flimsy, as the reputation of a film star. And if you don't believe it. Ask a lot of people on the Coast. Who once upon a time—just a few years ago—had their names in the blackest type, and the biggest electric. There are a lot of them now willing to take any job they can get. It's something to think about.

THAT "10 BEST" LIST
Sure attracted attention. And First National is all puffed up. Because to date they have four of the 10. With the other six divided among other companies. By the way, the percentage is based on this: The picture which has the most votes—there are three tied to date—get a rating of 100 per cent. And the rest proportionately. More votes in for the next table. Look for it.

SAYING A MOUTHFUL
M. L. Finkelstein talking: "I have seen the statement printed that the public can be educated to like 'better and bigger' pictures. Believe me, the public doesn't need education. The public demands the 'better and the bigger' pictures."

Gospel truth. Nothing but. Ask any exhibitor to prove it to you.

MOONEY ACTIVE

STILL THE "DADDY"
DW's "Birth of a Nation." Made eight years ago. Lacking many modern aids in technical possibilities. But still a great picture. A very great picture. And good for years to come.

SHARP PRACTICE
Important English buyer. Saw a picture six months ago. Didn't like it. Last week was asked to look at some "new" pictures. And there, among them, was the same one under another title. Rejected the lot. Wouldn't look. Two days later. Asked to see another collection. Found the same picture. With a third title.
 Isn't it about time this sort of thing was stopped?

ONE OF THE HONORARIES
One of the few. Who have the right to term themselves "honorary member." Of the Detectives Association. Of the Police Department. Honorary John Zanff. Who makes distributors like the prices he offers. For the Fox circuit. John. With Commissioner Enright, and Thorley, the florist. Were made "Honorary" at the last meeting. Congrats, John.

DANNY.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Robin Hood" Burr Arrows

Little arrows with burr points were used to exploit the New York evening of "Robin Hood." The arrows, which stick to the clothing on being thrown, were distributed at the lobby counter by pretty girls. Each girl now carried a "Robin Hood" ad.

Essic Effect Helped

Newark, N. J.—For the showing of the Bondboy rustic mountain scenes predominated. The display in the lobby of the Branford was effective. A miniature blockhouse, reminiscent of the old woodsmen days stood in the center of the entrance against a background of mountain vistas and side cameos of a mountain house silhouetted on the precipice of a canyon.

Cod Idea

Centralia, Ill.—Elmer Brient, manager of the Illinois "put 'em on big" policy when he let it be known that he intended to put on a real bull fight on the main street Centralia. Of course there was expected opposition on the part of humane organizations and city fathers and when things got too hot the manager took a fishing trip. At the show time Brient announced the engagement of "Blood and Sand."

Around City Council

Akima, Wash.—The Yakima Valley Theater Co. planned to go in big with its public relations, the Liberty and the Capitol. Here's the way they got around it.

According to Harry C. Eagles, a mountaineer, they used asbestos instead of compo board, the idea was to make it look like a real fire. While asbestos isn’t the hottest thing in the world, one front will be indefinitely, for it can be repaired on each picture.

Scouts Marched In

Medford, O.—The Boy Scouts cooperated with Manager Gus Chifos in his showing of "Remembrance" in the Strand.

Chifos arranged for the week to be known as "Remembrance Week," inviting the local merchants to cooperate on the idea.

The Boy Scout organization was invited by Chifos that he would be glad to admit them all free to one picture. If the Scout would try to himself do one thoughtful act during "Remembrance Week," Naturally, if this was really part of the Scout code of ethics, all agreed, and the newspapers gave it the stentorian publicity.

On the evening when the Scouts were paraded at the theater, they marched through the business section of the city carrying a banner announcing they were going to see "Remembrance" at the Strand as guests of the theater.

Oil Station in Lobby

Boone, la.—A gasoline tank, an automobile and a connecting pipe line surrounded by a miniature skyrocket forms the ingredients for an original and attractive lobby display used by the Rialto for Chas. Ray’s "Gas, Oil and Water."

Scraped Paper Off Walls

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Before the run of "Skin Deep" at the Isis, Manager Sid Lawrence was having the house re-papered, so he used old and new oblong strips of wall paper and had the backs printed on. "We scraped the paper off the walls to make room for the crowds that will want to see "Skin Deep." This was given out to patrons the week before the picture opened.

"Unconquered" Ballyhoo

The New York exchange of the Avvon Film Corp. has been using an effective street hallyhoo for Maciste in "The Unconquered" in the shape of a large muscular man costumed as one of the knights of old with armor, shield and battle axe. The man stands perfectly still in front of a wall, while at a corner facing the crowd that always collects, he slowly turns and displays the advertising sign on his back. Elaborate cut-outs have also been prepared for this picture.

"Ghost Breaker" in Graveyard

Omaha — Harry Watts of the Strand and John E. Keneheek, Paramount Expanioner, planted a real one for "The Ghost Breaker." Through the Omaha Bee, Watts offered $25 to anybody who could sleep one night in the graveyard.

Nobody did, but Omaha thought they did. The next day, the Bee came through with a great front-page yarn telling the experiences of the "ghost-breaker," with due reference to guns, ammunition, chains, and the Strand.

Finer Print Teaser

Calgary—A finger print teaser advertisement in the daily press proved an excellent publicity stunt for the presentation of John Barrymore's "Sherlock Holmes," at Allen's Palace. It was used for several days in advance of the regular advertising for the playhouse.

The teaser ads were one column wide and an inch and a half deep. At the left was the print of a man's thumb. The reading was brief: "Whose finger print is this? Ask Sherlock Holmes. He will be at Allen's Palace Monday." These teasers appeared in about a dozen places in each issue of the Calgarv papers for several days and were followed by original half-page ads in the issues for Saturday preceding the first showing.

The finger print teaser ad occasioned much comment and proved a good business getter for this playhouse.

Members of the A. B. C. undeterred by the attitude of the large producer-distributors was regard to securing important productions for the booking organization at a recent meeting pledged a half million, to be raised if necessary, to put the A. B. C. over.

While the pledges were not recorded, nor was any note of funds expressed at the meeting, the willingness of the 70 or 80 men to advance this sum was regarded as a strong evidence of their intent to protect their interests against circuit booking. At this meeting there was a discussion as to the advisability of renting, or if necessary, leasing a Broadway house in which to make downtown first run showings for the pictures which the A. B. C. will handle. Nothing definite, however, was accomplished on this point.

Newspaper Opinions

“The Beautiful and Damned” — Warner—Strand

AMERICAN—It missed us somewhere in the transition, because there is an obvious lack of Fitzgeraldian irony. TRIBUTE—All in all, it isn’t such a bad picture, but there are plenty of little things, talking everything into consideration. J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players.

There was a mass meeting of exhibitors recently with the purpose of discussing the new operators’ salary. The union and operators agreement is up first of the year.

EVE JOURNAL—A jolly comedy, generously provided with amusing situations in which Mr. Roth shines in his own manner.

EYE WORLD—Good, clean, wholesome, first rate farce and gives the star a chance to further demonstrate her talents.

TELEGRAFM—Walkley-Bray finds full vent for his most delightful comedy, “Thirty Days,” as amusing as it is beautiful.

SUN—Something seems to have been missing in “Thirty Days.” Under the direction of James Cruze-Wallace the picture raises suspicion, but one is doomed to disappointment.

EVE JOURNAL—Looks certain of a blow, subject to the way of light comedy. It is often amusing, but lacks thought.

HERALD—“Broken Chains” are about eighteen cents on the dollar. It is well acted and directed, by Colleen Moore and Ernest Torrence, although Malcolm McGregor, the hero, is a little out of his depth. It is also beautifully photographed. But Allen Holubar’s direction is awful. It is painfully crude.

TRIBUTE—It seems to us a badly directed, badly titled, trite and uninteresting picture. There is not one light of imagination anywhere in the whole production. It bears the stamp of having been concocted according to formula—take situation 3 and substitute 11 and 19, and so on till the end.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Colleen Moore is appealing as the pathetic Merci, and gives an excellent performance.

EYE WORLD—There are any enough of real thrills, but what struck us most forcibly was the magnificent scenic beauty of many of the background pictures. Goldwyn is so much in earnest she couldn’t help but to see any characters to enjoy “Broken Chains.”

MAIL—A conventional story of a coward who becomes a hero. This story was the $1,000 prize winning story and corresponding production, it is a distinct disappointment.

HERALD—“As a Man Lives” came from the cheap story.

AMERICAN—Blood and thunder melodies. Director, 89 years old with and fixes over the fantastic folk in the hope that a change of feature and a more picturesque appearance will change a wicked mind and a bad heart.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—The story of “As a Man Lives” revolves around the “salvation” of a mine and the attempt of some crooks to get away. It is a straightforward story, but it is an excellent story, and the pictures with which the picture is accompanied are also excellent.

EVE JOURNAL—Interesting and, in spots, thrilling. If one cares for a picture of the old school, one will like “As a Man Lives.”
The Troubles of an Exhibitor

Broken Sock, Nevada.

Dear Danny:

I don't claim to be a sob artist and the ravings of Brothers Dencker and Bezzewax is the giraffe's kidneys. Some folks don't know when they are lucky.

I run the Do Tell Theater at Broken Sock, eight miles south of Split Lip and go in for big things in a big way. I figure you've got to spend money to get money and about a month ago I bought a picture from the Jipem Film Co. called, "Annie's Aching Adam's Apple" and made a big tie-up with the throat specialists in my town.

To make a long story shorter, it was a flat tire. I didn't take in enough to pay for the sand paper used for the water falls scene.

I put up a spusk to the Jipem Company and they told me they would meet me half way by giving me a show Gratis.

I looked through the picture papers for an idea of what it was but couldn't find any dope. The school teacher told me it was a Latin word so I calculated it must be one of them foreign spectacles.

Well I got busy and put out some bills reading.

Trying Out "Hearts Aflame"

The Louis B. Mayer offices are instituting a new project, following the footsteps of legitimate producers in that they are trying out "Hearts Aflame" in various small towns, preparatory to opening it in New York and other key cities.

"Hearts Aflame" was taken to Montclair, N. J., unheralded, and did the biggest business the house ever recorded. It opened at Fitchburg, Mass., Monday night in a driving sleet storm and grossed 40 per cent over the average. It will be tried at Hudson, Mass., the last half of this week, and will then be primed for release through Metro.

The same treatment was given "The Dangerous Age" and gave such an excellent insight that Paul Moeoy announces all future Mayer pictures will be so tried out.

After Buffalo theaters saw what the "Rich Men's Wives," they got busy. Result: the Art Lichtman exchange there booked 22 theatres at once. And then did what all distributors are after: secured immediate play dates—Adv.

The day before I was to play it a flying machine hit in Ezra Spivens meadow near the edge of town and it show you how smart I am. I rushed out to the driver and told him I would give him three dollars if he would drop some bills out of his contraption when he got over town. He consented and I had the printer rush them out.

Now for the grief.

Five miles west of me at Loose Tooth is a fellow who owns a show with the same name as mine and strange to say he was playing the same show as me on the same date.

When the flying machine got about five thousand feet over my town, the fellow kept his word and let the bills loose. A strong wind was blowing from the east at the time and would you believe it, carried every one of them bills and dropped them at Loose Tooth and advertised that monkeys shows. He wrote me a letter thanking me and I sent him a bill.

The next time I pull any flying machine stunts, it will be on "The Village Blacksmith" and I'll have him drop anvils. Yours, Zeb Knuckle.

Abolishes Deposits

Vitagraph's New Move Effective Jan.
1st—No Contracts Without Play Dates

That Vitagraph will abolish the deposit system entirely, beginning with the new year, was announced yesterday by President A. E. Smith. In making the announcement Mr. Smith added that the action of the Vitagraph company was not retroactive, and that no deposits already received under existing contracts would be refunded, but that every dollar of deposits so received would be applied strictly according to the terms of the contracts as they read at the time the contracts were made. Contracts made after the new year will require no deposit, but the Vitagraph company, Mr. Smith said, would expect and demand the same fair treatment on the part of the exhibitor as the exhibitor received from Vitagraph.

First Runs "Bunk"

Says Laemmle Who Plays System as Industry's Greatest Menace

Denunciation of the present method of first run showings and a warning that the first run system is the greatest menace to the business, are contained in a statement just made public by Carl Laemmle of Universal.

"You are making the mistake of your life if you are booking your pictures according to what the first run house in your territory is showing," says Laemmle, in a letter to an exhibitor.

"You know as well as I do that nearly every first run house in the United States and Canada is controlled, either by some producing company or by some inside concern, and you know most likely that the purpose of controlling first run houses is to report pictures there so you will book them. In the great majority of cases nowadays, the quality of a picture has precious little to do with the case."

"There was a time, when first run houses were really owned by individuals, that the first run meant nothing. In those days, if the man who owned the theater and made his living out of picking out a picture or two, it was a safe bet for you to follow his lead and book the same picture. Evidently those days, in one form or another, are gone forever. Today, in most cases first run does not mean first run but it simply means first exploitation."

Danny says advertising and publicity count for oodles in this business. You might add exploitation and that's where "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" should score heavily. What a title to boost and play with! That plus a real box-office picture. What else do you want.—Advt.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LAISY CORPORATION
The Exhibitor Distribution Idea

"A demand for a company of this kind on the part of the independent theater owners, has been repeatedly made for several years," said one of the leaders of the movement. "The independent exhibitor saw his position in the business imperiled, and the only chance left for the independent controlling distributor corporation was expressed at the Minneapolis convention in June, 1921, and reiterated with much emphasis at the Washington convention last May, and was at that meeting referred to the board of directors.

Many Meetings Held

"Many state and other meetings of exhibitors, allied to this national organization, went on record as favoring such similar action, was taken by different regional bodies. Finally," he added, "the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. of A. decided that this organization could not of itself make such a move, but that the formation of an exhibitor owned and controlled distributing corporation was imperative to insure the safety of the independent theater owners.

This took the form of the formation of the Theater Owners Dis. Corp.

True then presented the plans and purposes of the new corporation.

Some Plans of the Corporation

After detailing the necessity of the proposed corporation, True told of the five million capital, and said that of the seven directors, five had been selected: William D. Burford, Aurora, Ill.; Harry D. Pennington, Pa.; L. J. Dittmar, Louisville, Ky.; Sydney S. Cohen, N. Y. City; Wm. A. True, Hartford, Conn.

"It was the desire of this company," he added, "to arrange for obtaining and distributing motion picture exhibitors, stockholders of this company, a grade of pictures of stock quality which can be supplied to exhibitors at a price that will enable them to realize a profit on their investments.

"My associates have undertaken this gigantic enterprise for the purpose of affording protection to the independent exhibitors throughout the United States, and with this purpose in mind it is the fundamental idea of the incorporators to make the company strictly co-operative."

True said many problems had developed and others would, but to insure equality of interest in the company to the exhibitors, "We have felt that it would be unjust to allow a major part of stock of this company to be owned by a few large exhibitors, and that it would be equally unjust to permit a large and well-to-do exhibitor to obtain the benefits of this co-operative company without contributing a fair portion of his capital to the concern. We are of the opinion that the allotment of stock to the subscribers must be based upon a schedule of minimum and maximum requirements so that the exhibitor in a given town of a given size will be required to subscribe for at least each theater and that he will not be permitted to subscribe for more than the maximum limits fixed.

"A schedule presented showed the minimum and maximum limits for the subscription. All stock issued must enter a voting trust, and a board of seven trustees will be selected "five from among the stockholders elected.

(Some attending believe that the five directors named will also be the voting trustees.) True added that a national advisory committee would be formed, one man from each of the 29 states, to be selected by the stockholders of that zone. He added: "The company also hopes to cause to be established a local committee of seven exhibitors selected by the stockholders themselves in each zone through whom the company will adjust disputes, and from whom the company will obtain information and suggestions.

"Each subscribing stockholder will be able to exhibit pictures covered by the standard terms and conditions that will be incorporated in a standard form of contract. It is the hope of the company to prepare a standard form of contract which will be fair and convertible in all its terms, and which will insure to the exhibitors the opportunity for exhibiting pictures for which they have contracted and will insure to the company the absolute fulfillment of these contracts by the exhibitors.

Ready by Next September

"It is our hope that we will be able to have our product ready for release beginning with September, 1923, and prior to that time the company will be engaged in organizing exchanges in all of the principal exhibition centers in the United States or, acquiring exchanges now in existence, contracting with producers, and making arrangements for the distribution of material suitable for exhibition by the exhibitor, and at prices consistent with the general purpose of the company, and with the desires and hopes of the exhibitors throughout the United States."

The formation of the Theater Owners Dis. Corp. comes as the result of a number of discussions held at various national exhibitor gatherings beginning several years ago.

In Minneapolis, the idea was brought to the floor, but later tabled and subsequently in behalf of the organization Secretary Walker conferred with several important distributors regarding the move. This failed to develop anything material, said Walker and the Wisconsin legislation came and passed into law without the subject occupying much attention from the floor. The next four to six months the idea was revived, however.

Comment

Many important film folk, while very much interested in the news from Chicago, said that for various reasons they preferred not to be quoted with regard to the idea.

Abolishes Deposits

In explanation, Mr. Smith said that 10 years or more ago, when in the majority of cases the exhibitor represented only a small theater in a few hundred seats and under a short lease, it was necessary for him to require a substantial advance payment, not that the money might be in the hands of the producer or distributor for use, but in order to insure the performance of the contract by the exhibitor. Today he said, conditions were different, and the situation is entirely changed. The exhibitor of today, with but few exceptions, has a very substantial investment in the theater which he operates. He is responsible and means to live up to the contract which he signs.

Fully 97 per cent of the exhibitors today are thoroughly responsible, said Mr. Smith, not only in their financial ability to meet the obligations in their contracts, but in their desire and intention to meet them.

Beginning the new year, Vitagraph will accept contracts from any exhibitor with the understanding that the full payment for each picture to be played will be made seven days before the play is designated in the contract. When the exhibitor for any reason desires to postpone the original play date, it will be his responsibility to pay the amount due on the contract in full at least seven days in advance of the original play date named in the contract, before Vitagraph will consent to the change and then the exhibitor in each case will have the privilege of playing the picture at a later date. No contracts will be accepted unless a definite play date is given for each picture at the time the contract is signed.

Smith is exceedingly optimistic over the non-deposit method of booking.

Hiram Abrams, United Artists, said: "It is a good thing. Anything that tends to keep the market open for the independent producer I am in favor of."

Suit Settled
Schulberg-Abrams Litigation Regarding United Artists Closed
It is understood that the suit instituted by Benjamin F. Schulberg in July, 1920, against Hiram Abrams has been settled out of court and the suit has been withdrawn.

Schulberg brought the action claiming commissions for the promotion and development of United Artists and Hiram Abrams affiliation therewith, as well as for commission due on the sale of live stock.

As part of the settlement, which is understood to involve a considerable sum, Abrams has withdrawn his suit in exchange for a sum agreed upon by Schulberg, over a year ago.

At the time of the filing of the suit there was much interest with reference to the litigation.

Relative to this, Earl Hammons of Educational, says that he never heard of Cameron, nor was he ever employed by Educational.

A. E. Smith's Denial
Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, said yesterday:

"The public statement to the effect that I, D. Williams is connected with the Vitagraph Company, is absolutely untrue, and without foundation.

Mr. Williams is not associated with the Vitagraph in any capacity nor has Mr. Smith had any negotiations with him. The stories being published to the effect that there are to be changes in the personnel and policy in Vitagraph are undoubtedly being circulated by unscrupulous competitors."

"The only change in policy recently inaugurated by Vitagraph is the abolition of the deposit system which has long been a thorn in the side of the exhibitor due to the fact that under the deposit system approximately $3,000,000 of exhibitors' money is in the hands of producers for which the exhibitors have received no adequate benefit."

Battle in Sight Between A.B.C and M.P.T.O.
Announcement of Theater Owners Dis. Corp. Anticipates Movement of A. B. C. to Extend Organization Nationally—Old Fight Between Cohen Faction and T. O. C. C. May Develop as Result

The Associated Booking Corp.—the booking organization of the T. O. C. C. of New York—plans to extend its activities in a nation wide movement.

As noted in yesterday's issue, important national officers of the M. P. T. O. of A. have organized the Theater Owners Dis. Corp. with $5,000,000 capital, to produce and distribute on a co-operative basis.

"They beat us to it with their announcement," say some of the A. B. C.-T. O. C. C. crowd. All of which is anticipated to a pretty battle all through the country between the two organizations.

Ballance III
Harry Ballance, Famous Players, is down with the grip.

That the Cohen organization "got the edge" with their announcement regarding the distributing company is admitted by some of the A. B. C. leaders. But when the plans of the A. B. C. are announced it need not be surprising if they come some time next week—it is expected that exhibitors throughout the country will then have a choice of selection: whether to line up with one organization or the other.

And this will be anticipating the next national exhibitors convention scheduled to be held next June in Chicago.

The Situation Locally
There is hardly a doubt that, regardless of what develops nationally one way or the other, the T. O. C. C. will not align with the proposed distributing organization. There is too much feeling to permit the Cohen group to smooth things over.

Naturaly the T. O. C. C. crowd say the M. P. T. O. state organization is "a paper corporation," and naturally this is denied by the friends of Sydney Cohen.

RICHARD WALTON TULLY presents

GUY BATES POST

in

"OMAR THE TENTMAKER"

A SERIES of murals, done in the manner of Marsfield Parrish, come true. The rare brilliance of the orient blended with the more sombre shadings of real life. Pathos, unadulterated romance, and a story that will grip and hold any audience.

This would sound like over extravagant praise. But in reality there is much that could be said of Richard Walton Tully's second picture. Guy Bates Post is the star of the production, but—though as the old Omar—his interpretation touches the high places—Virginia Browne Faire tender and yet fiery. She is gentle springtime in a rose garden—patient old age in a stone-flagged kitchen. Her emotions are as varied, and as beautiful, as the changing colors of a prism.

The plot is, in a truly historical sense, a chronicle of the life of Omar Khayyam—poet and astrologer. It tells of his trials and disappointments and of his final triumph over despair. Almost a tragedy, it is. But there are wist touches of finely drawn humor—for people were human, even in the Persia of a thousand years ago.

The cast, to the smallest detail, is quite worthy of an unusual-play. It includes Patsy Ruth Miller as the little Shirien, Maurice Flynn (the erstwhile "Leety" of Yale football fame) as the Christian, Noah Beery as the Shah of Shahr, and such fine actors as Walter Long, Nigel de Bruijier, and Boris Karloff in minor parts.

Due credit should be given to the camera man, or whoever it is that takes credit for the use of soft focus in the early garden scenes. There is a misty loveliness about them that would make the picture worth while, even if the rest of it were not so utterly satisfactory. It's for everybody.

Adapted by Richard Walton Tully from his big stage success; Art director, Wilfred Buckland; Photography by George Benoit; Directed by James Young
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

“Lorna Doone” Shortbread

Omaha, Neb.—Manager Julian E. Johnson found many ways of exploiting “Lorna Doone” without playing the Kroll. For two weeks prior to the showing of the pictures, cards were hung up in the public places advertising the coming of the picture and inviting the public to read the book.

“Lorna Doone Shortbread” was used in 30 window displays by retail grocers.

The most spectacular exploitation was the street car balloon. The usual question on the car was emblazoned by a locomotive bell that was placed inside the car and rung continually.

Public Schools Helped

Lynchburg, Va.—Unique and valuable exploitation for the showing of “Sherlock Holmes” at the Academy was obtained by Manager Accrossim in a tie-up with the School Board. Accrossim arranged with the school board to give a free showing at 6 o’clock Tuesday morning. The children were to be excused from school long enough to go to the photoplay. The children were to pay the regular price for children’s tickets, 25 cents. Of this amount, 10 cents was to go to the school and 15 cents to the School Entertainment Fund. The pupils brought the tickets from their teachers, the latter retaining the school’s share of 15 cents for each ticket.

The pupils naturally talked “Sherlock Holmes” at their homes.

Travelling Honeymoon Cottage

Indianapolis—A traveling honeymoon cottage which carried Zenda tidings was made the basis of an unusual exploitation stunt when “The Prisoner of Zenda” was presented at the Ohio. A one-room bungalow was directed to the house on wheels, and considerable publicity was obtained when the honeymooners were arrested on a technicality and immediately released. The stunt was of real assistance in putting over the picture for the Ohio’s showing.

A one-room bungalow on an automobile chassis served as the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chermey, who had reached Indianapolis on their trip from New York to San Francisco. This unusual event was heralded in the newspapers without any reference to “The Prisoner of Zenda.” Chermey was soon arrested, however, for violating a city ordinance; but his release came immediately when he declared that he earned his livelihood by spreading the news of the coming of the photoplay in the novel manner which he employed.

Considerable attention in the newspapers resulted from the developments of this novel and carefully planned exploitation. Bert C. Perkins, of the Chicago exploitation department, conceived the idea and gave it his personal attention.

“Stemmers of Sin”

Boston—Behind the arrival of Mlle. Marie Louise de Bloise who came from Paris to appear in the new tent of forming a Ku Klux Klan of Women lies the story of another film publicity stunt.

When Elizabeth Rintels, feature writer for the Advertiser, used the story in the Sunday paper it developed that Mlle. de Bloise really meant to form an organization to be called “The Stemmers of the Sin Flood.” Then it was found that Goldwyn’s new picture, which was released that day at the Modern and Beacon. Charlie Winston, Goldwyn exploiter in Boston, is credited with knowing more about the story than appeared in print.

Ties Up a Detective Agency

Santa Ana, Calif.—In putting over Goldwyn’s “Sherlock Holmes” in the Temple Theater, E. D. Voss made a tie-up with the Nick Harris Detectives, a private detective concern with a considerable reputation and branch offices all over the Pacific Coast.

He borrowed from the Harris office the photographic record of the case against Mrs. Witherell kidnapping case in Los Angeles a little over a year ago. These photographs were placed in a window of the White Cross Drug Store, on the principal street corner in town. The display was tied to the “Sherlock Holmes” picture by a card relating a brief history of the case, headed “A Modern Sherlock Holmes Exploit.”

The display got a big play, and a newspaper commenting on the window reviewed the kidnapping case and mentioned the tie-up with the picture.

Pretentious Lobby Display

Oklahoma City.—One of the most pretentious lobby displays ever put out comes from Tom Boland’s Empress, to illustrate the saying of “East is West.” The love boat scene was used as the inspiration for the design.

The principal characters were reproduced by cutouts at the front of the display, with a large poster showing the rear of the boat. A large poster, showing the rear of the boat, was set up to resemble the upper bow of the boat and ascending ladders provided a means of communication.

The Oklahoma City newspapers thought such an innovation that they used photographs and newsmen’s photos as a distinct novelty in the city’s artistic development.

The scheme extended to the box office itself, which was covered with imitation tile roofing and eaves extending all around the lobby. The ceiling was done in an oriental motiled effect that was augmented by the Chinese lanterns used throughout the decorations.

Freeport, L. I.—The new $500,000 Freeport was opened.

Corder, Mo.—H. C. Linesberry has opened the Yale.

Tulsa, Okla.—The Alhambra will be built at a cost of $50,000.

Rockville, Conn.—The Princess, 440 seats, has been opened.

Marion, O.—The Marion Photoplay Co. has opened the Oakland.

St. Paul, Minn.—A new, 1,000 seat house, “East is West,” has been opened by the American Theater Co.

Holley, N. Y.—G. McCargo and F. W. Gates have started work on their new theater to seat 500.

Charlestown, W. Va.—The Virginia has been opened by the Kanawha Amus. Co.

Albuquerque, N. Mex.—Joseph Barnett will build a house on Central Ave., to cost over $250,000.

Doylestown, Pa.—The Strand Amusement Co. have purchased the lot on Oakland Ave, and will soon start construction on the erection of a new theater.

“Dope” Was About Picture

Middletown, Conn.—Manager H. T. Browning distributed little dope capsules in advance of and during his run of “East is West.” Patrons were given copies of the paper with the dope capsules, which bore the imprints of T. I. Image’s latest picture. It was effective as a novelty, and it meant getting the message on “East is West” over to hundreds of people.

Furnished Real News

Passaic, N. J.—Wm. Kraft of Lawrence Weber and Bobby North’s Apollo exchange furnished some real news when “I Am the Law” played at the Royale. Kraft showed the picture at the Passaic armory in Athens. Among the spectators were four inmates, each of them at least 50 years old, who had never before seen a motion picture. They thought the screened scenes were real and sneaked away from the armory, armed with an old gun, to hunt the villain of the picture. The escape of the old men and their subsequent return to the armory disillusioned, made two good stories.

The Associated Press sent the stories out and they were widely printed. Among the most amusing accounts to use the story were World, Tribune, Herald, Evening World, and Telegram. A Persian character who made a few lines in the Patterson News and Times and the Passaic News and Herald, gave the story prominence which had its effect at the box office.
“Fast and Furious”

Is Larry Semon’s

“Counter Jumper”

Instead of “The Counter Jumper” Larry Semon might have named his comedy something like “The Walking Egg.” For it is an egg with a protruding pair of legs, much resembling those of a butt hurt with a frog, that provides the larger element of mirth in this Vitagraph release. The egg steps out of a basket filled with its kind and proceeds to perform. It leaps from egg to egg in the country store, it eludes pursuit by dodging in and out among the barrels and baskets and defies the club wielded by the agile Larry, finally landing on the palate of a stovewarmer. As the accustomed egg is replaced upon its usual foundations there is imprisonment of the egg the ruthless club descends. The battered headgear finally is lifted it is a full-fledged duckling that emerges.

Oliver (“Babe”) Hardy is catapulted out of a window at the crest of a sharply inclined sandbank. He turns over and over, slowly as if half floating—and it is funny. Just to show it is no accident he does it again. A clerk filling an order by inadvertence drops a lot of cartridges into a stove. Things happen. A colored boy gets into difficulties. In fact, any number of things take place in these two reels that ought to make fun for the crowd.

The atmosphere of the country store, with its loungers and its indescribably jumbled arrangement of stock. The picture will go strongly in the city, but it is not risking much to wager it will do even more than that in rural sections.

“Counter Jumper”

Motion Picture News
December 9, 1922

In the category there may be better comedies than “The Counter Jumper” if so, they are in the offing. Gauging possibilities of a comedy upon its laugh provoking merits, this one hits the bull’s eye for speed, development of situation and fun. While at times it may border upon “slap-stick,” a more accurate description is “exaggerated farce.” And with it all, there is somewhat of a production.

Most of the happenings occur in connection with the star-comedian’s activities in the role of a misunderstood clerk of a general store, described as the marketing headquarters of a Northwest Trading Post. The property is the inheritance of an attractive heiress, which has little to do with the sequences involving most of the fun, incidents that start innocently enough, ending in veritable riots. These are so distinctly varied, it is difficult to realize that so much action and fun can possibly be crowded into two reels. One novelty embracing a walking egg, one that is so strong it sprouts legs and leads the comedian all over the place trying to catch it, is more than funny. It is decidedly clever.

Those who enjoy comedy will undoubtedly approve of “The Counter Jumper,” a clean, fast and thoroughly entertaining farce—LILIAN GALE.

Distribution Idea

This will be the first of a series of discussions which are scheduled to take place in key cities for the purpose of clarifying the plan to exhibitors, whether members of the organization or not, with the idea of having them become interested as stockholders.

Sydney Cohen and Wm. H. True are expected in town this morning from Chicago.

Meanwhile the market shows real interest in the situation. The report in THE FILM DAILY was read thoroughly, the film folk felt it was the chief topic of discussion. Naturally there was much criticism directed at the idea. But this criticism was negative chiefly because of lack of information of the proposed corporation as to the details of the plan.

The Man Who Waited

An intensely dramatic Western photoplay, far above the average in plot, direction and punch. The highlights of the feature are: a series of desperate struggles with bare fists; a hair-raising race between the hero and his opponents to be first to file a claim; a sensationally realistic mine explosion and the imprisonment of the workers; the defeat of the hero when victory seemed sure, and the courageous exploit of the girl who saved the day in an eyelash finish.

Well made and carefully directed, "The Man Who Waited" includes in its five speedy reels more action, mystery stunts, excitement and romance than many of the so-called super-productions of the year.

It is a showman's picture, for showmen who know pictures and know what their patrons want.

The cast includes:

Frank Braidwood  Vonda Phelps
Inez Mac Donald  Don Maines
Jay Morley  Joe Bonner
Jack Pierce  Millie Davenport

CHARACTER OF STORY........ Daughter of poor

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

A very valuable piece of stage property has at last reached the screen and the much enjoined J. Hartley Manners play, made famous by Laurette Taylor several years ago, has been recorded in pictures with Miss Taylor as Peg. The picture is a very delightful entertainment and an unusually amusing and wholesome one. There has been so much controversy regarding the rights of the play and its production that the result has been anticipated with a little more than the usual interest.

Both Miss Taylor and King Vidor, who directed have fulfilled the hopes of those who have been waiting to see "PEG O' MY HEART" in pictures. The star, to begin with photographs surprisingly well and proves that she knows the art of pantomime. Her facial expressions are delightful and she can "say" a lot with her eyes. They are going to "love" that left eye wink and the pensive expression when she finds herself in love with Jerry. Miss Taylor is a real trouper and her charming characterization of Peg, her first film role, will certainly gain many admirers for her.

King Vidor has handled the production very well and the material has been used to good advantage and with good judgment. The exterior shots are very pretty and production values in general are first rate.
There is one change that nearly everyone will probably suggest and that is taking off the second ending that has been tacked on, showing Peg, now Lady Adair, being presented to the King and Queen. The shot of Peg, happy with her English sweetheart who has come for her, is the logical and prettiest ending.

The director has brought out the humor of the story in splendid style and it is always wholesome. Added to his efforts are some fine titles that fit the pictures very well. A good supporting cast includes Mahlon Hamilton as Jerry, Peg's lover, Russell Simpson as her father, Ethel Grey Terry, Vera Lewis and D. R. O.
Hatswell as the English cousins. Vera Lewis is not the most suitable type but Hatswell, who resembles Von Strobeim, is fine as the son. Michael, Peg's dog, has his usual place in the story.

The film version goes back a little introducing Peg at home in Ireland and the death of her mother. Then comes the parting from her father when she goes to live with her mother's rich sister, Mrs. Chichester.
Peg's discomfort in her surroundings and the abuse of her relatives who are only tolerating her because it means money to them, finally sends her back to her father in Ireland. Jerry, really Sir Gerald Adair, a neighbor of the Chichesters follows Peg whose "devil of a tongue" had kept her from admitting her love before she left England.

Get This One. Not Many Wholesome Entertainments Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is hardly a question with regard to the success of "PEG O' MY HEART" as a box office attraction. It will readily benefit by an already highly popularized stage presentation and widely read novel. The title is well established and the minute they hear "PEG O' MY HEART" it should be enough to interest them. It looks like a good money-maker for all hands and the production really deserves your best exploitation efforts, if for no other reason than your own box office returns.

Laurette Taylor's performance will win many admirers for her. Go the limit to let them know what she does in her portrayal of Peg. Promise them some real "trouping." Exhibitors should be able to cash in on this attraction. Be sure to let them know that the picture offers a wholesome entertainment, delightfully amusing.

This kind don't come your way often enough so don't miss this one. The star and title are your big assets.
Give the author and director proper mention in your announcements. A revival of the song, "PEG O' MY HEART," would be very appropriate.
Warners Make Pretty Good Picture of "Beautiful and Damned"

"THE BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED"
Warner Bros.—State Rights

DIRECTOR .................. Wm. A. Seiter
AUTHOR .................. F. Scott Fitzgerald
SCENARIO .................. Olga Printzlau
CAMERAMAN ............. Frank Good and Ed Dupar

AS A WHOLE........ Interesting comedy-drama of young well-to-do married couple of today
STORY........ Used Fitzgerald's famous flapper story— at least a part of it. And so, all in all, there is enough in back of this latest Warners feature to insure a certain success. And it isn't a half bad picture. At times it is very good indeed but Director Seiter and the continuity people decided that the ending of Fitzgerald's story was not good for pictures. So you have a few titles explaining how Tony was regenerated. You don't see this in the picture but it's all right. And then Tony and his wife Gloria, the beloved little flapper, are seen on a boat deck and you know they are sailing to that never-never land where all movie heroes and their heroines go. Some day, somehow, somewhere, some director is going to show them when they come back.

Fitzgerald's story had a tremendous vogue. Many girls who worked read it believing it told them all about girls who didn't. And many girls who didn't work read it and wondered. Fitzgerald is supposed to be an authority on flapper life. He is supposed to know the Biltmore Hotel crowd and maybe he does, but the picture doesn't show it. Still they have worked out a rather interesting little story and various sequences are not only laughable but interesting.

Seiter has developed at one point one of the most artistic touches seen in a modern production. He shoots through the strings of a harp to photograph a wedding, and incidentally this wedding is one of the most impressive ever put on a screen. The entire cast does very well. Harry Myers, particularly, and Seiter has given enough hokum to the Jap boy to make him stand out. Production values are very high but the bedroom of the millionaire Patch is so huge that it is almost grotesque.

You Have a Lot of Good Names to Use

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have so many things to talk about here there should be little difficulty in putting this over. First you can say it is a Warner picture and the Warners previous efforts in the last few months have been so successful generally that if your crowd pays any attention to names they will know what this means. If they don't, you tell it to them. In addition you have Scott Fitzgerald's name and many of your young people will know more about him than you do.

Then you have an excellent cast headed by Kenneth Harlan whose work in Shadows will be talked about and pretty Marie Prevost! You can recall to your crowd that Harry Myers was the hero in "A Connecticut Yankee" and he is just as funny in this and while the others only have bits still their names are well known.

While Director Seiter has not been identified with any huge successes recently he should be well known to your crowd and if not remind them that he has directed a number of well known stars.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,800 feet

For the biggest majority of picture-goers in this country, the city patronage in particular, "The Ninety and Nine" will undoubtedly prove an especially strong attraction and sufficiently popular to make it a definite box office offering for those exhibitors who make up the largest part of the entire number of picture exhibiting theaters, catering to people who seek action and thrills for their entertainment in preference to originality of story or artistry of production.

And as an entertainment of its kind, "The Ninety and Nine" is thoroughly capable of satisfying the many who want their diversion supplied in quantities of thrills. Besides this element of appeal Ramsaye

Big Majority of Picture Goers
Morriss' story, adapted from the play, contains other angles that make it an attractive audience picture. It includes the ever popular regeneration theme in which a fugitive from justice, trying to drown out the past in drink, is urged to "go straight" by the little girl who sticks by him even when her father falsely accuses her and turns her out of his house. This sequence, especially, is very well handled by Colleen Moore and Warner Baxter, who have the principal roles. Director Smith has directed it well also except that he uses too much footage and draws it out longer than he should to obtain the best effect.

The development is smooth and the interest very well sustained. Coincidence is the most prominent means of development, but it probably won't annoy those to whom the picture will appeal and for whom it is evidently intended. Prohibition has been ignored for purposes of the plot, and hero drinks freely at an honest-to-goodness bar.

The very best feature of this production is the splendid climax which Smith has provided. The forest fire has been staged with unusual realism and offers a genuinely spectacular thrill. It has been excellently photographed, and no doubt will set a good many wondering how it was done. The train flying through the forest with the flames jumping at it from both sides is indeed fine.

Story: Tom Silverton, a fugitive, hides in Marlou, where a little girl of the town, Ruth Blake, urges him to give up drink, and her interest in him finally causes her father to send her from the house. Leverydige, owner of the railroad who, with his fiancee Miss Van Dyck, is stopping with the Blakes, secures the cooperation of a half-wit admirer of Ruth's to frame a robbery on Silverton, whom he suspects to be Bradbury, the fugitive. How Silverton saves the lives of many in a forest fire and wins the admiration of all follows the clearing of his name which proves him not guilty of the crime which made him a fugitive.

Play Up The Forest Fire Thrill to Get Them Interested
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It looks like a sure-fire box office attraction for the exhibitors who can use it to advantage, and there are such a large majority of them that "The Ninety and Nine" will undoubtedly bring the producers a splendid return. The picture runs too long as shown for review and needs cutting to speed it up at times, such as the sequence in which the girl makes her various appeals to the hero to reform. This is too drawn out. This is Vitagraph's second production of this story, the first having been made in 1916.

Exploitation should be a simple matter and getting them interested may best be accomplished by your promises for a picture of action and thrills. Try and secure a trailer of the forest fire. That alone should bring them back to see the picture. Exploit the fire in your announcements and use the names of Colleen Moore and Warner Baxter. Your local church organization might be glad to cooperate in view of the title.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Horse-hating hero

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........5,953 feet

William Collier's stage play certainly affords fine possibilities as a screen comedy and with the production accorded by Thomas H. Ince it offers a sure-fire comedy entertainment that should go big wherever they like a picture that will give them a good laugh.
The situations get away from the more familiar varety of humorous gags and in the horse-hating youth who is mistaken for a well known jockey and forced to carry out the deception in order to win the girl he loves, there is a wealth of fun that has been splendidly developed.

They start off with laughs when hero Sam Harrington (MacLean) comes to visit friends and is invited to go horseback riding. While Sam is trying to politely wiggle out of going, one of the horses bolts and carries away Peggy Fairfax. Sam jumps in his auto and is off in pursuit. One of the best managed thrills seen in a long time comes when Sam's machine strikes a rut and he is hurled from the tonneau onto the saddle of a horse. There's genuine comedy in this bit. Unfortunately for Sam, this episode establishes him as the famous jockey, Sam Harrington. The comedy that grows out of this contains original and laughable situations that make the picture an especially fine one.

Besides the laughs there are some unusually fine thrills and strong action. The steeplechase staged for the climax is probably one of the best that has ever been done. If there weren't casualties in the making of it, there were surely some mighty miraculous es-apes. The race is a succession of thrills and spills and no little credit goes to the cameraman in this sequence. The shots of the horses and riders taking the jumps, evidently filmed from the ditches, are great.
Ince must have secured some especially fine jockeys for this climax.

Douglas MacLean does very good work as Sam Harrington. The role is the sort that he can handle capably and the cast, on the whole, is first rate. Raymond Hatton supplies some of the laughs and Madge Bellamy is the girl in the case. Others are Lila Leslie, Martin Best, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Dwight Crittendon.

Story: Peggy Fairfax, who thinks her lover is the famous jockey, insists that he ride her horse in the steeplechase. Sam has the horse "fixed" so it can't run and then realizes that he may lose the girl. He buys the Hottentot, a horse that no one can ride, gives it to Peg and then decides to ride it. How Sam wins the race and the girl comes in the thrilling comedy climax.

Should Make a Good Box Office Attraction With Right Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Hottentot" is a sure-fire comedy number and should become a first rate box office attraction on the strength of the entertainment that it offers in a story of action, thrills and laughs. There are chances for unusually strong exploitation with this one and you can make a variety of promises for it. By all means dwell on the thrills and action in the climax. A few feet of this as a trailer should certainly bring them back. It is decidedly one of the best thrills of the kind that they have ever seen. Be sure to give your musical accompaniment good consideration. It is necessary to a good presentation in this case.

Play up the laughs and let them know that Douglas MacLean comes back in "The Hottentot." They will remember him from his Paramount comedies starting with "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours' Leave." Let them know that "The Hottentot" was William Collier's stage play and do your best to get them interested because they should go out thoroughly satisfied.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,887 feet

The picture is so good to look at and made up of such a variety of interesting scenes that will please regardless of their connection with the story that the more or less stereotyped plot contained in "Conquering the Woman" will not detract as much from the feature's entertainment value as it might under a less careful production. King Vidor has secured numerous pleasing locations that have been artistically photographed and the atmosphere throughout is one of pictorial appeal.

Florence Vidor is deserving of much better material than this but her pleasing personality and ability to hold her audience regardless of what she has to do, is another redeeming point for Henry C. Rowland's theme—the popular idea of changing the mind of a society girl bent on marrying a no-account count, by having her shanghaied and cast on an island in the sole company of the man she should marry. A nice variety of locale is necessary for the story which shifts first from France to New York and then to a South Sea island. Vidor's scenes of a seaside resort in France give the picture an interesting start with Miss Vidor aquaplaning and swimming. The island life is nicely pictured, showing hero and heroine enjoying the comforts arranged for their enforced isolation.

There are numerous attractive marine shots and the photography is very good throughout.

King Vidor develops the story smoothly and in good time with the exception of the ending which is a trifle s'ow. It takes too long for the heroine to realize that she is beaten and due to fall in love with hero. Everyone knows that is what is going to happen so there is no suspense in putting it off. The star is supported by a capable company including David Butler, the young man who gave the girl's father the idea that her mind could be changed to prevent her marrying the count.

Story: Judith Stafford returns from a stay in Europe with a totally different view of life and engaged to a French Count. Judith refuses to hear her father's objections so he has her shanghaied and left on a South Sea island with a westerner, the father's choice of a husband for his daughter. For three months Judith fights his efforts to win her over but eventually she realizes that she is in love with him and when the Count arrives to take her home, she refuses but later goes back on her father's yacht with her lover.

Make Up For Familiar Material

They Will Like Miss Vidor and Pictorial Values

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can undoubtedly give average satisfaction with "Conquering the Woman" and in case you are not sure about it on account of the fairly familiar South Sea island formula, you can count on the pictorial appeal and presence of a pleasing star to counteract the other. The picture is really very good to look at and Miss Vidor is attractive and interesting to watch no matter what she has to do.

Use stills in the lobby that will indicate the picture's pictorial appeal and you might try to interest your women folks in particular. They like these South Sea island romantic things and this one should be no exception. Catchlines can be used if you want to let them know what it is about but it would be better to talk about the star and the pictorial appeal.

CHARACTER OF STORY. Waster is regenerated through influence of girl he loves and old philosopher

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 5,800 feet

This is the type of picture that appeals largely to the downtown house audience because they like the action, thrills and tense suspense that it has to offer and won't object to the improbabilities contained in the situations. As long as there is variation in them they will be perfectly satisfied and then there is the inevitable romance that reaches its happy ending in the very last shot. These ingredients spell entertainment for this crowd and since a good majority of exhibitors cater to this class, the feature, like others of its kind, should make a good box office attraction.

The theme is the ever popular regeneration story, but it has been built up with some fairly new ideas and new atmosphere that keeps it from being very commonplace. In the first place hero is the son of a rich man and there doesn't seem to be any reason for his reformation until he meets "the" girl. Naturally when she refuses to marry him his disappointment is sufficient excuse for drowning his sorrow in liquor and it also leads him to forgetfulness in the Apache dens of Paris. In this connection Director Dawley has injected considerable atmosphere and spirit that vivifies it up a good bit. From this point on, however, the continuity rambles and things happen along in a none too coherent fashion. Just why the raid on the dive should have made hero the butt of the publicity is not plausible.

It moves along rapidly with the locale shifting from Paris to New York and then to the mining district in a succession of events that contain action and some thrills. The popular twist of suspense in which a blast plays the prominent part is used for the climax. In this instance it actually goes off and then there is another suspense when the heroine is hanging by a rope in the shaft hundreds of feet deep. The rope threatens to break and hurl her to the bottom, but of course it doesn't. This is all right if they like it, but it is terribly overdone—agonizing suspense.

Robert Frazer is kept busy in a role that he does very well, with Gladys Hulette, as the girl. The cast is suitable and capable.

Story: Sherry Mason goes to France to forget Naida, who would not marry him because he was a waster. He is implicated in the death of a dancer and followed back to America by an Apache who threatens his life and also tries to rob him of his fortune. How Sherry is saved by the girl and philosopher, his mother's former suitor, completes the story.

A Good Box Office if Your Crowd is Right For It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors know their audience best. If they will accept action, thrills, suspense and romance without question the probabilities or coincidence of the plot, you can rest assured they will be thoroughly well pleased with "As a Man Lives." And there is sufficient in it to offer you plenty of exploitation angles. The Apache stuff finds favor with a good majority and you can let them know there is some of it in "As a Man Lives."

The theme can be played up with catchlines such as: "Can you read a man's face? Did you ever analyze character by facial expression? See how the interesting theory is applied in 'As a Man Lives' at the blank theater." The players' names may not mean much at the box office but use those of Robert Frazer and Gladys Hulette. Stills and posters and the usual order of advertising should cover announcements.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .............. 6,000 feet

This is the third and best of the Jess Robbins productions for Vitagraph. They have all been comedies but there are more laughs and original comedy business in “A Front Page Story” than in the other two put together. Robbins and Edward Horton team up ideally in the making of humorous entertainment and after “Too Much Business” and “The Ladder Jinx” Horton has finally secured stellar prominence which his work in the first two certainly gained for him.

Horton has individuality and a different comedy talent that makes his work all the more interesting.
He is very real and his characterizations so natural that they make the parts seem thoroughly convincing.
Another bit of good fortune, as far as Horton is concerned, is the fact that he has been lucky enough to have roles particularly well fitted to his personality.
As Rodney Marvin, Horton will surely gain many admirers. He certainly injects a lot of pep and entertainment into his performance.

Arthur Goodrich’s story is one of the best newspaper yarns that has come to the screen. It is original and bright with novel situations and any number of clever comedy twists that make it an unusually wholesome and entertaining feature. They pull some more or less familiar stuff with a Ford but otherwise the gags are new and thoroughly amusing.

Jess Robbins proves that he has a keen sense of humor in the way he has handled the story. And he hasn’t spent a lot of money to do it either. The picture is most unpretentious as far as production is concerned, but when it comes to laughs and sure-fire entertainment, “A Front Page Story” is there. Robbins has secured a fine supporting cast for Horton that includes Lloyd Ingraham, erstwhile director, in a mighty fine characterization as Mayor Gorham, Edith Roberts as daughter of the village editor and James Corrigan as the editor. The sub-titles are numerous but they are very good.

Story: Matt Hayward, owner of the Gazette, and Mayor Gorham had long been at odds. Rodney Marvlin, a new comer in town, saves Hayward’s paper from going on the rocks at the hands of Gorham. Hayward rewards him with half interest in the paper.
Marvin’s scheme to bring the two men together is unusually clever comedy business and the romance of Marvin and Hayward’s daughter touches it off nicely.

Promises Are In Order For This One and You Can Be Sure They’ll Laugh

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You should be able to do fine business with “A Front Page Story” because it is a really delightful comedy offering that contains sure-fire humorous situations and plenty of laughs if they want to laugh. And it is wholesome. You can promise them the funniest and best newspaper story they have seen in a long time and in case you played Jess Robbins’ two previous productions in which Horton appeared, recall the titles, and promise them a much better entertainment in his latest, “A Front Page Story.” They’ll surely like Horton’s work in this.

Where they like good wholesome comedies you won’t want to miss this one. It has a lot of clever touches and original comedy gags that are going to send them out happy and unmindful of the time it takes to run off the six reels. You can safely make promises and feel sure of pleasing them. Let them know Edith Roberts is in the cast also.
Slight and Unoriginal Story Makes Rawlinson's Latest Only Fair

Herbert Rawlinson in “ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT” Universal

DIRECTOR ......................... Stuart Paton
AUTHOR .......................... Louis Tracy
SCENARIO BY ......................... Geo. C. Hull
CAMERAMAN ....................... G. W. Warren
AS A WHOLE ....................... Fair entertainment in this latest Rawlinson vehicle; offers plenty of excitement STORY ......................... Not original nor especially well handled; gives star chance to do his usual over-acting DIRECTION ...................... Ordinary; considerably below the average for this director
PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ All right
LIGHTINGS .......................... Usual
STAR ......................... Tries to be too expressive; has only a fair chance with this material SUPPORT ....................... Lillian Rich pleasing; others Sidney Bracy, Sidney de Grey, Jean de Briac, Dale Fuller
EXTERIORS ....................... Suitable
INTERIORS .......................... All right
DETAIL ............................... Satisfactory
CHARACTER OF STORY ............ Picking up an overcoat that did not belong to him leads to hurried marriage
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,473 feet

“One Wonderful Night” looks very much as though it had been made in just about that space of time for certainly Director Stuart Paton has not taken any great pains to make it entertaining. Even though the material was not worthy of an unusually fine production, with a little more care it might have been less nonsensical in its helter skelter action. From beginning to end it is a series of chases with the entire cast piling from one room to another, in and out of taxi cabs, in a general state of perpetual motion. In this case it doesn’t really provide speed but has a tendency to make the action of the hop, skip and a jump variety.

Paton starts the story off as a mystery drama and for a long time you don’t know what it is all about until finally the titles begin to clear things up and you discover that it is a plot of a girl’s father to marry her to a Count so she will inherit a fortune left her on condition that she marry by a given date. This method of development may furnish thrills for some and the sort of suspense that it contains may make it the more interesting for them.

Louis Tracy’s theme isn’t original, however, and the sudden marriage of hero to the girl is of a more or less familiar formula. The picture will satisfy an average crowd and there are a good many who may think it is thoroughly exciting. Those acquainted with the director’s name and some of his good pictures may be disappointed in what he does with this one.

Herbert Rawlinson takes advantage of every opportunity where he can overact. His performances usually suffer greatly from this and he would be much more convincing if he made less obvious efforts to register facial expressions. Lillian Rich is pleasing as his leading lady and the cast is adequate.

Story: John D. Curtis picks up an overcoat belonging to another. In the pocket is a marriage license with the names of Hermoine Fane and Jean de Courtois. Curtis visits Hermoine and finds she had hired de Courtois to marry her to escape a marriage to Count de Mauriat, arranged by her father so she would inherit a fortune. Curtis identifies the assailants of the overcoat owner. It develops that the “Count” is a bogus and Hermoine decides to hold to her marriage to Curtis, performed to save her from the Count.

Will Do For Star’s Admirers and Where They Are Not Too Critical

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you know they are easily thrilled and the type of action contained in “One Wonderful Night” will appeal to them, you can show it quite safely, and undoubtedly satisfy your folks thoroughly with it. Where Rawlinson is popular you probably won’t have to do very much other than use his name.

Play up the title with catchlines such as: “Be sure you can get your own overcoat. If you don’t you never know what will happen to you. See what happens to John Curtis when he picks up another man’s coat in “One Wonderful Night,” Herbert Rawlinson’s latest production at the blank theater.” The title is a good one and should be easy to exploit.
Disappointing For a Scenario That Brought the Writer $10,000

Allen Holubar's Prod.
"BROKEN CHAINS"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR .......................... Allen Holubar
AUTHOR .............................. Winifred Kimball SCENARIO BY ....................... Carey Wilson
CAMERAMAN ........................ B. C. Haskins

As a Whole..... Conventional melodrama of the old fashioned type that will best please those who still favor the old stuff

STORY..... Very extreme in its characterizations; some good thrills but poor situations on the whole

DIRECTION..... At times all right and again uses bad judgment in handling of players and material

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Excellent
LIGHTINGS ........................... All right

PLAYERS..... Colleen Moore suffers so patiently it is hard to sympathize with her always; Ernest Torrence "powerfully" wicked and Malcolm McGregor not the best suited hero; Claire Windsor has a small part

EXTERIORS .......................... Picture's best feature
INTERIORS ........................... Adequate
DETAIL .............................. Sufficient

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Cowardly city chap goes to his western ranch where he proves himself a hero by saving girl from brutal husband

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION............. 6,190 feet

Goldwyn presents the Chicago Daily News' prize winning story, "Broken Chains," by Winifred Kimball who collected the neat sum of $10,000 for her work. When scenarios come this high they should be good, which makes it all the more disappointing and goes to prove that these scenario writing contests do not always bring forth anything startlingly original. "Broken Chains" is just the conventional type of melodrama that has been done time and again and Allen Holubar has not succeeded in hiding its familiar situations by a production that of itself is satisfactory.

Will Satisfy Those Who Still Like the Old Fashioned Type of Meller

In view of the origin of the story and the fact that it won a $10,000 prize in the Chicago Daily News scenario contest, you can probably arouse considerable interest in the showing of "Broken Chains." But it would be well for you to see this one first and make sure that it will be all right for your patrons. If they still like old school meller you can give it to them without hesitancy, otherwise you may have to depend upon pictorial values, some thrills and the action of the climax to get it over.

Allen Holubar is capable of much better things than this so it may be disappointing for those who know what he really can do. Colleen Moore, who seems to be gaining in prominence can be mentioned and also Claire Windsor although she has a role of very short duration. There are some good looking posters for your announcements.

CHARACTER OF STORY .......... Not offensive
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,930 feet

About five years ago "Thirty Days" was received fairly well in New York on the stage, but the effort to throw the comedy on the screen isn't so successful. In a way it is good enough but the story is so thin and the treatment so tepid, and the action lacking to such an extent, that excepting for the titles which really are funny and which are exceedingly well illustrated, there isn't a good deal to the farce, not nearly enough to make it good material for Wally Reid, who incidentally is entitled to a lot better stuff than this.

James Cruze wanders a long way from "The Old Homestead" to make "Thirty Days," but the probabilities are that the chief fault is not with Cruze but with the material. They send Wally, who is a flirtatious sentimentalist, to jail to keep him out of the way of harm and to prevent the leader of the Italian Cammona from knitting him, because he has caught Wally kissing his wife. Then you find Wally and the Italian leader in jail, and then you find them out and somewhere thereafter the story ends.

It is far from satisfying, although Reid works very hard at times, and Kalla Pasha, from Mack Sennett's lot, is a rather laughable warden of the jail.

There isn't enough to the material to hold out. That is the real difficulty. Lasky has given the usual Paramount production values and the cast is fairly satisfactory, but there isn't anything in this to worry you one way or the other.

It is somewhat surprising that Paramount, which has a good investment in Reid, will allow this type of material to be used. There have been many instances where material could not be padded and should not be padded and there are producers who overdo it. This is an example of where judicious padding would have materially helped. To have made this a worthwhile farce the producers might easily have used the trick which Harold Lloyd so successfully puts over, that of building and building upon one sequence until the simple early laugh becomes a definite roar at the climax.

Title Affords Cleverer Exploitation Material Than Picture Warrants

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Thirty Days" has more possibilities for exploitation than the picture deserves. If you will just think it over a few moments you will realize how this title can be twisted and used in various ways. The only trouble is that if you go too strong and pack them in on the strength of the title they are liable to go out kicking, because while amusing Reid's latest is so thin in material that it doesn't get very far. Use your best judgment and boost this along to a certain point with safety, and if your promises aren't too rash they may like it well enough but don't stress this too much.

Catch lines come naturally with this sort of a title. If you go in for lobby displays get some fake bars and build a cell around your box office. A "trusty" can take the tickets. All sorts of schemes of this kind come to mind. It ought to be easy to put this one over.

CHARACTER OF STORY....... Man steals child and mistreats her for revenge on another only to find out years later she is his own daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 4,316 feet

This latest William Russell release is a better picture all around than any of his recent productions and a better entertainment than most of the weekly Fox releases. It contains a first rate story with situations that make for a good dramatic entertainment and even though there is some coincidence in the development, still it has been especially well handled and Director Mitchell keeps the progress of the plot from becoming obvious. This is especially noticeable toward the close when there is a real twist and the director brings it in as a genuine surprise.

When the opening title refers to the Northwest it is quite likely that the majority of the audience will immediately figure it out to be the regulation Mounted Police story but this popular screen personage is only mentioned in one sub-title and does not put in an appearance at all, much to everybody’s relief. Wm. McLeod Raine’s story is strong in dramatic situations and offers a particularly good vehicle to William Russell who is not always favored with material suitable to his personality and ability. This one is especially appropriate for him and he does very good work. It will please his admirers splendidly.

The only criticism against the director’s efforts is that he could have omitted the shots of old Angus McRae reading the Bible planning his revenge against the man he believed had stolen his wife. This isn’t a very good touch and the Biblical quotations might also be left out. The locations are ideal and there are many very attractive shots of the woodland country.

Alma Bennett, a pretty girl, plays the part of Jesse McRae very well. She uses a little too much make-up around her eyes. Charles K. French is inclined to overact as McRae but Stanton Heck is a convincing Bully West. Russell has a good supporting company all told.

Story: McRae orders Tom Morse off his place when he learns he is the nephew of Carl Morse, a man hated by McRae and whose daughter he had stolen and used as the butt of his revenge. How Tom saves Jessie from the Bully to whom McRae has sold her and McRae learns later that she is his own daughter, completes the story.

Satisfying Dramatic Offering That Should Especially Please Star’s Admirers

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Folks that have been disappointed in the stories in which William Russell has been appearing lately will be agreeably surprised by “Man’s Size,” his latest offering. The title isn’t an especially good one but might be replaced by something better or more pertinent. You might play it up as “A Moonshine Romance” or something that would indicate the theme more clearly than “Man’s Size.”

Promise them some good dramatic situations and let them know there is a surprise ending. Appeal to the star’s admirers with definite promises of a much better picture than most of his recent releases. Don’t say anything about Northwest atmosphere unless you make it plain that it is not a Mounted Police story.

"Saturday Morning"—Our Gang—Pathé
Type of production.........................2 reel animal and kid comedy

"Saturday Morning," the best time of the week for a kid, is the title of this "Our Gang" comedy. Not much of a plot, just a series of cute and amusing incidents in the lives of several kids in various stations of life, from little dressed up Clarence to "Freckles" Daniels, and "Sunshine Sammy" and his baby sister, "Farina." The kids are entertaining and the picture will suit any type audience. While not as funny, as some of the series it will hold its own. A funny sequence is that in which the little colored boy improvises a shower bath by means of a punctured tin can suspended above him. It surely will get a laugh. "Freckles" Daniels' troubles with the bass-viol and "humores-coo" are funny too, and when he paints his legs black to hide a hole in his stocking he is sure to enlist more than a few sympathetic grins.

"In Dutch"—Christie—Educational
Type of production.........................2 reel comedy

Taken as a whole this two reel comedy will get by very nicely, with more than the average number of laughs. Some sequences are held too long, for instance, the one in which the rivals tear each other's bouquets of flowers apart, but in the main "In Dutch" is good, clean entertainment. Bobby Vernon and William Irving are in love with Charlotte Stevens, but her father smiles on neither. Charlotte, however, says she will announce her engagement to Bobby if he will get her a "Kutta-Peesa-Pye" fraternity pin. Not knowing his rival is the president of the fraternity, Bobby agrees, and then the fun begins. How he is initiated, made to walk through the street in a 40 year old bathing suit and sing a love song to three policemen form the rest of the action.

"Alexander Hamilton"—Urban—Visgraph
Type of production.........................1 reel biography

A most interesting picturization of the high spots in the life of Alexander Hamilton, great American statesman is this one-reeler. The historical data is absolutely correct and the picture opening with Hamilton as a little boy at the bed-side of his dying mother who sees a vision of the great life lying ahead of him, goes on to show him, years later on the eve of the Revolution. Scenes of the drafting of the Constitution, in which he had a part, of Washington's cabinet of which he was a member, and the duel with Aaron Burr in which he met his death are carefully sculptured. Much money has not been spent on the production, but this does not detract from its interest.

Ethelind Terry of the Music Box, is seen designing a new blouse; the cast of the Greenwich Village Follies has a little relaxation on the roof of the theater. "Molly Darling" is seen in rehearsal; Horton Spurr, a unique vaudeville artist dances on his head as well as his feet while Muriel Stryker, Ned Way burn's "Girl in Bronze" puts on her wonderful make-up for the cameraman, and then does her bit by posing for him in a most realistic representation of a bronze statue.

Babe Ruth's efforts to regain his old time form are demonstrated by shots of Babe working on his farm in Massachusetts, where he chops wood, and goes shooting to keep his batting eye in shape. The chef of the Vanderbilt Hotel, next demonstrates the correct manner in which to carve a turkey. A quaint feature of the reel is an introduction to the quaint chimney sweep of New Orleans who always works in a high hat and frock coat. He is a figure that will not easily leave one's mind. The champion woman hurdler of America demonstrates how it is done and the camera gives it in slow motion.
The issue closes with the Buoy Patrol of New York Harbor making the rounds to keep the sentinels on the job.

"The Voice of the Land"—Geographic—American Type of production.........................5 reel Biblical

These are five units, about 1,000 feet each, of the Geographic series of Bible pictures. The subjects covered are "Jerusalem,"
"The Road to Jericho," "Beersheba," "Hebron" and "Valley of Dry Bones." The places where many of the events recorded in the Old and New Testaments took place are shown with adequate titles and color inserts of Biblical characters. Modern scenes of the Holy Land are included, showing how little progress has been made. The pictures are of general interest.

Pathé Review No. 185
Type of production.........................1 reel magazine

"The Horseless Farm," the newest development in agriculture in which electricity furnishes all the motive power is an interesting feature of this review. A slow motion dance novelty called "The Hindu Dance of Mystery" in which a Hindu Devil-dancer shows how devils are driven out. Saturday Morning at the Zoo shows all the animals taking their daily bath and the colored bits presents scenes in the Pyrenees along the French-Spanish border.

"Rookies"—Century—Universal
Type of production.........................2 reel kid comedy

Brownie, the dog, is the star of this two reeler which is acted almost entirely by children. It is a cute little story of two little boys in love with the same little girl, and the ways in which they try to win her. There are some very cute situations and while the plot is slight for two reels it will probably get over in good shape. Brownie is remarkably clever, and he displays almost human intelligence.

"The Natural Born Liar"—Bruce—Educational
Type of production.........................1 reel novelty scenic

Here is another of the entertaining Wilderness Tales which combine exquisite scenery with wholesome humor. It deals with the two prospectors, Windy and the Parson, and the supposed adventures of Windy who is of a most imaginative turn of mind. Many of the laughs are derived from the clever titling, and the reel as a whole is most enjoyable. A good short reel for houses with high class clientele.

"Via Radio"—Educational
Type of production......................................2 reel scientific

Radio fans of all ages will be mightily interested in this two reeler which illustrates in minute detail the way in which the radio operates and the reasons for its operation. Beginning with voice waves, the range of which is demonstrated by animated charts, the entire process put into operation each time a radiograph is given or received is clearly and concisely shown. The film may be of special interest to the men and boys in your audience, but it is sure to be discussed afterwards by those who see it.

"Fleeced for Gold"—Kiser—Pathe
Type of production......................................1 reel industrial

Propaganda, though not of an offensive character is wrapped around a slight love story of a girl who won’t marry her sweetheart until he “does something.” The western sheep ranch operated by his aunt gives him his chance, and the operation of which is given in detail. Thousands of sheep are shown among the hills. The processes of counting, cashing, shearing and branding are carefully given. There are some exquisite shots of what looks like an ocean of sheep on the Oregon hills.

Washington — Congressman MacGregor introduced in the House on Friday, the following bill which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

E. F. A. Situation
Stars to Start Their Own Companies—What the Venture Costs
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Berlin—The E. F. A. (Famous Players), is quickly dissolving. The commercial and technical staff have already received notice to quit at the end of the year. Most of the prominent stars, directors, architects, cameramen, who were engaged on long-term contracts, received a liberal indemnity in dollars and left the E. F. A. Among them is the German-American star Leunings, of "Deception" fame, General Manager Davidson, Harry L.code, the Russian director Buchowskia, the producer of "Danton," the young Parisian star Mlle. Marquise L. Bosky, the director George Jacoby, producer of "Danton." (Continued on Page 2)

Connick's Denial
Not Interested in Any Picture Proposals at the Moment
H. D. H. Connick, formerly chairman of the Finance Committee of Famous Players, emphatically states that he is not interested in any picture proposal at the present.
This statement comes in denial of the report recently published that he had a visit to the Coast by him was in conference with Thomas H. Ince.
"I have had a lot of propositions made to me regarding pictures," he said, "but I haven't seen any that interest me."

"The Town That Forgot God," Fox, will close its 10 week run at the Astor, Jan. 7th.

Double Tax
So The States Right Leasing Tax is Termined—No Decision
Washington—Protests of the moving picture industry against the regulations under which the Internal Revenue Bureau administered the five per cent rental tax were laid before Congress and last week the Assistant Solicitor of Internal Revenue, Mr. Rogers and five other solicitors, as noted, by Sigfried Hartman, representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' organization.
In applying this tax up to the time of the repeal on January 1st, last, it was the policy of the Internal Revenue Bureau that any transactions between a producer and a distributor was primarily to lease for exhibition and that, accordingly, all such transactions were subject to the five per cent tax.
It is the contention of the industry, as expressed by Hartman, that not all films leased to a distributor by a producer was immediately exhibited, and that in many cases the distributor securing such films made further leases under the "State right's" or other methods to persons who actually distributed the films to theaters for exhibition. In such cases, it is claimed, only the last lease should be taxable, as the lease between the producer and the first distributor did not result in the film being placed on exhibition under leases between exhibitors and that distributor.
The question has been the subject of protest ever since the regulations were issued, and the matter is being brought before the attention of the bureau repeatedly but, so far, without inducing officials of the Treasury.

when it comes down to the big "yes" and "no" problems that board of directors will do the work. All of which is very, very interesting.

Now the five men named are well known exhibitors—Davis probably better known than any other excepting Sydney Cohen who naturally, as head of the exhibitor organization, stands supreme. But go out and bet yourself all the cookies you want that none of these men know anything about production or distribution. They know exhibition and a lot about that. And they can hire all the people they who want to do know production and exhibition. But the boss of the shop who don't know more about the work than his employee is always a poor boss. And that's where the snag may come.

Five millions is a lot of money. But there's been a lot more than that lost in production and distribution—even by the people who thought they knew. There is one big company that has sunk close to seven million—that in the language of the industry—isn't gotten anywhere yet. And there are a lot of smaller concerns that have just gone blooey with sums ranging from a million up and down. Money isn't the answer. The ability to show pictures—which exhibitors undeniably possess—isn't alone the answer. Money runs away in production like water down a sewer unless the producer knows. And there are a lot of producers who think they know who are wasting money enough on one picture to make three others. Only last week was talking with a producer. Of a concern which started two years ago. Backed by the biggest bankers in Los Angeles. Money—they had it to burn. And boy, they burned it. The banker quit—but only after $1,600,000 had been blown in. One of the smartest business men in England has just withdrawn from backing a producing concern. He spent $600,000 and got enough. There are stock scripts all over this country of half baked, immature production and distribution companies that got together a flock of dollars and then went along and reached the "Stop, Look, Listen" sign and then couldn't quit in time and went asnagash.

Now don't get the wrong idea. This isn't intended to convey the idea that the exhibitor's can't pull this production-distribution deal. Maybe they can. But it's just as well that somebody go a bit slowly. And it might be well for every exhibitor to ask himself this question: How many distributors are making any money?

That's putting aside the possibility of things going wrong in production. There are enough studios for sale and for rent in Hollywood and in and around New York to make all the pictures that the world can use in the next six months. But look at distribution alone: Who's making money in their distribution departments in the big, old line companies? You can get a nice Christmas present if you can find one. Famous is about the best organized of all. And it costs Famous close to 35 per cent for distribution. And that's a lot. Ask a few questions, boys, and find out what it costs Universal to distribute; and Fox and Pathe, and any of them. Don't think it's a secret. It isn't.

Selznick figured at one time that he was making more money in distribution than production. And then he woke up. If you find one of the worth while concerns who are making money on distribution, real money, let's know who it is. One of the biggest men in the business is responsible for the statement that his distributing company was, in his opinion, like the plush seats in a Pullman, expensive, but necessary.

Oh, yes; a lot of you boys are sitting back and laughing. And figuring that somebody is kidding me along. And that in turn that's what going to you. Well, maybe you're right. But while you're smiling don't forget this; that a couple of years ago there was a lot of noise. And a blare of trumpets. And United Picture Theaters came into existence. Oh, yes; it had Inc. at the end. It was Inc. all right. But it also was Bkt. Which is an abbreviation for Bankrupt. And a lot of exhibitor money. And a lot of other people's money. All went. And United was to have been one of those things. The primary purpose of which was to "save" this industry.

There has been a lot of howling among exhibitors as to poor business. A lot more about high rentals. A lot more about other troubles. Well, there have been a lot. There may be a lot more. But this is certain: if anything goes wrong with this idea. If anything goes wrong with the five million bucks expected to be invested there will result a setback that will take years to offset and recover therefrom. There never was a time in the history of this industry where it could less afford such a wallop.

Double Tax

Department to change their attitude. No decision, of course, was rendered, and it is probable that some days will elapse before the bureau makes any announcement of its decision.

The matter is of great importance to the industry, which holds that it results in double taxation, a thing which Congress did not contemplate when it enacted the law. Evidence of how the tax becomes a double tax under the bureau's present regulations was given by Hartman, who told the board that, it had never been the policy of the bureau to permit double taxation, and that decisions had been rendered in commodities affecting other industries for the purpose of avoiding the imposition of the same tax twice.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Nine-foot Face
Pittsburgh—The big smash for Manager Tom Shadrac's tie-up for "The Young Rajah" playing at the Olympic, was the gigantic head of the Franklin, 24-sheet. This head is almost 4 sheets high and measures nearly nine feet.

Wedding Rings Tie-Up
Sullivan, Ind.—Wedding rings was the exploitation campaign unearthed by Manager H. H. Wilson of the Sherman, in connection with the showing of "Man, Woman, Marriage." Ten cent rings were tossed around the city's streets and then advertised for in the "Lost and Found" columns with a reward if they were returned to Dorothy Phillips, at the Sherman. The reward was paid—a pass to the picture.

Phone "Storm" Stunt Hagerston, Md. — "The Storm" played by the Colonial and Hattie Merrill broke into the front page with one of her stunts. It was an adaptation of the personal telephone call stunt, "Beware! The Storm is coming!"

Toy Train Tie-Up
Franklin Pa.—When "The Fast Mail," opened at the Park every important street corner was decorated with a large "stop—look—listen" standard six feet in height and bearing the name of the picture and the house. In the window of the largest toy store in Franklin, special displays of small electric trains were arranged with large placards in the set announcing the photoplay. The trains were run continuously and small painted letterings on each told that they were Eugene 999 of the East Mail Express.

World Tour Attracts
Chicago—A combined sales and exploitation campaign for "Around the World in 18 Days" was staged here when William H. Tracy, Universal salesman took his flyer, splashed it on the marquee, tied an army tent, a muddy shovel, looking utensils and a tow- rope on the running boards and secured two cases beside the hood. He hung an old switch lantern in front of the draper and lettered the suitcases and sides of the car in white paint with the words "Around the World in Days," thereby giving the idea he was a transcontinental tourist.

Silk Kimonos
Cedar Rapids, Ia. — Superlatives around advertising and exhibit art around the lobby built attendance for "East Is West" when the attraction opened the Strand. The management had always been conservative in its promises with the result that when "East is West" was advertised as the finest picture in many months, the statement was accepted literally and the fans flocked to see it.

Interviewed in the future borders around the lobby was the phrase: "The Picture to See First of All" and "There Never Was a Picture Like It." Silk kimonos were used for the usherettes during the engagement.

Reported Cosmopolitan Producer Will Leave Famous Players Next Season

Reports are in circulation that Willard H. Hearst will release Cosmopolitan productions beginning next September through Goldwyn Pictures.

At present, the Hearst organization is releasing through Famous Players. Early last spring, some difficulties developed between Cosmopolitan and Famous Players, but these were traced to an agreement that there may be a change in the distribution of Cosmopolitan, came somewhat as a surprise.

It was not possible to locate officials of either of the organizations involved yesterday for a statement.

Wants $350,000 Damages—Valentino's Amended Answer Charges Agent With Conspiracy

An amended answer has been filed in the Supreme Court by Rodolf Valentino in the suit of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., in which he asks $350,000 damages for alleged conspiracy by the plaintiff, and demands an injunction restraining the plaintiff from asserting that he is under contract to it. He wants his name cleared and demands an accounting of all the films he made for the plaintiff.

He also alleges that his agent, Clifford Robertson, conspired with Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky to conceal the fact that larger offers had been made for his services than the plaintiff was paying, and that for such concealment the plaintiff rewarded Robertson. He demands that Robertson account to him for all the sums received.

Just For a Change a Magazine Writer Finds Something Pleasant in The Picture Industry

Nina Wilcox Putnam has found "What's right in the Movies," and in a rather interesting form presents some ideas in the December issue of the Pictorial Review that indicates that magazine writers, if they look for it, can find something about the picture industry that doesn't carry a wallopin' every line. It is refreshing to find the author deal with in part: "We have with us a new epoch in motion-picture making. Stories have come to be considered as an essential, plastic art has been taken its proper place in the considerations, and..."
The Troubles of an Exhibitor

Well, the convention is on. We opened December 21 and ran for two days and nights. I am the chairman. Any of the bunch for New York wants to come on why they are welcome. Hotel here, The Splendid, will give special rates for exhibitors here they are.

For Exhibitor's room with bath $1.25.

For Exhibitor's room without bath $1.00.

For Producers, same as above, just triple.

Our convention cut in with the hotel for a dollar on each producer that shows up.

We have hired the Pythian Sisters hall (seats 65) for the two days (cost $2) and will have a big dinner on the last day.

Wish you would get in touch with Adolph Zukor and see if you can get him to call off that injunction against Valentino for the two days and get Valentino out here. It wont hurt Zukor as he can slip the injunction back on again when our meeting is over and it will help the famous on our circuit.

Every town I mentioned in my last letter, is coming? We have not heard from Split Lip yet.

That's the way with exhibitors, soon as they get a chance to help themselves, they let the chance slide then blame it on the producer.

Big Campaign On

The Literary Digest, which produces "Fun From the Press," is carrying on an intensive campaign with reference to this feature. About 700 newspapers are carrying advertisements relative to The Literary Digest and "Fun From the Press" every week, and in addition, circular letters are being distributed to readers of the Digest where "Fun From the Press," is being shown in a neighborhood house. They claim over five million readers, and to interest others, they are using 25,000 car cards, and last month issued over eight million circulars using the telephone directory, exploiting this feature.

Over 900 exhibitors have used a return postal card indicating that they are interested in the question of showing this short reel.

Newspaper Opinions

"Heroes of the Street"—Warner Bros.

WORLD—The film is cast for the most part in sentiment which is thick and per-stinent, and its formative elements consist of such scenes as that of a dog tearing away the muzzle of a horseman. This is a film of the old JOURNAL—ideal.

TRIBUNE—The people at the Strand yesterday seemed delighted with it.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Has lots of fun, a good story, numerous Christmas scenes and most important of all—Wesley Barry himself. The tricksy star, surely morbid but sometimes sad, has plenty of opportunity to be a regular fellow in the scenario prepared by Edmund Goulding and Mildred Connors. This is not Little Lord Fauntalcy with golden curls and blue eyes, but the red-blooded variety that sends all the block hussies hawing home to their mothers and always wears torn stockings.

SUN—Good melodrama, and very well acalyzed, for the most part, in the引 variety. It is of the "crook" variety, with a liberal sprinkling of "crooked" people, much scenes and all the way from humor to overdone pathos.

The old school, the mixture of action, heart interest and thrills that will hold the average interest.

EVE WORLD—If they can find a director who will stop them from attempting to do such good for a long, long time on the mirror screen.

EVE TELEGRAM—Here is a newer, a tougher and a better Barry picture.

"Making a Man"—Paramount—

Rialto

WORLD—Jack Holt has done a most able piece of work as the California millionaire, who, penniless and without friends in New York, consorts with a bum of a bunch, and is only there for a chance to change the comebacks, and suddenly realizes that government isn't a very simple matter after all.

AMERICAN—Holt in the role of a hero is some day, and surprising like Eva Novak as the girl and churning the others are well cast.

HERALD—Is unusually spontaneous and entertaining.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—The picture starts as a drama, but in its later scenes slides by degrees into comedy. Some well-written titles and a good piece of comedy acting by Frank Nelson, as the park bench warmer, help to lift matters up and, with the piece is worth seeing.

SUN—The production is adapted from the story by Peter B. Kyne under the direction of Joseph H. Young, both of which nasences its features.

EVE WORLD—There are some folks who will like "Making a Man," but we won't commit ourselves as far as that.

JOURNAL—This picture, depicting a simple story without pretentiousness, is entertaining and well acted. It is free from meaningless footage and progresses easily from start to finish.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer"—Metro—

S. L. Capitol

TIMES—If you are interested in rural melodrama, with its sweet and simple hero, in its maternal, its small town villain, in its300 curious and its helpless old mother, you may follow with interest the little story which is the thread of this picture.

AMERICAN—Old-fashioned melodrama, a survival of those days when the stage william branched and the hero came victoriously out of the muck. Is well worth an hour of anyone's precious time.

Kind Words

the production personnel is shiftying in the right direction.

"There are today hundreds of men and women of taste, distinction, and integrity actively employed by the film industry. As short a time as six years ago, very few ofsuch as these belonged to the arts would have even considered doing this work. Mechanical perfection has been largely responsible for their awakened interest; money has unquestionably been a factor in securing them, for, strangely enough, the money involved has been just as much as an inducement to them as money and the belief in the usefulness of the film industry. But I'll tell you the world, from a rock-bottom knowledge of the conception and manufacturing of motion-pictures, that those of my profession who are thus employed work hard for every led that they get.

"It is not possible to claim for any one class of persons, or class of work, the vast improvement in pictures which has been so apparent in the past five years. To do so would be as absurd as assering who won that last war. I am not going to try and explain here the infinitely complicated mechanism, the co-operation, the strenuous work, and highly developed technique necessary for the production of the simplest twopenny. But I do assure you that author, continuity writer, title-editor, director, cameraman, actor, electrician, costume, art director, and a good digestion on the part of all, are actually equally responsible for a thoroughly good picture, while on the other hand the perduction on the part of any one of these can ruin the production.

"But I do believe that the serious in-valuation of the films is a major factor in the making of the greatest single contribution to the intellectual and moral value of modern pictures. In other words, to their power for unconscious education.

And about thirty per cent of the films released to-day unquestionably possess that value.

"Also I can think of few graver responsbilities than those resting upon the shoulders of our motion picture magnates; their power over the minds of our citizens is almost unlimited. Fortunately, they have come to realize it, and if the work of their new central organization we may expect outward and visible evidence of this in the immediate future."

The article is illustrated with photographs of some of the leaders of the industry and some brief expressions from them.

"Prosperity" Dinner

For the Industry Develops Interesting Situation—M. P. D. A. Knows Nothing of It

Reservation has been made at the Hotel Astor for a "Welcome Prosperity Dinner" to be given to the motion picture industry on Jan 13th.

The Banquet Department of the Astor reports that those interested in the dinner are "the same people who were interested in the dinner given to General Hays at the Astor last winter."

The M. P. D. A. (The Directors' Association) gave the dinner to General Hays last spring, but Secretary Haddock as well as President Sidney Olcott claim to know nothing of any affair arranged for Jan. 11. This matter was discussed at length at the regular meeting of the Directors' Association last night.

In conjunction with the proposed dinner, the names of a number of important citizens are being used. When an effort was made several days ago to interest the general manager of one of the leading distributing companies in the proposed dinner, he was informed that tickets would cost $25 each, and that there would be ten seats at each table. He was also informed that several thousand people were expected to attend this dinner to be given in behalf of the industry.

Loew Optimistic

Business on the Coast Better Than for Some Time, So He Reports

Marcus Loew, who returned yesterday from the coast, says that business is better out there than it has been for some time past. He is very optimistic as to the outlook.

"Reports received upon my return indicate that business was better on Sunday and Monday all through the country than for some time, despite that this is what is known as a holiday week."

Production activities on the coast so far as Metro is concerned were very gratifying, according to Loew.

Stock holders of Universal Film have been called for a special meeting on Tuesday, Dec. 26, to vote upon the question of increasing the capital from one to seven millions.

If guesses are in order about all these millions, someone might guess that there is going to be a big dividend melon cut.

"Kick In"—Paramount—

Rivoli

TIMES—You may even see the theatricality of the thing as it goes along, you may hear its old machinery creaking, but the chances are you will find yourself interested more than once between the beginning and the end of its string of scenes. Because, in the first place, it maintains its speed.

WORLD—The picture is typical reformed-crook stuff, with a story of the well-born young heroine in her Park Avenue home thrown in to make the story harder. Lack the swiftly changing cleverness of Lionel Barrymore's crook stuff in the Boston Blackie pictures—and it is hamstrung by the Willard Mack motif.

TRIBUNE—Rank melodrama, with nothing left out, still "Kick In" is redeemed from mediocrity by the acting of a number of the members of the cast.

AMERICAN—The film was quaint melodrama, with some elements of interest. Frontpage, there was a fight between the hand-drafted hero and "Whip" Fogarty that gave one a thrill or two. There was, furthermore, the conflict between the hero and the guardian of the peace—always with the odds in favor of the hero.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—It does not tax the brain equipment of the onlooker, needless to say, but it supplies the thrill and excitement.

SUN—A brisk and enlivening photograph of the underworld and the upper crust, even though it seems like several films crowded into one.

GLOBE—Undoubtedly one of the very best pictures ever produced. Will join that list of cinema immortals which includes "The Kid," "Humoresque," and "The Miracle Man."

EVE. TELEGRAM—Fitzmaurice at his best with a star cast expounding in Colonel story he has to tell in Willard Mack's famous stage play, "Kick In."

Back From Mexico

B. T. Woodle, Hays Representative, Returning, Says Situation is Satisfactory

Benson T. Woodle, who went to Mexico in September as a special representative of Will Hays to confer with Mexican Government officials in connection with the recent embargo of the products of American film companies, has returned to New York after a successful adjustment of the difficulty. The embargo was lifted on Nov. 6 as noted, but Woodle remained in Mexico until the details incident to removing certain scenes from pictures that had been released prior to the embargo had been worked out.

The action by Hays in issuing instructions to prevent the making of any pictures offensive to Mexico was conveyed in person by Woodle to President Oregan. Several conferences followed with Secretary of Foreign Relations Pani, resulting in the signing of an agreement with the Mexican Government lifting the ban and stipulating that certain pictures previously released be exempted.

Flynn Back, Optimistic

John S. Flynn of Famous Players, who has been in Mexico arranging for the opening of Famous Players' activities, coincident with the lifting of the embargo, returned to New York on the steamer with Bernard Woodle. He said that during the past nine months, while the embargo had been in effect, Mexico has been flooded with European productions chiefly German made, and that Universal and United Artists were the only American companies to do business, with the result that while these companies showed a large interest and made productions, that many other important pictures made by other companies had been barred out and consequently there was much optimism as to the future when all of the big pictures made within the past year or so will be released. He said that Warner Bros. had a representative in Mexico City, and opened very big with "Rags to Riches," and that "Blood and Sand" with its Latin atmosphere also proved a big success.

John S. Day, Jn., in charge of Latin-American countries under E. E. Shauer, is in Mexico City arranging the opening of the Famous Players' exchange.

A. B. C. Meeting
Attended by Out-of-Town Exhibitors
—the National Idea Discussed

There was an important meeting of the Associated Booking Corp. yesterday. Up to the hour of going to press it was impossible to obtain any official statement of what occurred at the meeting but it is understood that among those present were Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana and Frederick Schafer of Chicago, a brother of Peter J. Schafer of Jones, Linnick and Schafer.

The meeting developed into a discussion for a tune of the possibility of the extension of the A. B. C. along nation wide lines. Rembusch spoke and said that in his opinion something would have to be done to remedy existing difficulties between producer, distributor and exhibitor; that rentals were amounting higher and box office receipts were growing smaller. He added that during the past few months he had an opportunity of securing all of the theaters in four different cities and towns in Indiana.

From that time forth, the greatest and the least dramatic moment in a feature film and in the performance of all the actors who take part in it is governed by the question of what kind of character and what kind of man Van Dyke is, and how he reacts to the events which follow.

Leading Exhibitors Line Up—Will Invade Grey Territory and Build

Boston—A number of exhibitors in Boston, in discussing the independent booking idea, are of the opinion that this action may swing Massachusetts exhibitors in favor of booking combinations.

The proposed meeting to be held to discuss the Exhibitors' Dis. Corp., the M. P. T. O. plan, has been postponed awaiting development of the Independent Booking Corp. idea.

American Business Through English Eyes

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—Col. A. C. Bronhead, U.S. Artillery, just back from states, is quoted as saying: "As a matter of fact, only the big pictures are really drawing decent business, and that not in every case. "American program pictures," he added, "were dead in their own country." American producers and distributors declared that it was quite impossible to forecast the probable success of a picture, even if it were built up on an acknowledged good story, played with a big cast and produced regardless of expense.

The American public was in a peculiar kind of fractions mood; what was meat to it in film entertainment one day was poison the next."

Arbuckle films. No act of any official can make up the public mind in this matter.

"Telegrams coming to our national offices indicate general opposition to the return of Arbuckle to the screen. We are now awaiting more conclusive expression of opinion in this relation as the same is being obtained from the public by theater owners in different states and districts."

T. O. C. C. Action Next Tuesday
It is understood that the T. O. C. C. will take up the question of the Arbuckle films showing at their next meeting.

S. A. Moross, secretary, said yesterday that speaking personally and not in behalf of the organization: "General Hays takes a peculiar stand in my opinion. At one time he banned Arbuckle's pictures and when he thinks the public has forgotten he reissues them. We as theater owners have a certain duty to perform and we must ascertain from the public whether they want to see Arbuckle pictures.

"I understand that a number of members of the T. O. C. C. will canvass their patrons to determine whether or not they want to see Arbuckle pictures and they will then base their decisions upon the result of this move."

Opposition Points
Buffalo—Mrs. Charles Stegesmon is quoted here as saying that Will Hays had deceived the City Federation of Women's Clubs at the summer Chautauqua when he promised that Arbuckle would not be permitted to reappear in pictures.

Los Angeles—Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs announced that they could "not recede from their opposition" to the showing of Arbuckle's pictures.

Carl Laemmle Wants to Help Directors With That "Big Picture"

"Every director has a wish of a big picture that he wants to make. Every director is just waiting for a chance to do this, and usually waits until he can form his own company. Those are the men I would like to get in touch with, I believe we can work together for our mutual good and profit."

This is Carl Laemmle's latest idea. He is very much in earnest with regard to it, and says that as fast as they can be found, he wants to communicate with directors who, with this thought in mind, might be able to work with Universal.

Pennsylvania and Jersey Exhibitors Pass Resolutions Affecting the Comedian and Condemning

Wire was read at the meeting from M. P. T. O. leaders throughout the country who urged the national officers to use their greatest influence to have Hays change his decision regarding Arbuckle.

O'Toole said: "There is a distinction of who's who in the industry. Will Hays represents some of the producers and distributors—not all.

In the Courts

A default judgment for $15,033 has been filed against Max Spiegel and the Adeline Amusement Co., by Jacob Wener on a note.

A suit of Morante & Fowler against the Clark-Cornelius Corp. has been settled and discontinued by an order of Supreme Court Justice Mullan.

A judgment for $15,002 has been filed in the Supreme Court by M. Shapiro & Son against the Sheridan Theater and William F. Rafferty on a note.

A default judgment for $329 has been filed in the City Court by the S. R. S. Theater Co. Inc. against Jesse Levine of 1600 Broadway, for notes payable at the New 125th St. Theater.

A summons has been filed in the Supreme Court in a suit of the Federation of film exchanges of New England against Harry Garson and Clara Kimball Young. The amount sued for was not stated by Edward M. James, attorney for the plaintiff.

Supreme Court Justice Mullan has granted an application by the Claremont Film Laboratories for the appointment of a receiver for the property of the Key Holding Corp., against which the plaintiff got a judgment for $3,121 last May which has not been paid. The Film Booking Offices has $100 in cash and about 150 negatives belonging to the defendant, and the receiver will take possession of these.

William G. Schmidt has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to a suit by Marie Lewis, in which he denies that he gave notice to the plaintiff on May 6, 1920, of the termination of their partnership in the Fidelity Pictures Inc. without sufficient cause. He alleges that the plaintiff consented to such termination, and states that the firm was organized to market films and that he dissolved it because she performed acts impairing his business reputation, as the result of which the firm lost $5,726. He asks that she bear half the loss, and that he have judgment for $3,363 against her.

In the suit of Doubleday, Page & Co., against Vitagraph to recover royalties on films of The O. Henry stories, Supreme Court Justice Platza heard an application to strike out the defense, and the court finds that it was insufficient. The defendant contends that even if the answer was held bad as a defense it could not be stricken out as a counterclaim. This is to the effect that the defendant has invested large sums of money making the films and is still the owner of the film rights under the contract notwithstanding the attempt of the plaintiff to declare such rights forfeited, and to sell them to other producers. The defendant asked an injunction against such action. The court will hear further arguments on this point. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant has not carried out the agreement to pay $750 for each three months covered by the contract.

Oppose Arbuckle

We represent theaters and theater owners. Hays says that Arbuckle will be permitted to return to the screen, Hays is employed by the men who own the pictures and who get a financial benefit out of the pictures.

The return of Arbuckle will allow the selling of pictures already made by influential concerns which are helping to pay Hays' salary. The theaters may buy the pictures but the final analysis of the public's attitude toward Arbuckle in pictures and the public will determine.

In the press all over the United States there are telegrams against permitting Arbuckle to return and the nation cries a protest against Hays' decision. The newspapers have sounded public opinion on the subject and it seems the public is opposed to having Arbuckle back on the screen.

More and More Protests Develop Against Action of Hays

If there was a telegraph wire running into any New York newspaper that wasn't clogged yesterday with messages regarding the Arbuckle situation, it would be only because the editor had already notified his correspondents that he had enough.

In addition to the cities mentioned in yesterday's issue, reports came from many points throughout the country along the same line.

In addition, the New York newspapers carried editorials relative to the situation, and the N. Y. Daily News had the "inquiring photographer" question six people on Fifth Ave., as to what they thought of the Arbuckle situation.

The editorial of the Times said that Hays' pardoning of Arbuckle "was a serious technical blunder." The Daily News editorial says the moral forces of this country will pursue Arbuckle unrelentingly.

In view of the statement of protests developing, it need not surprise to discover that Famous Players may not release any of the Arbuckle pictures now on the shelf.

Bandit Story of Robin Hood Type Good For Johnny Walker

Johnny Walker in
"CAPTAIN FLY-BY-NIGHT"
Film Booking Offices
DIRECTOR .................. Wm. K. Howard
AUTHOR .................. Johnston McCulley
SCENARIO BY .................. Eve Unsell
CAMERAMAN .................. Lucien Andriot
AS A WHOLE ...... Another old California romance with action, thrills and a able star that will please many STORY ...... A mild sort of Robin Hood that serves as good vehicle for Johnny Walker DIRECTION ...... Satisfactory; provides attractive atmosphere and keeps it going at good rate once it gets started
PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Very good
LIGHTINGS .................. All right
STAR ...... Gives a first rate performance and does some Fairbanks tricks nicely SUPPORT ...... Adequate; Shannon Day a fair lead; others Francis McDonald, Edward Gribbon
EXTERIORS .................. Pretty
INTERIORS .................. Suitable
DETAIL .................. Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Bandit assumes identity of cabellero to win his fiancee but is foiled and captured by him
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,940 feet

Those who like tales of daring bandits of old will undoubtedly find "Captain Fly-By-Night" as satisfactory entertainment and where they want action and thrills of the Robin Hood order they will favor this latest picture starring Johnny Walker. The star has a Doug Fairbanks role which he handles capably and it is something different for him. There is considerable action of an acrobatic nature in which Walker has plenty of opportunity to display his agility.
They'll like the leaps and bounds and some of the stunt stuff has been splendidly photographed. For instance where hero chases his opponent into a tower in a duel and tosses the loser off the ledge there is a shot showing the victim hurling to the ground. This is shot from above and looks like a bit of slow motion photography. It supplies a first rate thrill and there are others. One that may not register correctly is where hero jumps from one roof to another and then to his horse. Since he has the girl in his arms it is hardly possible that he could do this so neatly and with the girl looking as fresh and unruffled in the very next shot. It's too much of a "movie" thrill.

But the action, on the whole, is good, and the story moves along at a good pace. Howard takes a little long to get it going but he conceals the point of the plot, managing to keep the solution well under cover until the right time. The picture contains good pictorial appeal in the pleasing atmosphere of Old Califoria in the romantic days of the Spanish colonies.
There are numerous attractive exteriors and the interiors, also are good.

Walker is supported by a capable cast with Shannon Day as a senorita. She is a good type for the role but does not always photograph to advantage. Edward Gribbon is suitable and Francis McDonald leads the hero a merry chase as the real "Capt. Fly-By-Night."

Story: One cabellero is pursued as the daring bandit Fly-By-Night while another presents himself to the Senorita as her betrothed Roche. Action and thrills intervene with the flight and adventures of the bandit and the subsequent denouement that the supposed bandit is really Roche while the other is Fly-By-Night.

Will Please a Good Many Who Like This Sort of Action and Thrills

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This will probably please a good many so if you know that your folks like these stories of old time bandits you can undoubtedly satisfy them with "Captain Fly-By-Night." Johnny Walker's admirers will have some new thrills in store for them and you can let them know he gives a Doug Fairbanks sort of performance.

You can make some promises for action and thrills and let them know it is a romance of old California.
Play up the title with catchlines. The atmosphere suggests exploitation possibilities that should get them interested. Appeal to the star's admirers and use stills of him in the lobby together with what display you can secure to advertise the picture.

CAMERAMAN ......................Percy Hilburn
AS A WHOLE......Fine timberland story that has been splendidly made with mighty spectacular and thrilling climax

STORY......Given excellent production and played by capable and well suited cast

DIRECTION.....Very good; provides splendid production, realism in atmosphere and a marvelous forest fire climax

PHOTOGRAPHY ......................First rate

EXTERIORS .....................Beautiful timberland shots
INTERIORS .........................All right

DETAIL ..............................Good
CHARACTER OF STORY......Girl fights to save forest grown by her father and with aid of son of man forcing her to sell, wins out

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .............8,100 feet

There seems to be a very definite run on box office bets with "Hearts Aflame" to be added to the list. It contains genuine audience appeal and there is sufficient variety of entertainment elements in it to make it an easy one to handle. They'll like the combination of comedy and drama. The humorous business is very real and it will draw the laughs more certainly because of its being so natural and not forced. Frank Keenan's obvious pride when his son begins to do big things out in the timberlands is a source of keen enjoyment. In fact Keenan's entire performance is unusually worth while and he makes his characterization especially interesting in the way he plays it.

Should Pull Big Business If You Go After It

Exhibitors should be able to do real business with "Hearts Aflame." It is something a little different from the usual run of melodramas and you can go the limit to get them interested in the picture. Your biggest bet is the marvelous forest fire which makes up the climax. A trailer of this and you won't be able to keep them away. They are going to want to see it all and you can make your promises for it.

Let them know it is a timberland story. Use all the posters and stills you can get into your lobby and get your announcements going well in advance. Properly handled the picture should give your B. O. a very Merry Christmas. Go to it on this one and the results should make it well worth your while. Promise laughs, thrills and pictorial appeal.
“One Exciting Night,”
The first genuinely up-to-date mystery picture ever filmed. Brimful of love, laughter and thrills. A frantic search for a missing half million dollars. Stealthy figures and peering eyes. Sliding panels and secret doors. The funniest black-face comedian possible. And a tremendous storm scene as a gorgeous, dynamic climax.

“Orphans of the Storm,”
A Griffith picturization of the famous “The Two Orphans” as the basis for a historically accurate presentation of the titanic upheavals of the French revolution. The sweetest love story of all history. Scenes of pagan splendor among the aristocrats as the rabble riots for bread. The “great ride” as a Griffith climax.

“Way Down East,”
Foremost among the most popular pictures D. W. Griffith ever made. Melodrama and romance; comedy and adventure; box-office certainty everywhere every time. A cast beyond criticism or comparison. A picture for the small town theatre as well as the big city. And there’s the Griffith thriller in the form of a smashing ice scene.

“Dream Street,”
A truly Griffith feature in every sense of the word, picturing the famous Limehouse district of London. A tenderly beautiful love story for the romantically inclined, plus mystery and melodrama as only Griffith himself transfers to the screen. The great director is at his best in this picture of beauty in the midst of squalor.

“The Love Flower,”
A D. W. Griffith triumph from all phases of picture-making. A wonderful story that runs the gamut of all the human emotions—love, hate, revenge, forgiveness. Superb settings on a tropical isle, with marvellous photography showing a battle to the death deep, deep, in the water at the foot of a towering cliff. A real thriller.

“Broken Blossoms,”
The most artistically beautiful picture this master producer ever filmed, with real entertainment for all classes. Not a “high-brow” picture, but a tremendous melodrama of the London Limehouse district, with a love story so tenderly told as to bring tears—tears that wash away sadness and make beauty seem more beautiful.

“The White Rose,”
Now in course of production.

DIRECTOR .................. Wm. Beaudine
AUTHOR ..................... Lem Parker
SCENARIO BY ............. Mildred Considine and Edmund Goulding
CAMERAMAN ............. Floyd Jackman and E. Duper
AS A WHOLE .......... An audience picture and sure-fire box office stuff regardless of its regulation meller hokum

STORY .... As old as the “movies” but still doing the business and getting the laughs DIRECTION .... Plays to all the old gags and sticks to the formula but it's what they want

PHOTOGRAPHY .......... First rate
LIGHTINGS ................. Good
STAR ............. Will look good to his many admirers; has considerable help in this one

EXTERIORS ............... Not very many
INTERIORS ................. All right
DETAIL .................. Adequate; good titles

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Son of murdered policeman helps trace assailant who is captured and found to be notorious blackmailer

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 7,000 feet

No matter how much they “knock” the old fashioned meller of “Heroes of the Street” type it doesn’t seem to hurt the possibilities of the pictures as far as the box office is concerned because they keep right on making money and satisfying a big majority of picture goers. And it is not surprising that Wesley Barry is pleasing them with his latest production at the Strand this week.

The picture follows along familiar lines with all the regulation meller hokum making its appearance as the plot progresses. It has everything from Wes eating pop corn in the gallery and dropping it into the old man’s ear trumpet in the orchestra to the near-death of the boy hero at the hands of one of the accomplices of his father’s slayer. It combines laughs, thrills and pathos in the usual manner with the comedy coming first and getting you in a happy frame of mind, preparatory to the pathos that is to follow in the tragic death of the policeman. The film, incidentally, is dedicated to the bluecoats.

Director Beaudine injects a delightful “happy” atmosphere in the early reels by showing the home life of Mike Callahan, the policeman, and his wife as they prepare for the Christmas fun. Callahan’s efforts to keep peace in the neighborhood and restrain the pugilistic ambitions of young Mickey provides a lot of laughs and the usual fistic encounters between the three young Callahans will amuse them. They’ll like Wes’ pal, a well trained dog. The picture will be particularly sure-fire for the youngsters.

The death of Callahan gives Barry a chance for dramatics and he does pretty well. He takes the place of Pop’s and plays Santa Claus for the other kids and then sets out to get “the Shadow,” his father’s murderer. The thrills are more or less mild with the baby pulling over a sewing basket and miraculously escaping injury from the scissors. Then comes Wes’ capture by one of the Shadow’s men and his imprisonment in a hole fast filling with water. The dog saves his life as you know he will. Beaudine has handled the production satisfactorily and the star is given a first rate supporting cast in those mentioned above.

Story: Mickey Callahan takes his pop’s place in the home and with the aid of Lane, a reporter, decides to locate a notorious blackmailer known as the Shadow, slayer of Mickey’s father. The adventures of Mickey and the final capture of the Shadow gives Barry plenty to do and furnishes laughs and excitement for his admirers.

Should Be Easy To Exploit and Is Appropriate For Holiday Season

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It looks like a first rate box office number and in the big majority of houses throughout the country this is the type of picture that usually gets the best results. At least they satisfy the box office. Wesley Barry has a big following and where he is popular “Heroes of the Street” is bound to please them. It has considerable Christmas spirit and should be especially appropriate for this season.

Promise them laughs and thrills and tell them Wes is the son of a policeman who helps capture his father’s slayer and the most notorious blackmailer sought by the law. Use stills of Barry in the uniform and others of him in a messenger outfit with the dog. Let them know that Marie Prevost’s in the cast and exploit it for your own gain.

ONE OF THE GREATEST ACHIEVEMENTS OF ALL TIMES
Willard Mack's Crook Melodrama Given Good Production and Cast

Geo. Fitzmaurice Prod.
"KICK IN"
Paramount

DIRECTOR .................. George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR .................... Willard Mack
SCENARIO BY ................ Ouida Bergere
CAMERAMAN ................ Arthur Miller

Stylish and fast-moving melodrama which is good entertainment. Fitzmaurice has injected a lot of fast moving incident that keeps the plot developing at a fast pace. The only objection is that it gets a bit unconvincing through a desire for plenty of action and there are too many near-climax scenes.

The story has been splendidly mounted with some sequences that have a truly DeMille atmosphere. Just why it was necessary to show up the heroine's mother with her party of friends isn't obvious but probably the director thought it would give the picture an added "kick." The orgies of the mother, affectionately termed "Duckie," are rather gayly pictured. Some of the settings are prettily done, especially the entrance hall in the District Attorney's mansion. It looks like a coronation ballroom. The removal of the young crook's body isn't an especially pleasing bit.

The plot is of a familiar crook variety and not always convincing. There is altogether too much double-crossing to make it plausible, but for the sake of action and thrill it will probably not be criticized.

The cast is a good one and contains popular Paramount players such as May McAvoy and Betty Compson and Bert Lytell and Gareth Hughes, former Metro stars. Every one does good work and the minor parts are capably handled by Kathleen Clifford, the usual type of cabaret dancer, Mayme Kelso, the gay mamma, Walter Long, a regular "detective." Others are John Miltern, Robert Agnew, Jed Prouty, Carlton King and Charles Ogle.

Story: Molly Brandon, daughter of the district attorney, saves Chic Hewes, a reformed crook from arrest by proving that her brother committed the theft. But Fogarty, anxious to send Chic back to prison, implicates Chic in a robbery committed by his young brother. There are numerous complications but with Chic finally victorious through the help of Molly who joins him out West a year later.

Will Stand Promises Where They Like This Kind of Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The story on the whole, is regulation crook melodrama so if your folks like this kind of entertainment you can count on satisfying them. If you are a bit shaky about the story, you might rely on a good production, a first rate cast and the action and thrills to get it over. It should satisfy from some angle at least.

In case there is any doubt about this being a re-issue be sure to say that it is a new production. Some of the DeMille-ish scenes either shown in a trailer, or displayed by stills in the lobby, might attract those who seek the spectacular. They’ll probably get a “kick” out of the revelries of the district attorney’s wife. Use Betty Compson’s name, Bert Lytell’s and also those of May McAvoy and Gareth Hughes.
Dupert Hughes writes:

"Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than "One Week of Love". It opens with great vivacity and brilliance, then suddenly develops a situation thatseizes and holds to the last moment.

Eliot Hasenfratz, as a beautiful flapper abruptly plunged into a wilderness of dangers, meets every opportunity with remarkablespirit and restraint. Oppey Pearls gives a magnificent performance with the effect of a volcano, silent but ominous. The conflict between these two characters, one a reckless girl, the other a reckless brute, and the resulting influence of each on the other, give the picture high dramatic value.

The production is gorgeous in its interiors and majestic in its landscapes. The photography and tinting are perfect, and the picture ought to have great success with the public.

Sincerely yours,

Rupert Hughes

As you see, it isn't so much that another critic has pronounced "One Week of Love" a great photoplay as it is that this noted writer, himself a producer of motion pictures, should lay aside his own important affairs to sit down and voluntarily type a word of praise for the production.

We liked his letter and are proud of the picture that inspired him to write it. Almost every mail brings us letters of appreciation from personages the country over.

DIRECTION ......... First rate; caters to the crowd that will go in for what a story of this kind offers

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... All right
LIGHTINGS .............. Usually good; sometimes too bright in close-ups

Estelle Taylor attractive and does good work with performances of William Scott, Mae Busch equally effective; Willard Louis not the best type for department store manager

INTERIORS .............. Adequate
DETAIL ............... Sufficient; some titles not good

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... They probably all know it

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 6,400 feet

Charles Blaney's old stage play but what it always was and the director has produced it without deviation and with an effort to reach those who want a picture of this type. Nothing has been omitted in the way of meller hokum. It starts out with the release of the hero from jail and establishes a satisfactory premise in the introduction of the various characters and their relations to each other. There is Mame, the sister of hero, who sports fur coats and a permanent wave because she is the private secretary of a department store manager. Gradually you begin to understand how Mame got the job and it works into a fairly complicated plot involving the murder of the manager, the implication of hero's sweetie, the confession of hero to save her and the usual fire which causes Mame's death and the fact that it was she who killed the man.

LeSaint has worked with a good continuity and the interest is nicely sustained through a succession of events that keep increasing the interest as the plot is developed. It is easy to follow and despite the wealth of hokum that it contains, the story does maintain quite a semblance of logic and plausibility. Production values are adequate for a feature of this type.

The cast is very well balanced and contains several prominent film players such as Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, William Scott, Wallace Beery, James Morrison and Tully Marshall. Everyone does good work and there are a lot of good names to use in exploiting the title.

Besides the fact that the material is the sort that will appeal to many, the picture has other angles that will make it a favorite. There are some mighty attractive gowns to be seen, especially those displayed by Estelle Taylor, and the fashion show, cabaret scenes and others will prove interesting. Wallace Beery's terpsichorean art in the dance hall sequence is very amusing. There isn't a great deal of comedy but there are some good thrills and action. The story is too well known to necessitate a synopsis.

Title, Cast and Right Exploitation Should Get It Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should do a first rate business for all hands, that is, the producers and the exhibitors that know this sort of material is sure-fire with the particular class that they cater to. There is plenty to talk about in exploiting this one. Everyone is familiar with the title of Charles Blaney's old Broadway stage play. Besides this you have well known names in the cast to work with.

You can make promises for the action and thrills and you might work it up with catchlines but don't give away the denouement. Use the stills of those implicated in the murder of the department store manager with the caption: "Who Killed Him?" then let them come in to find out the rest for themselves. For the right house and with the proper handling the picture should do very well.

CHARACTER OF STORY....“Tightwad” westerner comes to New York where he learns to give and wins the heart of the girl who refused him back home

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....5,594 feet

Jack Holt is such a pleasing, happy-go-lucky out door type that it may seem a bit odd to find him playing the part of a stingy westerner, but Holt’s role in “Making a Man” is thoroughly interesting and his many admirers are going to like it. Anyway Holt reforms and for a happy climax he even has a hobo dining with him in the Plaza. That’s sure enough proof that he’s become democratic.

Henabery has handled the material very well and the comedy possibilities in Peter B. Kyne’s story have been splendidly brought out and help to make the feature a satisfying entertainment even though the twist that affords the comedy is more or less of a fallacy. It isn’t likely that a man who knows enough about things to put on evening togs when he calls on the girl to propose would be so dumb that he’d go absolutely “broke” in New York merely because he didn’t know enough to wire collect for funds. He hasn’t the price of the wire so he takes to the park benches where he meets “Shorty,” a hobo but a prince at heart, who is destined to be the cause of his reformation,

But despite the fact that you cannot understand why hero should slip up on this, the situation leads to some mighty fine humorous stuff that will get the laughs.
Holt’s adventure with his park acquaintance leads to laughs that bring the picture to a happy ending. The troubles of hero when he tries being a waiter in a “Busy Bee” lunch will be enjoyed and Holt’s following will be amused by his performance. He gets a lot of fun out of it, apparently.

Henabery injects realistic atmosphere by actual shots of New York. When a story is laid in New York it’s good to see the real thing and not a “studio”
New York. He has given the star a good supporting cast and someone has written first rate titles.

Story: Horace Winsby’s harsh business methods force him to leave town. In New York his wallet is stolen and he is without money to wire for funds.
He meets “Shorty,” a hobo who is a willing pal for Winsby. They are working together in a lunch room when Patricia Owens and her father finish their search for Winsby. Patricia had refused to marry him back home because of his treatment of poor people. How Shorty reforms Winsby and he wins Patricia makes up the remainder of the story.

Use Star’s Name and Promise Pleasing Light Comedy Number

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A good many will enjoy this latest Jack Holt feature because it is a light, humorous picture that doesn’t demand much thought but offers a bright entertainment with the laughs well distributed. They’ll like the adventures of Holt and his hobo friend, splendidly portrayed by Frank Nelson. This entire sequence is fine comedy and they’ll like it.

For the star’s admirers say that he has a role some-ting out of the ordinary. Say that he has a good vehicle in Peter B. Kyne’s story and use the author’s name for the benefit of those who may be familiar with the story. Eva Novak, as Holt’s leading lady, might also be played up in your announcements, together with the usual exploitation which should be sufficient to get them interested.
Familiar Regeneration Theme Given Satisfactory Production

“ENVIRONMENT”
Principal Pictures—State Rights
DIRECTOR .................. Irving Cummings
AUTHOR .................. Harvey Gates
SCENARIO BY ............ Harvey Gates
CAMERAMAN ................ Not credited
AS A WHOLE...... Average crook melodrama with more or less familiar situations; some action and thrills of usual order STORY........... The old regeneration theme that is included in some fairly interesting by-plot DIRECTION...... Satisfactory; doesn't try to keep story from being ordinary; plays to those who like thrills of this order
PHOTOGRAPHY ............... All right
LIGHTINGS ................ Average
PLAYERS...... Milton Sills and Alice Lake do well in principal roles; others Ben Hewlett, Gertrude Claire, Richard Headrick and Ralph Lewis
EXTERIORS............... Some pretty shots
INTERIORS.................. Appropriate
DETAIL .................. Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY....... Girl crook is reformed through love for country fellow to whose farm she is sent after a theft
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....... 5,700 feet

“Environment” is the usual sort of crook melodrama based on the popular regeneration theme. Harvey Gates has surrounded the idea with some rather interesting by-plot that relieves the familiarity of it to some extent but, on the whole, it is about an average entertainment with the regulation melodramatic sequences, including the raid, the fire and the customary tricks of meller.

Instead of a girl reforming a man, the situation is reversed and it is Chicago Sal who reforms through the influence and love of Steve MacLaren, a country fellow who becomes interested, in the girl following his finding her in his house to which she has come to prevent a robbery. Cummings sustains the interest nicely and gets over some of the improbable twists easily enough without making them too prominent.

There are some bits that seem quite far-fetched but for those seeking the thrills that a crook melodrama of this type offers, they will not appear flagrant.

The story contains a strong love interest that will make it popular with women folks and Alice Lake is an appealing heroine in this. Milton Sills is well suited to the hero role and Ralph Lewis gives a good performance as the proprietor of cafe.

The picture is a trifle too long for the material contained and it would have been much better without the addition of the well-worn fire climax. It serves to prove that the girl's reformation is complete when she tries to rush into the burning building to save hero's mother and his adopted son but it is such an old fashioned touch of meller that the picture would be better without it. There is some pretty good action at times and the sequence in which Sal escapes when chased by the police offers a fair thrill. The very illogical twist in this though is that they send the country hero to jail when they know it is Sal they are after. This bit isn't very clear. Of course it gives hero a chance to make a sacrifice for the girl he loves.

Story: Steve Maclaren refuses to prosecute the girl who was implicated in the robbing of his house. Instead he brings her home but when she finds herself in love with him she goes back to her place as a dancer in “Diamond” Jim's cafe. Steve follows and is just in time to save her from the police. How Steve serves a term to protect Sal's name but is eventually rewarded by her love and redemption completes the story.

Will Please the Average Audience But Don't Promise Anything Unusual

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The average audience will probably be satisfied with “Environment” and if you know they favor the well known crook regeneration theme you may feel safe enough in giving it to them. Don't make any promises for an unusual story but let them know that it deals with a girl crook who fell in love with a farmer and reformed. Use the names of Alice Lake and Milton Sills in your announcements.

You might play up the title with catchlines and appeal to your women patrons by telling them of the romance between a girl, notorious in the underworld of a big city and a simple farmer lad. There are no offensive twists and the picture can be shown to family trade without fear. Stills in the lobby and the usual exploitation should be sufficient.
Plenty of Shooting and Excitement of That Order In Farnum's Latest

DIRECTOR ..................... Colin Campbell

SCENARIO BY ............. Jos. Franklin Poland
CAMERAMAN ................ Don Short

STORY......Based on familiar improbable twists, is of the typical western hero order

DIRECTION......Adequate; speeds up in last reel for a thrilling climax and supplies attractive locations

SUPPORT........First rate; includes Bessie Love, Frank Campeau, Fred Kohler, William Conklin
EXTERIORS ....................... Pretty
INTERIORS ....................... Sufice
DETAIL ......................... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY......Man sets out to get three men who deserted brother in desert; accomplishes mission and saves girl from ruffian husband

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............... 4,859 feet

This latest Dustin Farnum is of the old school western hero variety where the brave man of the west does away with a number of enemies with true wild and woolly fashion. It's an out and out hero vehicle for the star and as such will appeal to his admirers and those who still follow up the westerns of the old days in which hero knocks 'em dead at the rate of at least one a reel. Before the story is ended more than half of the cast has been depleted.

To record a few deaths in this there is that of hero's brother who is left to die in the desert by his three companions. Then comes the self-destruction of one of the three when confronted by hero, followed by the death of the second who is shot by hero in self-defense. The scenario gives the third man of the "Three Who Paid" a longer lease of life but he gets his just punishment in a fire from which he is rescued by hero in order to make a confession that will clear hero's name for the murder of the second man. So it is apparent that the plot is one of murder with a shade of romance in the person of Bessie Love whose role gives the plot one of its most conspicuous implausibilities.

Miss Love is masquerading as a man and teaching school in Sour Valley. But none of these people, nor even hero when he meets her, suspects that the little "fellow" is a girl. This is a very weak spot in the story but probably those who favor this type of offering will not bother about it. They'll be too much engrossed in the shooting and plotting of hero and the third member of the band who deserted his brother.

Colin Campbell provides an adequate production and the locations selected are very attractive. Many of the shots are particularly beautiful. Farnum is given a suitable supporting company including the regulation western types and Bessie Love who is a pleasing heroine.

Story: Riley Sinclair starts out to find the three men who left his brother to die in the desert, knowing only their names. Conscience stricken, the first man kills himself when approached by Riley. The second is killed by Riley in self-defense. In pursuit of the third Riley meets, John Caspar, a school teacher whom he befriends and later learns John is a woman and that she is hiding from a husband who married her to get her money. How Riley saves the girl and is cleared of a murder charge through the third man's confession makes up the rest of the story.

Will Do For Star's Admirers and Mention Bessie Love's Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For the average crowd where they are satisfied with this type of western feature, "Three Who Paid" will suffice for a showing without any particular comment. If Dustin Farnum happens to be popular with your patrons, you can make a little extra fuss about it but don't make any particular promises for it.

You might let them know that it deals with a man who went out to get the three men who deserted his brother and left him to die in the desert. This with the title, "Three Who Paid," can be made fairly attractive. It would be well to let them know that Bessie Love is the star's leading lady and stills of her masquerading as a boy might interest your women patrons.
Good Dramatic Offering of “Miracle Man” Type

“THE KINGDOM WITHIN”

SCENARIO BY ........................ Kenneth B. Clarke
CAMERAMAN .......................... John S. Stumar

AS A WHOLE...........A return to “Miracle Man” theme; effective dramatic moments and a satisfying dramatic entertainment generally

STORY......Rather unique but not strikingly so; particularly well acted and produced DIRECTION......Convincing and careful but five reels would have sufficed and provided better sustained interest

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Excellent

LIGHTINGS ........................... Very good

PLAYERS......Three outstanding performances, Pauline Starke, Gaston Glass and Ernest Torrence

EXTERIORS .......................... All right

INTERIORS .......................... Appropriate

DETAIL ............................... Ample

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Man’s hopes shattered in son born a weakling but whose faith restores his strength and a girl’s happiness

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........6,063 feet

Productions containing “Miracle Man” themes have been rather out of the running in the releases of the past year but Victor Schertzinger gets back to it in his latest offering, “The Kingdom Within.” And for those who like a rather strong dramatic entertainment and favor a theme which makes faith all powerful, the picture should prove wholly satisfying.

Instead of the proverbial blind patriarch it is a crippled youth who is the salvation of his own weakness and others. In this case the idea is logically and effectively developed without any very obvious effort to make it a preaching. Once in a while the titles come close to it but there are no astounding miracles except the one in which the hero’s strength is restored. This touch is just a trifle gruesome inasmuch as the youth has a paralyzed arm which he holds close to his breast and the sudden attack of the villain upon the weakling and the tearing away of the arm from its awkward position—is not altogether a pleasant sensation. But this is the big dramatic moment of the picture. Hero’s sublime faith had wrought a miracle and the act of the villain restores the use of his arm, the sight of which stays the strength of the assailant and makes him weak with fear.

Schertzinger has given the material a careful and worth while production. He has used intelligence in the development and secured an especially well suited cast. The story could have been told to better advantage in less footage and the interest more sustained in this way.

Ernest Torrence, the evil influence in the story, has come into considerable prominence for his many and varied performances in recent productions. He is a very clever portrayer of character and his work in “The Kingdom Within” is quite interesting. Gaston Glass is another dependable performer who contributes a worthy performance and Pauline Starke can always be relied upon to put over a sympathetic role. Others are Russell Simpson, Hallam Cooley, Gordon Russell and Marion Feducha.

Story: Old Caleb Deming goes through life grudging the fate that made his boy a cripple and a weakling when he has prayed for a son that would be strong, and “a man among men.” Amos Deming grows to manhood and finds happiness in making toys. Caleb refuses to admit his son to the home when Amos consoles the unhappy Emily Preston, ostracised by the villagers on account of her brother who has just finished a prison term. Amos comes to the girl’s aid when she is attacked by Krieg, a woodsman, for telling that he killed Dodd, the man who sent her brother to jail. Amos’ miraculous restoration and Emily’s happiness complete it.

Will Please Those Who Like a “Thinking” Picture and Should Be Easy To Exploit

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Where they like a dramatic entertainment “The Kingdom Within” should be well received and exhibitors who know that miracle themes are popular with their clientele will have a good deal to talk about in connection with Kenneth B. Clarke’s story, “The Kingdom Within.” Very likely your local church organizations would be glad to cooperate with you on this one if you think it would help exploit the feature. You can promise good performances with Pauline Starke probably the best known of the players although Gaston Glass has done several good things that they may remember. In view of the sudden popularity of Ernest Torrence and his fine character acting, use his name also. Catchlines will give an idea of the story and mention the producer’s name.

1st Four Episodes—"The New Leather Pushers"—Universal

Type of production.........................Fight story in two reels

Grouping the first four rounds of "The New Leather Pushers" you have a combination of eight reels containing excellent entertainment material. Those who saw the first series, over six months ago, will be more than anxious to see these, and they will not be disappointed. Reginald Denny as Kid Roberts, the gentleman prize fighter, can fight scientifically and with technique; has a most likeable personality, and a certain dignity and refinement that is totally unexpected in this type of story. The supporting cast in each episode is practically the same, with Hayden Stevenson as the Kid's manager, and Elinor Field as his sweetheart. Harry Pollard, has injected so much pep and action into each round that not until the final shot of each episode does the tension relax. The first reel and about half of the second of each round deals with the plot of the episode, each one of which centers around a big prize fight. The fight itself does not come until the latter part of the second reel, thus holding the suspense to the climax. And the fights themselves are knockouts. Besides the fights, you can use the name of the series, "The Leather Pushers" and tell your crowd they have been made from the stories which ran in Collier's Weekly. After they see the first round, you won't have to tell them anything. They'll come back for more.

"Christmas"—Carter De Haven—Film Booking Offices

Type of production.........................2 reel comedy

Here is an especially appropriate comedy for holiday programs and it contains some good laughs that are going to "strike home" when it comes to the preparation for putting up the Christmas tree. Many a man has had the same trouble that Carter De Haven has in his effort to put the tree in place. In the beginning Carter is sent out by friend wife to get a tree without paying for it. They get quite a bit of fun out of his attempt to chop down a tree which is standing near a sidewalk. Carter doesn't see the man holding it up and mopping his brow while he rests his burden. The other man had evidently been sent out to bring home a tree. He eventually chops one down in a rich man's yard. "Playing Santa" furnishes some more laughs and some excitement when a burglar masquerading as Santa, gets the whole neighborhood aroused. "Christmas" is good comedy and an appropriate one for this season.

"Fire the Fireman"—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production.........................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott is assisted by Jobyna Ralston in this comedy, but in the plot which is slight the characters get almost hopelessly entangled. Parrot is a new recruit to the town's fire department which is doing well. But the money used for its upkeep is needed for a new pool room and the town decides to fire the fire department. Thereupon the hotel landlord plots to burn his hotel for the insurance money but his daughter calls the police which arrives with the one-man fire department as the flames burst forth. There are some gags with the hose, fire-net, etc. which will get laughs.

Screen Snapshots No. 16—Pathe

Type of production.........................1 reel fan magazine

Many screen favorites are shown in interesting bits. Gloria Swanson works in a new picture while Sam Wood directs. Rosemary Theby, House Peters, Pauline Stark, Antonio Moreno and others in the company say goodbye to friends as they sail for Tahiti locations. Mary Milde Minter is seen in a canoe surf riding contest. The youthful cast of the "Our Gang" comedies are seen on location with Director Bob McGowan. A visit to H. H. Van Loan's picturesque home by Eugene O'Brien, closes the number. Will doubtless appeal to picture fans.

"The Man With the Twisted Lip"—Sherlock Holmes—Educational

Type of production.........................2 reel detective story

Instead of opening in the usual manner of these stories in Holmes' office with a visitor describing the case in question "The Man With the Twisted Lip" opens in an opium den with the well-known detective nowhere in evidence. However, after a little while, you begin to see through his disguise. Back in his office, he explains the case to Dr. Watson. The disappearance of Mr. St. Clair and some peculiar incidents surrounding this, such as his wife being lured to the opium den by a false telegram, the sight of her husband in an upper window and her finding no one in the room but a crippled beggar known as "The Man With the Twisted Lip." How the case is unraveled, with a most unexpected kick at the end makes very good entertainment. Entirely up to the standard of the series.

"Hee Haw"—Century—Universal

Type of production.........................2 reel comedy

There is a good deal of footage at the beginning of Al Herman's latest comedy featuring Maudie the mule which deals with Harry's troubles as a book agent and has nothing to do with the plot of the picture. Book agents are seen so frequently in comedies of late that they are in a fair way to become tiresome. This book agent, being no exception to the rule of comedy book agents gets thrown out of several houses before finding Maudie and her pal, a little girl without a home. Harry lives in a hotel and contrives to take them to his room but the hotel proprietor interferes several times. Finally Harry steals four pillows, ties one on each of Maudie's hoofs and sneaks her, thus silenced, up the stairs where she is so happy she kicks all the feathers out of the pillows. Those who like animal comedies should be pleased with this, which is somewhat better than the preceding offering of the series.

Pathe Review No. 188

Type of production.........................1 reel magazine

Longfellows' "The Brook and the Wave" is charmingly illustrated in the opening shots of this Review. How artificial birds are made for millinery purposes makes interesting subject matter. This is followed by some slow-motion analysis of toe-dancing. A chemical experiment which will greatly interest is called the "Fire Snake" and the issue closes with Paris fashions in color instead of the usual scenic bit.
Short Stuff

"Siege of the Lancashire Queen"—Tales of Fish Patrol—Univ.
Type of production..........................2 reel drama

This is another of the "Tales of the Fish Patrol," the Jack London stories being released periodically by Universal. The stories deal with the same characters but can be used separateley. In this story, the girl, Louise Lorraine, is seen as a Salvation lassie who is induced by Captain Griggson of the Lancashire Queen to go aboard on the ruse that there is a sick man who needs attention. By this plan it is hoped Le Grant of the Fish Patrol, will follow to save her and they will shanghai him. There is some good action in the film but it savors very highly of the old fashioned melodrama.

"Wanted: A Story"—Johnny Jones—Pathe
Type of production..........................2 reel kid comedy

The opening of this comedy is novel and consists of a scene in which an authoress reads her scenario to the director and producing manager in the presence of the youthful cast who are to decide the question of acceptance. The story deals with the children's activities after they find refuge from a shipwreck on a south sea island, and as she reads, the action takes place. The kiddies look cute dressed in tiger skins, but there isn't much plot and those who have seen the last few releases of the series may expect more action. The final shot shows the children's pleased acceptance of the story.

"Factory Methods"
And "Trusts" Discuss'd by Valenino
Over the RadiO

Talking over the radio at the Grand Central Palace Exposition on last Friday night, Valenino, in a speech of about 1,000 words, said in part:

"One can be measured by feet, but art cannot. And here lies the chief trouble of our motion pictures. Surely many of you asked himself this very question. "What is the matter with the movies?" And it is the problem that shall endeavor to direct my answer."

"Seventy-five and more per cent of the pictures shown today are a brazen insult to the public's intelligence. Only a few. T. W. Griffith, the great master and pioneer of it, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Dick Stalhenshess and a few other independent stars, directors and producers who really think that motion pictures can be an art. "Independent companies in the United States were to follow the factory cut and dry methods of motion picture artists who are a decided menace to motion pictures and art as well as industry."

Paris—An association named "Friends of the Cinema," has decided to award a gold medal each year to the film. French or foreign, which judges has best contributed to the progress of motion picture art. The French newspapers welcome the idea.

The Troubles of an Exhibitor

Well Film Daily:

Your getting this letter from the chairman of the League to protect exhibitors from the "Hitch YOUR WAGON"

To a star. So the old saying goes. But in these days a good '23 Cadillac is better to use. Than the one horse shay. All of which has to do with directors who have big ideas. And say—did you ever hear of a real director who hadn't that one big idea. That one pet baby doll. That he wants to make. And doesn't want to take any chances on it. And will wait until he gets his own money. And his own company. To do it. And sometimes all of it happens too late. And then the picture can't be made. For one reason or the other. There's a lot of ideas for big pictures. Held in this way by directors. And knowing it Carl Laemmle has decided to go after it. Says he wants those directors. To talk with him. Ready to make any kind of a real deal. Believes he will find the big pictures that way. And is out after the stuff. Wants to talk things over. With those directors.

Well, boys, here's the chance. You can tie onto a Cadillac. If you like the idea.

KICKING

Exhibitors are souring. On the way Famous is advertising nationally. Say the big idea is fine. Helps business. But object to the advertising of monthly releases. For first run business fine. But neighborhood owners kick. Say patrons claim the pictures are "old." Just because they may have been seen in a big downtown house. Think same effect would result. By using names of coming and recent releases. Without specifying dates.

MORE TOMORROW

Too much Xmas. So the rest of this comes tomorrow.

High Prices

Still Being Asked for Material by Theatrical Producers

There is no indication of a break in the existing high level of prices for screen material so far as Broadway shows are concerned. As an instance of this Belasco is asking over $50,000 for the picture rights of "Shore Leave," in which Francis Starr is featured. Picture folk admit "Shore Leave" would make "a nice little picture," but say that $50,000 for such material is just another indication of how the market is being bolstered. The Golden office is not putting a price on any material including "Lightnin," but is "listening to offers." Several producers are of the opinion that without the late lamented Frank Bacon in the part "Lightnin" isn't worth a plugged nickel.

C. C. Burr, Mushroom Pictures, predicts that unless a decided change is put into effect at once, a change that will guarantee "a square deal all around," and stabilize the business, that within six months, the booking of pictures will be done in precisely the same manner as the attractions for the speaking stages are handled. In other words that there will be at least two large concerns routing pictures over a circuit of houses, similar to the Erlanger and Shubert booking combines for the legitimate.

Such film looking organizations," says Burr, "will consist of the present big producing and theater companies on the one hand and the neutral distribution organizations, independent producers and the recently formed combines on the other."

Therefore, it is Burr's opinion, that should no change be made, the take place in the present method of bookings or selling product within a few months. The entirely new arrangement will be put into effect that will pattern itself after the two stage booking combinations.

"My own opinion," said Burr, "is that only one thing can be done to prevent such a drastic and unfortunate move. The industry must have a thorough house cleaning which will result in a standardization of business methods, which will effect every phase of the industry."

where down south. That we would now hear from Lena Ghentzer.

Lena got up and said she was interested in pictures and hoped to make some money out of her theater this fall.

Well, that was applauded and everyone was feeling fine when I called on Hen Moody of Erysipelas. Now Hen’s been in the business since it started back in 1920 and knows pretty near all the tricks. Hen is a good speaker too.

I introduced him and Hen gets up and says:

Gentlemen, I am sure pleased to be here and hope to see all of you make as much money next year as you did last year and I want to say this business is only in its infancy.

That’s where the fight started.

Hank Jenkins jumps up and starts the fight.

He says, if that guy Moody is wishing me bad luck by wishing I only make as much money as you did last year and I want to say this business is only in its infancy.

Well, Moody who used to work on the M. & K. and T. railroad and was known as tough Bill, let swing and I adjourned till today. I think we will get some other matters threshed out today and will write you personally about it. I got another letter from that guy Mooney today. Says if we book any Mayer pictures, he’ll send his publicity man out to help put it over. Is that the guy that helped Methods that will guarantee a square deal all around, one that will bring the producer, distributor and exhibitor into perfect harmony."

Burr says that in most instances there is entirely too much bargaining between the producer and the exhibitor. The practice of “gypping” the producer is far too prevalent he says, and is one of the things that should be stopped, unless the producer, theater and distributor want to see two such booking combines as he predicts, come into being.

“A readjustment at this moment is needed, and needed badly, continued Burr. ‘Yet if no other solution offers itself, if the big producers and the exhibitors cannot get together and iron out their differences for the good of all concerned, if there are no compromises of some sort which will put the industry on a more businesslike basis, then the division I outline will come, let the consequences be what they may.”

“The chief trouble is the uneven and often discriminating bargaining between the producer and the exhibitor. This could be eliminated by adopting a uniform system of percentage booking. This remedy has been advocated consistently for some time. Nevertheless, the fact that combinations of exhibitors more or less powerful are being formed almost daily is sure proof of the fact that the present system of hit-or-miss bargaining has failed utterly. Percentage booking is the salvation.

“A further split in the ranks of the industry would only prolong matters which most ultimately need a more logical solution. At the same time, such a split as I foresee, unless there is a sure remedy, will serve only to aggravate matters and make feeling all around more unyielding.”

Reisenfeldt put over Mistress of the World, let me know. This is vital.

These various stars, directors and producers I have mentioned deserve a great deal of credit and encouragement from you, because by giving you such productions as they are keeping the good faith you have put in them, and are courageously combating the many tentacle octopuses which are trying to monopolize theaters and commercialize art in its eth degree.

"Do not blame the exhibitor who owns the theater you patronize if the ordinary program pictures you see day in and day out are not up to your expectations. He is not to blame any more than the artist who appears in it. They are forced into it unless they wish to face starvation, and they cannot be blamed for the material hints of nature's demand are the conquering factors over the spiritual thoughts of art's demand. The poor exhibitor, in order to have the few big special pictures that have a great box office value, is forced to sign these stars' entire output for the year, some 32 or more pictures, from which 20 or 15 are put on the shelf, lest he should completely lose all his patrons. You can readily see by this example why these picture trusts do not care what type of pictures, or how cheaply they are produced, as they have already 'cashed in' and let the poor exhibitor carry the burden."

Question

Addressed to any sales manager: How many of your salesmen see the pictures they are selling? And why don't they see a few more? Then maybe they could argue better with Mister Ex-hi-bi-tor. And make him see a few more. Thus helping things along.

HOW IT'S DONE

Two smart Greek boys owned the Victoria in Harrisburg. Put it over in great shape. Made a lot of moly. Along came Wilmer & Vincent. Who have tied up a lot of theaters in Pennsylvania. And threw a couple envious eyes at the house. And finally put up a lot of simoleons. And took it over. And "added another to their string." Cost about $300,000. Looked like a pipe. To make a clean up. And then. Well, if you want to see somebody weep. Ask the Wilmer & Vincent crowd. How they like the Victoria investment? It's been losing money since they had it. Why? Lots of reasons. But this one is important: the personal touch that makes all the difference between failure and success in running a house wasn't there. And that's one of the reasons why big strings of theaters fail. You can't humanize them. An electric motor is efficient. But it isn't human.

RIVETING GIRDER

"Just as you rivet the girders" says Will Hays, etc., etc., etc. And then he riveted a girder to beat the band. He announced the ban was off on Fatty's pictures. And the wild eyeredorners, the Ku Klux krowd; the low brow high brows. And a few more ismschases started to oppose the idea. And said the screen was too clean for Fatty. Or words to that effect.

When will these googly eyed folk realize that the great big American public will give its own answer. To any such question. They always have. And always will. You can depend upon them. And if they want the Arbuckle pictures they'll say so. Definitely. Emphatically. And if they don't. You can bet the remains of the turkey. That they'll say so in just as emphatic a manner.

ART AND OVERCOATS

Rex Ingram came up from Florida last week. Wearing his old Army overcoat. And wouldn't get a new one. Not for all Marky Loew's holler. And Bill Atkinson's protest. It was all right to doll up Ramon Navarro. His new leading man. In a lot of warm clothes. But for himself—well, that old Army overcoat holds too many memories. And if it isn't as warm as a fur lined Schanze made; at a couple hundred. It'll do anyway, says Rex. Which makes Bill Atkinson shake his head. And ponder. Over these artists. Who might catch their death of a cold.

NEW BRAND OF CRITICS

"These New York daily newspaper critics make me sick." Expression of manager of big Broadway house. "They see a picture and say it would be all right 'if' something or the other was 'changed' and 'something was done or 'but' if this or that was done. Say, they belong to the 'if and but' lodge."

Saenger's Indicted

For Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade

Grand Jury Action—In Other Litigation

New Orleans—Bail to the extent of $500 for each individual named, has been accepted following the indictment of officers of the Saenger Amusement Co. for alleged combination in restraint of trade.

The indictments were made public by Carroll B. Wainsley, foreman of the Orleans parish grand jury, in a return to Judge Richard Dowling in criminal district court. The officers are charged with an offense similar to the offense charged against laundry agents and directors several months ago.

That Dinner

Prominent picture folk said yesterday that they were in hopes that when solicitors for the "Welcome Prosperity" dinner appeared in various offices, that the idea of having any such affair would be disapproved of on the grounds that there was no need for such an event at this time. Several well known politicians who have been invited to the event, have been asking their friends in the industry what to do about accepting invitations. Senator-elect Copeland and Gov.-elect Smith are among them. It is understood that the New York Lodge M. P. D. A. intends to notify the management of the Hotel Astor that they are in no manner connected with the affair.

David Hochreith, reported to be a salesmen connected with the Fox New Jersey exchange, and who did some special work for the M. P. D. A. in connection with the Hays dinner last spring, is being mentioned as one of the important men in charge of the proposed dinner.

Thanks

To all the good people, to all the kind souls, to all of the 653 who forwarded Christmas cards —many, many thanks!

It's hard to determine who gets the silver platters of cakes for the most beautiful card forwarded, but certainly Herr Doktor Riesensfeld, musician and artist, is entitled to first call for the most unusual. His card consisted of a strip of film which rendered Christmas greetings from the Rivoli and Rialto.

And the wild eyed reformers; the Ku Klux krowd; the low brow highs. And a few more ismschapers started to oppose the idea. And said the screen was too clean for Fatty. Or words to that effect.

When will these googy eyed folk realize that the great big American public will give its own answer. To any such question. They always have. And always will. You can depend upon them. And if they want the Arbuckle pictures they'll say so. Definitely. Emphatically. And if they don't. You can bet the remains of the turkey. That they'll say so in just as emphatic a manner.

ART AND OVERCOATS

Rex Ingram came up from Florida last week. Wearing his old Army overcoat. And wouldn't get a new one. Not for all Marky Loew's holler. And Bill Atkinson's protest. It was all right to doll up Ramon Navarro. His new leading man. In a lot of warm clothes. But for himself—well, that old Army overcoat holds too many memories. And if it isn't as warm as a fur lined Schanze made; at a couple hundred. It'll do anyway. Says Rex. Which makes Bill Atkinson shake his head. And ponder. Over these artists. Who might catch death of a cold.

NEW BRAND OF CRITICS

"These New York daily newspaper critics make me sick," expression of manager of big Broadway house. "They see a picture and say it would be all right 'if' something or the other was changed 'and' something was done or 'but' if this or that was done. Say, they belong to the 'if and but' lodge."

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Theft Committee Meets

A general film theft committee, composed of one representative from each company in the Hays organization, has been appointed, and a plan agreed upon whereby the Burns Detective Agency will extend to all exchange centers the service that has operated so successfully in the New York territory. This means that in every city where film exchanges are located, local Burns agencies will cooperate with exchange managers in the recovery of strayed or stolen prints and in the prosecution of persons accused of film theft.

Among other matters discussed were plans for improving the film delivery system and the adoption of some practical method of identifying prints, also a proposal for junking film at one central point, where all companies can cooperate in insuring the total destruction of prints that are no longer fit for exhibition.

Saenger’s Indicted

The following were named in the action: J. H. Saenger, president; V. Richards, secretary and general manager; L. M. Ash, treasurer; E. M. Clarke, representative; N. Sobel, president of the Sobel-Richards-Sicar Enterprises; Manning Jacobs, manager, and Mrs. A. G. Shear.

The bills charge that the persons named “did on December 20, 1922,” the date of an investigation by the grand jury, “combine and conspire with each other and unknown parties to monopolize certain parts of the trade and commerce of New Orleans, the moving picture business.”

Investigation by the grand jury of the motion picture theater situation resulted from the filing of a complaint by independent theater proprietors. Several of the “independents” appeared before the jury as witnesses.

They included Frank Davis, Magic; Joe Zidlich, Dream; the Quello and Nome, R. J. Brunet, Imperial; Fred H. Dix, Victory; Alex Schulman, Coliseum; Mrs. Lazaroff, Crown, Hollywood; Mrs. Blach, Princess; Jack Calvert, Bijou Dream and Emilia Coupal, Casino.

Recently the Saengers were named in an action brought by the Federal Trade Commission against Famous Players, and several years ago the Trade Commission also had an action against the Saenger’s but this apparently died off.

Directed by Wallace Worsley
Scenario by Beulah Marie Dix
Released February 26th.

“Dr. Jack” — Pathe Strand

TRIBUNE: “Dr. Jack” is not too good as a “Grandma’s Boy,” but it is better than other people’s comedies. Grandma’s Boy had a message — the same message that was carried in the film, which is again carried in “Dr. Jack” — if you are not afraid of a little romance.

WORLD: But “Dr. Jack” is not so funny as we are used to in “Grandma’s Boy,” but it runs riot with funny situations and a good time is had by all. We have never seen a picture with a more pleasing and pure fun. The star is surrounded with a notable cast.

MAIL: — There is nothing wrong with this week a year, and we are glad to see that men have been charged with murder. But there is the old man who is not afraid to take away, and there is the other girl. Those who are not afraid of unpleasant scenes and situations, may see it in this picture. At the time, it is rather hard to do, but highly moral grounds I do not recommend it.

WORLD: — George Ade wrote the story and Alfred C. Hession produced the film. Coming from one of the smallest towns in the world, we are especially interested in the story and the writing. The village life, if exaggerated, are based upon, both to physical and social tendencies.

MAIL: — If you are in the Rivoli when this picture is in the house, you will be able to enjoy the last part of it fully — don’t walk out. You will then see the importance of this film, as it opens red or two it dou. It seems preliminarily that it is very well directed and is not a flat. There’s simply an overwrought, unexplained situation, but we think it is well done.

TRIBUNE: — Because they did it the right way, the people of the real world did not do the way the people in the picture do. This is a story of Mr. Meighan, George Ade’s knack of telling a story, and his characters will be delightful as they have been. But if you have not seen the picture, you cannot see the fun.

TELEGRAPH: — Is blessed in having the delightfully clever and clean-cut personality of Mr. Meighan, George Ade’s knack of telling a story, and his characters will be delightful as they have been. Do not buy the picture, and do not see the show.

SUM: — As a typical Ade tale this story, with its sometimes splendid situations, would probably look like a bad, but the observation of the present is limited mechanically that the strong characters and situations throughout six reels. So that by the time the film is in its fourth reel, the audience is not saying “I told you so” until he is sick of it.

MAIL: — Gets away to a dull start and then develops into a bright and interesting picture. It is the story of a man who has never been known to make a mistake. Whether he is money or makes money, in the end, the audience is taken by the story and in the end, he wins.

EVE. WORLD: — Here, in our estimation, is a story of a man who has never been known to make a mistake. Whether he is money or makes money, in the end, the audience is taken by the story and in the end, he wins.

GLOBE: — Ade’s humor is somewhat stale and too much for our modern audiences. Pathe Strand is as wholesome and smiling as usual.

“Headless Horseman” — Hodkinson-Capitol

TRIBUNE: — Certainly the spirit of Irving is there, and the story is presented with simplicity and humor. The settings make a big difference, and the characters are well drawn. The film is not too good as just after the Revolution, instead of in 1822. The old church, the divinity, the cemeteries, the bicycles, the horsemen, are well done. They are excellent reproductions, and it effectively closed on.

WORLD: — There are many other scenes, but a few of the reproductions, which is what it should be. And once more the tale is done what he could to spoil the pictures.

MAIL: — Irving’s story is faithfully followed, and his characters are well drawn. He has done a fine job of the children like this film play. Their parents are pretty much to laugh at Mr. Irving’s expense.

WORLD: — “The Flint” — Universal Radio

TELEGRAPH: — If a flawless cast, this picture is with tremendous human interest. It is a story of a man who has never been known to make a mistake. Whether he is money or makes money, in the end, the audience is taken by the story and in the end, he wins.

AMERICAN: — The picture is displayed with a wealth of entertainment. It is interesting, illuminating, instructive and amusing, and has between them and the headless horseman is pictured for the audience. The story is told and the whole thing is done on a scale that is not so great, but it is the children like this film play. Their parents are pretty much to laugh at Mr. Irving’s expense.

“ Beware of the meeting that has been called for Friday, Dec. 22, at the Hotel Vendig. It is a plain open thing to get your money, First thing they are going to take up is a general offered, which is said to be attends, so as to pay for everything, including all costs. Our meetings should be held with fancy eating and expensive eating.

“This meeting will not benefit exhibitors at this time. You will find it to be a scheme to sell you stock in a motion picture concern owned or controlled by Sidney Cohen and a few of his agents, officers, and our local organization does not share in the profits whatever. All our officers from the President to the Board of Managers to get easy pickings to think of such a thing, with the industry in such a state.

The out of town persons are possible to say things about Paramount, First National, Fox and probably some others, and then in the height of all the excitement, are going to shame you into buying stock in this supposedly exhibitor exchange. Just remember when C. E. Glueck, a former national President of exhibitors sold stock in a concern called United Picture Corporation where only one stock could be bought, and everyone who bought lost every penny they put in. Think and remember, the Superior Exchange in Philadelphia, inaugurred by Charles Goodwin, who is now one of our leading local officers when his stock was sold only one share, and practically every dollar invested was lost.

These are facts, and it looks as though some of our present officers, with the excuse of a packed meeting, claiming a whole lot of other business is to be done, are only trying to put down a stock selling plan again only dressed up in different clothes. Exhibitors should look after their theaters and not be caught in such schemes as these. Anyhow, if you do attend, bring along a fast purse or your check book ready to take the consequences.

“Our league should stand together for our protection, taking care of local and state matters, and not be tied up with fly by night schemes in boosting film stock or allow some one of our present officers to get easy pickings and mislead the regular members.

(Signed) "From one who has been stung hard several times with being stocked and never wants it to happen again.

Newspaper Opinions

"Dr. Jack"—Patie Strand

TRIBUNE—"Dr. Jack" is not so good as "Grandma's Boy," but it is much better than other people's comedies. "Grandma's Boy" is a cross between a little more than a little sentiment and a little more than a little comedy. It is a success. We can be cordially asked to say, and the comedy being secondary, he probably said to Hal Rosch.

EVEN THIS MUCH MIGHT STAND OR FALL TO THIS PICTURE. It is not so rich in color and humor as "Grandma's Boy," but it runs riot with funny situations and a good time it has never been better. The picture more actuated by the spirit of pure fun. The star is surrounded with a notable cast.

MAIL—If there is anything wrong with you this week, go and see "Dr. Jack." At the Strand Theater, Harold Lloyd must be a disciple of M. Cog. One can imagine film repeating everything. "It's funny every way, I must do better and better," and the world has done something to my thinker in the last few months, the last two. The most original, most amusing picture I have ever seen; and that is saying a good deal.

SUN—We only know what we have been told about that, but if so much as Harold Lloyd makes it work in a hilarious way, then we're not likely to love it. You probably won't think it is quite as good as "Grandma's Boy," but then what else is or has been.

"Back Home and Broke"—F. P. L.

AMERICAN—Nothing very much happens, and you know exactly what it will be. There is the pretty little girl, who is waiting for the husband; there is dear old mother, whose piano they take out and there is the other girl. Those who enjoy seeing unpleasant people floated may see it in this picture. At times, it is rather dull, though the stars coming from highly moral grounds I do not recommend it.

WORLD—George Ade wrote the story and Alfred E. Green directed it. Coming from one of the smallest towns in the United States, a story, it is not so much a play of village life, it exaggerated, are based most upon transference. It is worth seeing.

TIMES—If you are in the Rivoli when this picture begins—and you ought to be to enjoy the last part of it fully—don't walk out. You do not do a complete opening reel or two is dull. It doesn't seem proper to go out as Mr. Lloyd has a laugh that is quite flat. There's simply an overpower, unsprinkled picture, dimly illuminated, unlit.

TRIBUNE—Because they did it the way real people do it and not the way you see it in the pictures at the start, but too often, also Alfred E. Green and Tommy Meighan.

TELEGRAPH—Is blessed in having the delightfully boyish and clean-cut personality of Mr. Meighan. George Ade's knack of getting right character delineation, the excellent direction of Alfred E. Green and a well-chosen cast.

SUN—As a typical Ade fable this story, with its somewhat pleasant and rather, if anything, probably be quite palatable. On the screen the programs of the observer is limited mechanically. The story is divided into two halves throughout six reels. So that by the time the picture is 20 prints it has every ready. It is not a very clear adaptation of Mr. Tarkington's characters to the screen. Thought the author wishes to convey is there, more vividly expressed than was possible with the printed work.

EVE. WORLD—It has everything in it a woman ought to have. There's that wonderful statement coming in these days of thrill, and the thrillers played on the Plows, that is, are very much impressed with the printed work.

MAIL—A powerful well-gotten picture.

THROUGH a comedy of marked seriousness, it is sprinkled with rich humor. The story of which is supplied by Buddy Messinger, an impish small boy who plays his part so well that he gets all the minor honors. The film is thoroughly realistic.

JOURNAL—A significant production, in the eyes of a man who is a nothing but a very big man. This is an interpretation of the life of Mr. Tarkington, the author, and the story he wished to convey is there. More vividly expressed than was possible with the printed work.

GLOBE—Universal has been producing pictures for more than a decade. That the best is always made. While not an exact transference of Mr. Tarkington's characters to the screen, the story he wished to convey is there, more vividly expressed than was possible with the printed work.

First National Secures Rights to Belasco’s “Girl of the Golden West”
Among the important deals for picture material just closed is that through which First National secured from David Belasco the picture rights to his famous play “The Girl of the Golden West,” in which Blanche Bates starred for some years.

It is understood that Edwin Carewe will make this on the Coast and a special cast will be selected immediately. Release next season.

Picture folk say that several concerns have made this story time and time again, but always different a bit from the Belasco play and of course never using the title.

Double Crossed
Sydney Cohen Makes Charge Against Music Publishers Association—Clash With Evans
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Philadelphia—There was a constant clash at the meeting of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Penna., and Southern New Jersey at the Vendil last Friday, between Sydney Cohen and John Evans, former national concerns.

Evans at one time asked Cohen what about the printed reports which showed that he (Cohen), was paying the music tax to the publishers association, and in return Cohen declared that he has been “double crossed” by the publisher’s giving out his check for publication in one of the trade papers.

During the argument Evans wanted to know why the M. P. T. O. of A. had never been incorporated.

Music Tax Before Department of Justice
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Washington—Complaint regarding the so-called music tax has been filed with the Department of Justice by the M. P. T. O. A. No details regarding the complaint will be given out by officials of the Department who stated, however, that they had been working on the subject off and on for some time past.

It is understood that representatives regarding this matter have been made not only by the theater organization, but by individual moving picture men and by the music publishers themselves. The complaints from all sources are being studied together, and it is understood that the Department is learning considerable about the methods of Association of Authors, Composers and Publishers. Probably two or three weeks will elapse before the Department can determine what action to be taken in regard to these complaints.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

German-American Flotations
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Berlin—The Transcontinental Film Corp., Ltd., has just been founded in Berlin with a nominal capital of 10 million marks.

A well-known American film export house is said to be chiefly interested. The prospectus states as objects of the company the furthering and development of commercial relations between Germany and U. S., with special regard to film trade. The American lawyer Edwin C. Irvin is president of the Board of Directors.

Asso. Exhibitors Dividends
The board of directors of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., Arthur S. Kane, president, at its December meeting, voted to declare a 2 per cent current dividend on the preferred stock for the last quarter of 1922, payable to stockholders of record as of Dec. 31.

This is the fourth 2 per cent quarterly dividend declared this year. The director voted also to declare a 2 per cent accrued and unpaid dividend on the preferred stock for the year 1921 to stockholders of record as of Sept. 1, 1921.

Both dividends are payable Jan. 4, 1923.

Sons Control
Selznick Companies But L. J. Remains as Chairman of Board’s
Lewis J. Selznick, pioneer, leader, producer, distributor is turning over the active management of his enterprises—Selznick Pictures and Select Pictures to his sons, Myron and David O.

No more interesting announcement has been released to the trade in months. L. J. put it this way: “I have been on the fence about waiting for months. I have decided to put the sons in charge of the company.”

Myron Selznick has been elected President and David O. Selznick Vice-President of both companies. Lewis J. Selznick continues as Chairman of the Board of Directors.

In addition to the Selznick sons’ election, the meeting was important for the creation of two new Selznick officers: A. George Volck was elected Vice-President in charge of finance of both corporations and John S. Woody Vice-President in charge of Sales of Select Pictures.

A. George Volck entered the motion picture business some six months ago as assistant to Myron Selznick. Previous to that time, he had been prominently identified with important financial and railroad organizations.

“Teleview” Premiere
The “Teleview” had its world premiere at the Selwyn last night.

Remarkable Effects
Every director and every producer in the East should see the new Selznick production “Johannes Kreisler.” The Apollo. There are lighting effects, probably more bizarre than have ever been used on the stage, and a series of effects result that are almost astounding. The entire scenic investiture and the method of presentation is also new and most unusual. Particularly interesting is the use of what is known in film technique of the “cut-back.”

So far as is known this is the first time this has been shown on the speaking stage. The effect is unusual and most interesting.

The Franchise

First National President Issues Statement—Film Service Offered Where Exhibitors Are

In a statement issued yesterday to franchise holders, Robert Lieber, president of Asso. First National Pictures, Inc., said:

"First National is as firmly convinced as ever that a great many exhibitors who have invested large sums of money in motion picture theaters desire to be assured of protection for their firmly built places and the position where they can maintain their independence. The motion picture industry will be firmly established only when there is a proper balance between Producer, Distributor, and Exhibitor, which leaves them free to act in their policies and investments."

It has been and will be, our organization's constant effort to bring about more equitable methods of dealing between Producer and Exhibitor, and we are hopeful that the great majority of our franchise holders will realize that their cooperation with us will continue to maintain an organized comduct of effort for the object which means so much to us all.

I feel confident that those franchise holders who believe the plan suited to their pecular circumstances should be asked to continue under franchise. So, if there are franchise holders who do not share my faith in the First National franchise, I wish to announce the willingness of our organization to cancel the franchise of such exhibtors. Moreover, it is the desire of First National that those franchise holders who are released, if they have faithfully and curly lived up to their franchise obligations in the past, will get no loss on their franchise, and the money they paid out in the purchase of the voting trust certificates involved in the sale of the franchise.

Answered

Several days ago ran this QUESTION:

Addressed to any sales manager: How many of your salesmen see the pictures they are selling? And why don't they see a few more? Then maybe they could argue better with Mister Ex-hi-bi-tor. And make him see a few more. Thus helping things along.

To which Famous Players sends in the newest request. Telling of the coming 39. Which especially is directed. On page 2, "To the Exhibitor." And which in part says:

It is not always possible for each one of you to screen every picture that you purchase before you sign your contract. It is not always possible for us to send a representative to see you who will tell you everything about the picture that you should know.

This refers more especially to larger productions that because of their very nature do not represent on the face of them, the same stabilized value that you know you are securing when you purchase stars who have a well established patronage at your box office.

To assist in overcoming this, Famous Players will hereafter put out on its bigger productions what will be known as "featurettes." These featurettes will be carried by the salesmen as part of their selling material, and will be screened for you before you are asked to purchase these productions.

These featurettes will contain from 20 to 40 of the biggest scenes in the picture, or can give you an idea of the magnitude of the picture you are being asked to buy.

They will also, through subtitles, give you everything of selling, exploitation and advertising value that you should know before you buy the picture and that you can use after you have bought it.

(Signed) S. R. KENT.

The Teleview

Exceedingly interesting, and worth while. Not perhaps desirable for general picture entertainment, but as a novelty in the very large cities will probably get over. Showing much too long and should be cut. Trifling eye strain results, and one is inclined to become a bit stiff through remaining in one position.

But the stereopticon effect is excellent. Tifft's studio set's deserve commendation. Some compare favorably with some of the futuristic effects of "Dr. Caligari." DANNY.

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT TO FRANCHISE HOLDERS

OF ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, Inc.

It is now almost three years since Associated First National Pictures, Inc., put into effect the franchise system.

Though First National has never contended that the Franchise method of selling pictures is entirely perfect, and that all the problems involved in establishing stable and sound methods of dealing between Distributor and Exhibitor have been settled, First National has no apologies to offer for its efforts. I believe that in the Franchise Plan First National has made a great forward step.

First National is as firmly convinced as ever that a great many exhibitors who have invested large sums of money in motion picture theaters desire to be assured of protection for their film supply and placed in a position where they can maintain their independence as exhibitors. The motion picture industry will be firmly established only when there is a proper balance between Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor, which leaves them all secure, both in their policies and investments.

Independence and protection still remain the basis of our franchise, and therein it has been eminently successful. Moreover, in establishing the franchise, First National has made the first notable effort to do away with the old system of individual barter and unfairly varying prices, and to substitute in place firm and properly adjusted prices.

It has been and still will be, our organization's constant effort to bring about more equitable methods of dealing between Producer and Exhibitor, and we are hopeful that the great majority of our franchise holders will realize that their cooperation with us will continue to maintain an organized continuity of effort for the object which means so much to us all.

I feel confident that those franchise holders who believe the plan unsuited to their peculiar circumstances should not be asked to continue under franchise. So, if there are franchise holders who do not share my faith in the First National franchise, I wish to announce the willingness of our organization to cancel the franchise of such exhibitors. Moreover, it is the desire of First National that those franchise holders who are released, if they have faithfully and fairly lived up to their franchise obligations in the past, should suffer no loss on account of the money they paid out in the purchase of the voting trust certificates involved in the sale of the franchise.

Any franchise holder who is not in default under his franchise, who desires to terminate his franchise, as of June 30, 1923, or any subsequent time can do so by giving First National six months' notice at any time. It makes no difference whether the notice is given before January 1, 1923, so long as six months notice is given to First National and provided that the termination cannot become effective prior to June 30, 1923.

Therefore, First National is willing, at this time, in cancelling such franchises, to refund to the franchise holder who is not in default under his franchise the consideration he paid for the voting trust certificates in the form of film service consisting of such pictures as First National determines are available in each instance, which must be taken advantage of within six months of notice of cancellation.

First National will, of course, account to its Producers for this service just as if it had received the rentals in cash.

In making this voluntary statement (which goes far beyond First National's legal obligations under the franchise) I request that notice be sent immediately by any dissatisfied franchise holders to the Manager of the Exchange by whom they are being served, so that it may be determined by First National as to whether such franchise holder has been in default and is entitled to this adjustment. Needless to say, I include in this suggestion franchise holders who have sent in their notice prior to January 1, 1923.

So there may be no misunderstanding, I would say that, under this arrangement, the franchise holder when cancelling, will have to forego all his rights in the voting trust certificates.

In making this announcement, I wish to say that First National has no other motives than those herein expressly stated. I believe that the great majority of our franchise holders have sufficient confidence in the future of First National, and in the forward looking, and perhaps somewhat bold effort First National has made in establishing franchise, to continue with us. I invite such franchise holders to remain members of the First National "franchise family." But those franchise holders who do not wish to continue will, I hope, appreciate the fairness of our voluntary suggestion and terminate their franchise with the same friendly feeling toward First National that First National has, and will have, toward them.

The motion picture industry requires, more than anything else, the spirit of good will and fair dealing between all engaged in it. It is in this spirit and with high hopes for the future of First National as an organization grounded on the principle of fairness toward both independent Exhibitors and independent Producers, that I am making this announcement, and I hope it will be received in the same spirit by all our franchise holders.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over.

Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

“Help Yourself”

Cedar Rapids, Iowa—A “help-yourself” campaign was initiated for the show at the Apollo, 529 1/2 Main Street, and helped put this attraction over to splendid business. The slogan came from a tie-up with the Piggly Wiggly stores, retail groceries that have established a self-service policy. They are a western corporation and have a relationship in name only with the company that has just failed in the east. The Piggly-Wiggly stores gave 10 windows to tie-ups on Lorna Doone cookies, sold by the National Biscuit Co.

Women: by Nero

Indianapolis, Ind.—Most of the effort to put over “Nero” at the Apollo was directed towards a six-week newspaper campaign and the use of novelty heralds.

Twenty-five thousand “Nero” booklets which were printed at a reasonable price were distributed in the week before the opening. These were 2 by 3 1/2 inches in measurement and contained 8 pages. The front cover was of red and blue paper bore this legend: “What I know about woman by Nero.” The four inner pages were blank.

Interesting Firemen

Galveston—Effecting a tie-up with the Fire Department, gave the management of the Dixie a ballyhoo during the showing of the picture. As the burning of Rome is one of the big punches the management induced the Fire Department to name a “Fireman’s Day” during the showing. As a result local firemen were invited to see the picture as guests of the theater. They arrived in six fire engines, each of which carried banners announcing the name of the theater and the play. The local newspapers cooperated by playing up “Fireman’s Day.”

Offer of Live Baby

Libertyville, Ill.—The live baby stunt set all of Libertyville’s 2,000 souls on their ears. Bill Danziger, Paramount exploiter co-operating with the management of the Auditorium in advertising “The Old Homestead” put a flash in the newspaper to the effect that a live baby would be given away opening night.

A merchant made up a window of baby shoes, toys, and other infant articles with a card further announcing the stunt. The newspapers carried front page readers. In addition, a negro woman was put on ‘Main Street’ wheeling a buggy and holding a sign advertising the picture and the live baby donation.

The baby was brought on the stage, being none other than a future pork chop wrapped in diapers. The first person to claim him, got him.

Collectors of Internal Revenue are mailing to taxpayers who made similar returns for the year 1921 Form 1040A for filing individual returns of net income of $5,000 or less for the year 1922. The form is in six pages, two, of which should be used for making the duplicate of the return. Two pages are devoted to instructions. Each page of the form should be detached and retained by the taxpayer, and the original return mailed to the collector for the district in which the taxpayer lives or has his principal place of business. Form 1040 for filing returns of net income in excess of $5,000 soon will be issued, and mailed to taxpayers who filed similar returns for 1921. The filing period is from Jan. 1 to March 15, 1923.

The FLIRT

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S MASTERPIECE

Remarkable!   Says Reeland Reviews

"IT is a picture that will be remembered for a long time. A remarkable motion picture. It is a pleasure to state that 'The Flirt' as a picture is quite as good as 'The Flirt' as a book—even a little better, perhaps."

First Rate!   Says N. Y. Globe

"A REMARKABLE piece of work in every respect. First rate entertainment. Hobart Henley has handled the Tarkington story with rare skill and intelligence. I hope Mr. Tarkington writes Hobart a letter and tells him so."

Powerful!   Says N. Y. Eve. Mail

"A POWERFUL, well acted picture."

You'll Like It!   Says N. Y. Eve. World

"We thoroughly enjoyed the whole show. It must be said for 'The Flirt' that it has everything in it a movie ought to have, and that's a strong statement coming in these days of thrills. We enjoyed 'The Flirt' and think most movie goers will agree with us. We think you'll like 'The Flirt'; we did!"

A Big Box Office Attraction!   Says M. P. World

"ONE of the most intensely human stories ever presented on the screen. Every one of the characters seem real living persons. Strikes home. Exceptionally well selected cast. Should appeal to every class of spectator. Should appeal to every type of audience, and prove a big box-office attraction."

One of the Best!   Says N. Y. Telegraph

"ACTED by a flawless cast, it is a picture with tremendous human interest. If it meets with the success it deserves it should be one of the best pictures of the year."

Good for Any House!   Says M. P. News

"ADAPTED to the screen, it (The Flirt) retains its values—it's charm—its human appeal, and all its lifelike incident. Good for any house in any locality."

A Big Hit!   Says N. Y. Journal

"THE FLIRT at the Rialto makes a big hit. A significant production. A serious and commendable effort to interpret honestly a good piece of literature."

Excellent!   Says N. Y. World

"EXCELLENT! All who like Tarkington's works may find this picture worth their while. Most of it is excellent."

For Every Family!   Says Photoplay

"LISTED as one of January's seven best pictures. Of a family, for a family. It might be the slogan of this picture. For every family, in fact!"

Wonderful Exploitation Possibilities!   Says Ex. Herald

"DELIGHTFUL entertainment. Worthy of extra effort on the part of every exhibitor who plays it and has wonderful exploitation possibilities. No doubt about its appeal in any theatre."

One of the Best!   Says N. Y. Daily News

"ONE of the best we have seen in some time. Go to see it on our say-so. This photoplay is distinctly worth your while."

Presented by CARL LAEMMLE
In the Courts

Arthur Guy Empey has been sued in the Supreme Court by E. Kirby Smith to recover a balance of $13,932 on notes he endorsed for the Guy Empey Productions on April 30, 1921, to the Commercial National Bank at Shreveport, La.

Through the filing in the Supreme Court of an order of discontinuance signed by Justice Cavegan, it became known that the special assistant attorney for the producer, Edward T. Woods, who had asked for the order because the case had been settled.

Louis Jacobson has filed two suits in the Supreme Court involving the Kempton Pictures Corp., which he organized with Jacob L. Kemper. In one of them, against the corporation he asks $2,550 in damages due since last August, alleging that he was engaged as vice president at $150 a week. In the other, against the defendants the corporation, Kemper, Edward M. James, the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., Select Pictures, the Bay State Film Co., and others, he asked the suit or the original contract he and Kemper made with Select for 18 films, which contract was assigned to the Kempton Pictures Corp., after which a contract was made with the Hodkinson Corp., or the distribution of the films. He insists that he is entitled to a third of the profits but that in violation of his rights all money due from the distribution was assigned to James as trustee on June 30 last, for the benefit of the Bay State Film Co. and the Otis Lithographing Co. as creditors. He is willing that the Otis Company shall get $11,000 advanced to the Kempton Corp., but wants the assignment in other respects rescinded, including his assignment of his interest in the Select contract to Kempton, and a full accounting. He also demands $50,000 damages.

Metropolitan Opened
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Baltimore—The Metropolitan was opened here last week. It is a 1,450 seat house and cost about $325,000.

The Franchise

"Any franchise holder who is not in default under his franchise, who desires to terminate his franchise, as of June 30, 1923, or any subsequent time, can do so by giving First National six months' notice at any time. It makes no difference whether the notice is given before January 1, 1923, so long as six months' notice is given to First National and provided that the termination shall not become effective prior to June 30, 1923."

"Therefore, First National is willing, at this time, in cancelling such franchises, to refund to the franchise holder who is not in default under his franchise the consideration he paid for the voting trust certificates in the form of film service consisting of such pictures as First National determines are available in each instance, which must be taken advantage of within six months of notice of cancellation.

"First National will, of course, account to its Producers for this service just as if it had received the rentals in cash."

"In making this voluntary statement (which goes far beyond First National's legal obligations under the franchise) I request that notice be sent immediately by any dissatisfied franchise holders to the Manager of the Exchange by whom they are being served, so that it may be determined by First National as to whether such franchise holder has been in default and is entitled to this adjustment. Needless to say, I include in this suggestion franchise holders who have sent in their notice prior to January 1, 1923."

"So there may be no misunderstanding, I would say that, under this arrangement, the franchise holder, when cancelling, will have to forego all his rights in the voting trust certificates.

"In making this announcement, I wish to say that First National has no other motives than those herein expressly stated."

"The motion picture industry requires, more than any other, the spirit of good will and fair dealing between all engaged in it. It is in this interest and with high hopes for the future of First National as an organization grounded on the principle of fairness toward both independent Exhibitors and independent Producers, that I am making this announcement, and I hope it will be received in the same spirit by all our franchise holders."

Pictures and Jurors
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Oklahoma City—Jurors before whom a criminal case is being tried should not be permitted, while the case is in progress, to attend a motion picture which might either consciously or sub-consciously influence their verdict, was the opinion rendered by Judge E. S. Bessey, of the Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals.

The evidence in the case was purely circumstantial, according to the briefs filed in the case, and the jury, while the trial was in progress, was allowed to visit a motion picture show, the theme of which was a web of circumstantial evidence being woven around a suspected murder. The picture was said to have made a deep impression on the jurors and influenced them in finding the defendant guilty and sentencing him to life imprisonment.

Although the findings of the lower court were reversed on the theory that the evidence did not warrant the verdict, Judge Bessey throughout the opinion stressed the impropriety of allowing the jurors to attend the suggestive motion picture show.

High Prices

Talk heard of the Selwyn's wanting something like $150,000 for picture rights to "The Poor." Several large companies, including Griffith, said to be after the property, but balking at the price fixed. As a result of Selwyn's considering the idea of allowing some producer to have the picture, so they say, on sale basis, thus delaying the heavy investment. Incidentally the picture cannot be made for 18 months at least, so Selwyn's reports say, as the Selwyn's expect to send several companies out in the success next year.

Do You Want Success For 1923?

Every Exhibitor Wants It
Rodolph's Open Letter

Says Famous Offered Him $7,000 a Week—Not Sufficient for Money, Wants to Make Good Pictures

Photoplay, January issue, now out, contains an "open letter" from Rodolph Valentino addressed "to the American public," in which, in part, Valentino says: "My contract called for $1,250 a week. After I had paid for many of the clothes to be worn in my pictures and (every actor) requires an extensive wardrobe of expensive clothes and assistants and thousands of film letters every week, and sent my pictures when they were requested—yes, you can imagine I had very little left. But even at that I couldn't find a hundred dollars in my room. My bank manager told me that they would let me make a real photoplay instead of cutting out and-dried program pictures, that can be made over and compressed into a given number of feet and used in many cars, like so many boxes of sardines."

But it was not temperamental. I was not grasping. "When I was offered $7,000 a week by the Photoplay producers I would put the work on the cut-and-dried program picture basis. I refused it. And when I refused it, I agreed to go back to work on my old salary if they would permit me a certain writer and a certain director to have the last word on the pictures to be made. These two people are recognized by the producers as fair-minded, capable, craftsmen and artists, that they had agreed even to accept that.

"My salary of $1,250 a week may seem a great deal of money, but it is actually less than the salary of any other prominent star on the screen: Max Schreck $8,000; Norma Talmadge $10,000; William Powell and Mary Pickford $10,000; Theda Bara $1,000, to mention but a few, and if they were not worth it we would not let them work for the companies, the companies would not pay it to them." - Happy New Year

Mister Film Daily

I noticed in your catalogue dated December 9, the "Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective League of the Almost Far West" invite me to join them "in their deprivations of the public and film concerns. Being a man a few words, please convey this message to that gang of punch-drunkers at the Smellbax Theater, Sotlip, Nevada, does not desire to be hampered in his hobby at the same salary by a combination that would endeavor to dictate the policy of his emporium. He always has and always will play a long hat. If he wins, Good. If he loses, Not so good."

I fell for a band of burglars, once, they roned me in on a plan to buy a picture on which I had been hedged seven-fifty by telling me under their cooperative booking plan I could get this film for $5,98. I flipped for their "Salome" Opening

Being Offered by Circuits—Fox Pays $50,000 for "Knighthood"

It is reported that the Fox organization has paid $50,000 for "When Kingston Was the Queen," now being shown in the New York string of Fox houses about 110 days.

This means that it will cost Fox an average of $500 for each day's showing in the string. Some film folk said yesterday they couldn't care how this figure is cut.

The price paid is said to establish a new high record locally. The A. B. C. paid $60,000 for "Ten Cents a Dance," but was for a greater number of days than the Fox circuit can use. It is said that this price has proven unsatisfactory to some members of the Booking Association, and that there is some possibility of a request being made for readjustment.

propounded and showed it to the picture and then found out a few weeks later that the picture had been bought for twenty bucks for the six towns making that bit $333. I was the mark for $26.50.

I don't hold no malice towards this created person, as the person did make any statements that might have a tendency to injure their characters, BUT, I do know that, Clem Deneker is an stingy, he didn't direct a starving bum to the poorhouse. Lena Gunster runs five rolls of ten cent tickets once a week when his film didn't get in. Ice Bloom is so tight he wouldn't eat a meal out in the sunshine for fear his shadow would ask him for a bite and you know I played to big Oscar Anit down to get a clean shirt on him.

I've been getting back of every picture that I can get, my happy, un prova minimize exploitation. I seen in a paper that is the other day where a company is printed a picture called BROKEN CHAINS, and a picture that was once stored over to me. Get a largo hay log about twelve foot long and four foot thick. Suspended it in the lobby with chains. When you get a crowd in front waiting to get in, have the chains so the log will fall and kill three or four people. Of course you lose the business of those you kill but look at the attention it will create. I was in a picture called the Window Cleaners Oath" and as a special stunt I put out 200 puzzle cards with the title all gummed up so you couldn't make head or tail of it. I offered free admissions to those who figured out what it was and I'll be darned if everybody in town didn't get the right answer. But the business was ruined and it didn't mean anything.

The next time I put out a puzzle card it will be in some place where can trade a pair of first class horse effects for a wind machine. I'm going to play "The Old Homestead."

Yours,
ZEKE BEETZAND,
Smells the Theater,

Mary Scores in Berlin

Berlin—It is one of the queerest facts in the history of the screen that Mary Pickford was absolutely unknown in Germany until Nov. 15, 1922, when she appeared for the first time on a German screen. The war is of course, chiefly responsible for this delay. The Berlin public has now given its verdict and voted solid for "the sweetheart of the world." The press organs of the German picture capital are unanimous in their praise and state without exception that the public was charmed and that Mary Pickford became the pet of the German public also. The B. Z., the most popular Sunday paper, writes: "With regard to photography and production itself, it is the match of the average German productions of 1922. Mary shows in Berlin what she has taken in America—"tasteful childlessness and tasteful self-restraint. The public was rightly enchanted."

London Notes
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

"Timothy's Quest," which opened for a special run at Terry's on Dec. 11, promises to be a good holiday attraction.

A British Producing Co., Welch Pearson, has decided to make feature films dealing with British historical events. Their first is Neil Gowynne.

J. Stuart Blackton's Prizma feature "The Virgin Queen," is finished, and is being cut and titled. It will be shown this side early in the new year.

The fans of this side are just beginning to know and like Valentino, three of whose feature films were running simultaneously last week in the West End, "Blood and Sand," "The Four Horsemen," and "The Conquering Power."

Guy Fawkes, a coming British super, will be filmed early in 1923, and, provided the necessary permits can be obtained (there's not very much doubt about it), the old Houses of Parliament, St. James's Palace, the Tower of London, etc., will be used as locations.

Over here, as on your side, the demand for GOOD short stuff is increasing. A comparatively new Co. Quality Films, is making one and two-reelers that compare favorably. From the same studio comes also a series of two-reel Married Life comedies on the lines of the favorite Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew Vitagraph offerings.

Vitrix Filter, an invention to absorb the harmful violet rays, is now in use at a West End Kinema. This Vitrix makes a notable difference in the quality of the projection, for the screen is perfectly defined from all parts of the house, and titles are clearer and free from flicker. The inventors believe the perfect freedom from eye strain, film headache and other ills the film viewers are heir to, and this is some consideration.

Edmund Goulding was given a reception at Southampton by the Mayor, and a luncheon at the South Western Hotel in that town. Goulding, who is spending the Xmas with his relatives in this side, was congratulated upon his rise to fame in U. S. A., and the Mayor regretted that conditions over here prevented him (Goulding) attaining his present status in his native country.

On Sunday, Jan. 28, "The Four Horsemen" concludes its record run at the Palace (320 performances). The next day Rex Ingram's Prisoner of Zenda (story a great favorite this side), begins a fortnight's run at that house, and on Feb. 12 "Trifling Women" will be shown. Loew's tenancy of the Palace expires on March 25, of 1923, but his intention is to get another West End House for the showing of the at least 12 of the other "superb" he has on hand.

"Pardoning the bad is injuring the good."—Benjamin Franklin.
1923

Many years ago, a French sculptor, named Rodin, presented to the world what has since been admitted as one of the greatest masterpieces in sculpture—“La Penseur”—“The Thinker.”

This showed a huge bulk of mankind with tremendous muscles, the facial expression indicating his tremendous strain, his evident desire to think.

If it were possible for a replica of this statue to be faced by every important executive in this industry at this moment, it might tell far better than any words can express, what each and every one of importance in this industry should be doing at this moment.

For never in the history of this business has there been such need for serious contemplation, careful consideration and deep thinking as today.

Problems portentous are in sight. There have been expressions voiced within the past few months that within the near period of the next few years there must come inevitably a complete transition in this entire industry. Those who have given expression to this thought are not idle talkers, gadabouts, gossips or the sort that try to make history over a tablecloth at the Astor or the Amoassador. Rather indeed, they are men who have devoted practically their entire lives to pictures, and who have invested therein their all.

This is not the time for preaching. It is the holiday season, and the world is full of good cheer and kindly expressions. But even so, perhaps there is a moment which might well be given to contemplation.

And then what does one see?

The crystal ball of the Eastern seer might answer more prophetically that which baulks the imagination. Because on one side there are strong forces—of exhibitors, who, fearful of their investments, clamor for a release from existing conditions, high rentals and unprincipled methods.

And on the other side there are those who, in production and distribution, lament the attitude of the exhibitor. The chances are that inbetween the two stands the truth. And which of these opposing forces will be honest enough to give ground in the effort to find the truth and profit therefrom, is a question which many men might hesitate to answer.

Somewhere in this chaos stands the Hays organization. Less than a year old, and having accomplished much towards the purpose for which it was formulated, it may, in time, prove the answer. But there are many momentous questions which must be answered. Perhaps, during 1923, the operations of the Hays organization may aid in answering these. Regardless of all other matters, it is important that some organization, some individual, does. Because, unless some of these problems are thrashed out and satisfactorily adjusted, there can be neither peace nor profit in an industry which, because of its import to the welfare of the world, deserves an understanding satisfying and comprehensive.

There are within this business intelligence and brains enough to meet any existing problems of any industry. But the ugly head of the serpent of distrust is ever-present in this one. It would seem, therefore, that the first duty of every thinking individual either interested in production, distribution or exhibition should be to make, during 1923, a man-size honest-to-God serious effort to kill off that distrust. Then perhaps it will prove a "Happy New Year.”

DANNY.
Never So Optimistic

The large number of big pictures put on the market at the opening of this season has done so much to revive the enthusiasm of the entire picture industry and has been such a big factor in creating a new interest in the business, that I never was so optimistic as I am now in looking into the year 1923. The industry is on the upturn and is moving swiftly toward a boom period. If all of the motion picture theatres will continue in their efforts toward sending out big productions, and exhibitors, with renewed confidence, exploit these pictures to the limit of their capabilities, 1923, I firmly believe, will be a banner year for picture employment and a year of much entertainment and will be granted that prosperity will continue as long as there is a demand for motion pictures. Motion pictures are a necessity, as I believe the business has learned its lesson and was never in better shape and on a sounder foundation than it now is.

ADOLPH ZUKOR.

The Spirit of Optimism

As to the optimism, Jules E. Mathaun, president of the Stanley Co., (Philadelphia) is the embodiment of optimism, he says: "That there is every evidence that times are growing better. Last year I called attention to the fact that the sales of the pictures have offered much encouragement to the exhibitor. Labor, unrest, re-adjustments, etc., had become necessary, and twisted were necessary. Business was in a state of confusion and in flux, and it was not getting the money to spend as freely as they did during the war. There are no such difficulties today. Today, however, we find that the most of the labor difficulties have been satisfactorily settled and the industry employs many thousand of people upon whom so many hundreds of thousands of people depend for sustenance, has in many and in all American cities, that other than during a period of endeavor which provides for setting back conditions and in that in general it may be said that prosperity if not in its accustomed health, is at least sitting up and taking notice."

"That the prosperity invalid would be well today but for the turmoil and bickerings in Europe is a fallacy. The world will dispise the situation has weathered financial storms before it. It is doing so now and is on the clear road to a better business condition."

And restored business confidence means that people must be buying the pictures they are entailed in the largest numbers and at a minimum of cost. The factories will work at full capacity and we can say. And it is also an established fact that the cinema won and never before taken the interest of a similar public institution. More men, women, and children are going into the motion picture theaters from all parts of America than ever before and why, because of the motion picture industry—are those who are responsible for it being in much condition. The product offered the people are realizing more and more that those who are motion picture devotees are no longer lingers—so long do they visit such as the pictures, because of curiosity to see how the images are reproduced on a screen. In the fact, the maker of pictures, the one who produces the pictures today want the better kind. They do not want the better imitation of a stage play, or a novel, but a creation of the cinema that is characterized and substantially a work in art and not dumated novels and plays. With this in mind the producers have set new standards for excellence in their output for 1923, and none of these have lived up to the requirements of a 'better picture.'

Lowr Optimism

Expressing the most optimistic views for the health and wealth of the New Year, and making business disturbances to a ship adrift without a rudder, Marcus Loew, president of Loew's, summed up the prospects for 1923.

"The theatrical business is approaching normalcy, and with it a period of growth. It is a stage in a long series of stages of which we hear so much about, it is fast reaching a stage of development of a story to the screen." He says.

J. D. WILLIAMS.

The Coming Year

Optimism the Keynote—General Impression That 1923 Will Prove Profitable

Excellent

The outlook for 1923 is indeed most excellent.

ROTHAEL.

Handle Business for the Masses

As for the outlook for 1923 I can only repeat what I have had to say before on this subject. If we hold in mind that this amusemen of ours was intended for the masses and it in consequence we try to so handle this amusement that it is available for the masses then I shall not only for 1923 but for all the years to come look forward to keeping this game of ours in the forefront of the amusement line.

ROBERT LIEBER.

Sees No Great Change

I cannot foresee any great change, except a further stabilization of the merit system of renting and buying pictures, and a reduction in the number of pictures that will be made.

AL. LICHTMAN.

Unusually Optimistic

Never before in the history of motion pictures has the industry stood on such solid foundation as it does today. This is why I look forward with unusual optimism to the coming year. I said one year ago that the salvation of the motion picture industry lay in the making of bigger pictures—pictures bigger in the world of imagination and in drawing power. Today I repeat that assertion, and even go further than before. The public is eager to see pictures of a new standard and will be satisfied with nothing less.

JESSE L. LASKY.

Business Should Improve

According to U. S. Commerce reports, according to dalton's Statistics, judged by all barometers, business should improve and a real wave of prosperity is due to hit the country sooner or later. Of course, the European situation asserts itself in a favorable or semi-favorable light. Inasmuch as the picture industry is not a basic industry, but is one that is affected by the fundamental industries, the motion picture industry will reflect the prosperity that follows in the wake. Car loadings have nearly doubled, steel mills are working, coal mines are operating again and a firmer tone of confidence prevails.

ELMER L. PEARSON.

Factory System Pictures Through

The outlook for 1923, to my mind, indicates that the "factory system" of production which now weights so heavily upon this industry, will be superseded by more consistent methods whereby individual producers from various sources will find their way to the theater-public market on a basis that is absolutely equitable to both producer and exhibitor.

W. W. HODKINSON.

Be Optimistic

If the industry takes the same medicine for 1923 that it took for 1922, the world will have to be hopeful and profitable. We were in the doldrums we took ourselves by the boot strap, figuratively speaking, and lifted ourselves out by the simple expedient of having faith in ourselves and in the mission of the movies in entertaining the American people. We refused to admit that times were bad and, miraculously enough, they became better.

1923 will be much better than 1922 if we only think it. This is no reason in the world why it shouldn't be better.

DIRECTION...........Good; keeps up even comedy pace all the way; stays a trifle too long on one idea occasionally

EXTERIORS ...................... Few
INTERIORS .................... Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY............ Sure-fire comedy
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.... About 6,000 feet

Harold Lloyd’s latest isn’t another “Grandma’s Boy,” but it is another sure-fire comedy number that sounds a merry round of laughter and certainly sends them out happy. At least it should judging from the reception “Dr. Jack” is getting at the Strand where it will be held over for a second week. And it wasn’t only the holiday youngster crowd at the Strand that did all the laughing. Everyone seemed to thoroughly enjoy the antics of Dr. Jack, another of Lloyd’s excellent comedy roles in which he lives up to his reputation for drawing laughs and satisfying a public out for enjoyment and a cheerful entertainment.

Lloyd’s current release doesn’t contain as good comedy material or as clever humorous situations as did “Grandma’s Boy.” In this one he seems to go in more strongly for laughable nonsense and rather a good deal more slap-stick than usual. There are new and original gags as well as some “repeaters.” For the most part Fred Newmeyer has handled the material to advantage. The only objection is that where they bring in a new idea, they keep it up too long and lessen the strength of it as a laugh-getter. This is particularly true of the episode in which Lloyd masquerades as a hunch-back lunatic in an effort to provide excitement thereby proving his theory that the sick-little-well-girl can be cured of an imaginary illness through excitement. At first there is a genuine “kick” in this and it sends them into roars but it runs into so much footage that it hurts the value of the idea as a whole.

Some of the best stunts are the bit played by Lloyd and the freckled face kid who plays “sick” because he doesn’t want to go to school; the poker game in which Lloyd slips cards to each of the players and they bet their coats off and later find they all hold the same hand; the masquerade in which Lloyd imitates a quick-change artist by playing a dual role and the consultation where Lloyd examines the pretty patient and accidentally kisses her.

"Dr. Jack" doesn’t contain much of a plot but it has plenty of fast-moving incidents and laughable situations that make it a desirable box office number and Harold Lloyd can be counted on to send them out satisfied. Mildred Davis is the pretty heroine and the cast, including two colored players, helps Lloyd to get the fun over.

Lloyd Offers Another Box Office Attraction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Lloyd’s latest promises to be another box office clean-up and it only remains for you to get it and then count your money. It can’t fail to come rolling in because after “Grandma’s Boy” they are all on the lookout for Lloyd’s next. It’s ready and don’t miss it. "Dr. Jack" may not be as good as “Grandma’s Boy” but, to quote one of the newspaper reviewers, “what else is or has been?” It’s a good thought. Lloyd has made more consistently rapid strides after the fashion of Dr. Coue’s prayer, than probably any other artist. And he’s holding on to the reputation with “Dr. Jack.” Lloyd’s name should be enough for exploitation but if you want to make a splash it will be easy. Pathe’s press book has any number of ideas, the one about the prescription being particularly worth while. Posters and stills of the star and his goggles and the title of this one will be sound advertising and you can make your promises any way you want.
Contains Good Audience Appeal With Comedy Business They Will Like

"THE FLIRT"
Jewel-Universal

DIRECTOR ....................... Hobart Henley
AUTHOR ......................... Booth Tarkington
SCENARIO BY ................... A. P. Younger CAMERAMAN .................... Charles Kaufman
AS A WHOLE ........ Undoubtedly a good audience picture; a nice mixture of comedy, human interest and flapper love STORY .......... Has some effective comic and heart interest situations and at times makes for unusual entertainment

DIRECTION ........... Fairly slow moving in early reels; takes too long to establish a premise and get things going

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... First rate

LIGHTINGS .................... Good

PLAYERS ............. Eileen Percy splendid type for flapper; George Nichols fine as the father; others who do satisfactorily are Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd Whitlock, Edward Hearn and Buddy Messenger

EXTERIORS .............. All right

INTERIORS ..................... Fair

DETAIL ....................... Suffices

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl's desire for luxury causes her father's arrest in swindle into which girl has brought him through forged signature

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 8,000 feet

There is considerable that is interesting and entertaining in "The Flirt" and there are also sequences that fall short of entertainment, but on the whole, it is a satisfying audience picture and undoubtedly will appeal to a big majority of picture patrons. Booth Tarkington has taken an interesting family group; his characterizations are good and there is undoubtedly a good deal of truth in the idea presented—that modern parents are too lenient with their children. It is nicely worked out with a careful blending of heart interest and comedy that gives the picture a definite value as an audience attraction.

"The Flirt," a pretty young girl who rules her family and the young men of the town will most likely prove popular with the younger element everywhere. The part is splendidly handled by Eileen Percy who is particularly well suited and fitted to the role. There are probably a number of families who will appreciate the story and may have a "flirt" of their own and there are many mischievous young brothers such as the one portrayed by Buddy Messenger, a capable younger though a trifle too self-conscious at times. The antics of Buddy who is thoroughly well acquainted with his sister's methods of "stringin' the poor goofs" along affords much of the feature's amusing bits. Some of the heart interest touches come about through the sympathetic character played by Helen Jerome Eddy in one of her familiar ugly duckling parts. She is in love with Edward Hearn but sister Eileen vamps him away from her.

Henley's character development is well done but he has not always handled the material to the best advantage.

Story: Jim Madison was honest and easy going so it wasn't surprising that his young daughter Cora dared to do the things she did. She flirted with everyone and finally was persuaded by a stranger in town to rope her father into some fake stock company. How Cora rides Dad into a jam, loses her fiancé and young Jim Madison comes to the rescue, completes it.

To All My Friends—

In the profession, among the exhibitors and in the vast army of motion picture lovers, I extend my sincerest wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year.

A Particularly Appropriate Picture For Family Trade
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"THE FLIRT"
Jewel-Universal

An atmosphere that is more or less real, some first rate comedy business and an attractive flapper heroine are the three things that make "The Flirt" a first rate audience picture that will undoubtedly send them out satisfied most any place. An over crowded Broadway holiday audience seemed to get a lot of enjoyment out of it and it looks as though the comedy sequences will get over very well.

The recent popularity of the flapper should be another inducement and there are any number of exploitation angles that might get them interested. Appeal to the parents from their standpoint, and to the younger element, on the other hand. A cartoon prepared for advertising the picture, "When 'The Flirt' comes to town," should attract considerable attention. Use stills of Eileen Percy and let them know about her mischievous young brother, played by Buddy Messenger. Helen Jerome Eddy's name can also be used.

DETAIL .........Good; some titles particularly good CHARACTER OF STORY..............Broke, after the death of his father, son gains wealth in oil field, returns to home town and has a lot of fun pretending he is a failure
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..........7,814 feet

Even though they may know just what is going to happen, once Alfred Green steps aside from establishing a small town atmosphere and introducing the characters, and the fact that it is a good deal of hokum at that, there is a pretty safe bet that the big majority of any audience will go out fully satisfied and pleased with "Back Home and Broke." It is amusing, small town stuff that makes for a first rate bit of entertainment regardless of some fault that may be found with it as to logic, plausibility, some lack of originality, or whatever they may choose to "pick" on. But, on the whole, it satisfies and it's a ten to one shot they will get a real thrill out of the surprise Tommy springs on the townspeople by presenting himself as the money king Dupont Keene—after he has purchased the whole town while they all thought him "broke."

Even though the audience is "in" on the secret of Tommy's financial capacity, they have had plenty of opportunity to harbor a fine grudge for the single track minds of the small towners and the walloper that hero hands them in his plan to make them realize their smallness, is going to give them a lot of pleasure. The Rivoli crowd seemed to take Tommy's troubles right to heart and that is what will probably happen with many audiences.

And Meighan's admirers will surely like the part he plays in this. The star makes a good deal of the role which fits him to a "T." Meighan might like to know that one of his admirers, in the Rivoli audience, actually thought he wasn't bad looking even in reality. That's what Tommy gets for coming to New York and appearing on the street without a disguise. Lila Lee is pleasing as Meighan's leading lady and there are a number of unusually interesting characterizations among those playing the towns folk. One thing especially commendable about the picture is the fact that Meighan's mother, played by Maude Gordon, doesn't neglect her appearance even when she's so poor, they take her piano away from her. Incidentally, the Steinway, comes in for a neat bit of advertising in the title that reads: "Mother, I'll buy you a house with fifty rooms and a Steinway in every room." There is a lot of good humor in the titles as well as in the pictures. Alfred Green supplied a good production and made a nice entertainment. George Ade can write some more stories for Meighan.

Should Send Them Out Satisfied and Well Pleased With the Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

They should get a lot of fun out of "Back Home and Broke" and it is a suitable offering for any audience. You can make some promises for the laughs contained in it and you might also say that it is a little different from many of the previous "small town" stories that have been pictured. And where Tommy Meighan is popular, you can make an extra fuss about it and promise them they'll like the star and the picture too.

Let them know George Ade wrote the story and if they liked the last one, "Our Leading Citizen," which he wrote especially for Meighan, be sure to use his name with "Back Home and Broke." Catchlines with the title will give an idea of the story but it might prove more effective to get them interested through a teaser campaign. The posters are very good and the press sheet offers some good exploitation ideas.

DETAIL All that is necessary
CHARACTER OF STORY War hero returns to find his ranch in other hands; he fights the new "gang" and wins the fair owner
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION 4,070 feet

Tom Mix puts over another of his stunt pictures in "Catch My Smoke," a popular type of western that usually identifies Mix as the star. The story is of the usual order with the action composed of fights, spills, chases and a good variety of stunts supplied by Mix.
Of course, there is the customary romantic twist and hero saves the girl's life when she is being carried off by the villain. The plot runs pretty true to form and they haven't tried to disguise its familiarity. Nevertheless, the picture supplies the action and thrills that lovers of westerns demand, so for them it fills the bill adequately.

This time Mix is a returned war hero who left his horse and ranch in the care of a friend while he was over "doing his bit." From the window of the train which is bringing him home, Tom sees Tony giving his pursuers a chase. Eventually hero learns that his ranch is in new hands and a girl the owner. Without telling her who he is, Tom gets a job on the ranch and the action starts.

Tex Lynch, foreman, sees in Tom a menace to his scheme to get the ranch away from the girl. There's a fight right off when Tom saves a youngster from being branded by Lynch's gang. Tom does some scouting around and learns that Lynch has found oil in one of the pastures, hence his desire to own the ranch. Caught eavesdropping, Tom is shot by Lynch and thrown down the mountain, dead, as Lynch thinks.
Later, when Lynch finds that Tom is still alive and headed for the sheriff's office, he rounds up his band and there is one of those "knock-'em-dead" fights in which Tom battles with about ten cowboys at once.

This is the beginning of the fast action and results in a big chase with Lynch kidnapping the girl, Tom's rescue and another battle, the subsequent chase and a lot of good stunts and thrills aboard a moving freight where the fight finally ends with Tom victorious, of course. Mix works hard throughout and manages to keep his gloves on the whole time. The star's horse, Tony, has a bit to do and the cast, including Lillian Rich, as the lead, is well suited.

A Fine One for Star's Admirers and Where They Like Westerns

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Where they like the Tom Mix type of action and thrills you can rest assured "Catch My Smoke" will satisfy. There is a good crowd that come out for this sort of western and probably Tom Mix is the best known entertainer for this particular kind of action.
He injects plenty of thrills and action into his latest and offers some new stunts such as leaping, on horseback, into a box car of a moving freight.

There is a 3 column cut showing Mix, riding Tony, and holding a girl as he jumps from one car to another of the freight. This should get them interested and you can certainly promise plenty of thrills.
Where the star is popular you won't have to do very much extra talking to get them in, but you can let them know it is another good entertainment with Mix contributing most of the excitement.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 4,508 feet

"The Flaming Hour" is an unpretentious number, but offers a satisfying short entertainment that will probably please an average audience. It is nicely told and the interest pretty well sustained. Then it is in less than five reels and moves along at a pace that builds steadily towards a climax, which is somewhat unusual and for those ever in search of something new in the way of a thrill, it will be agreeably received.

Director Sedgwick hasn't wasted footage in unnecessary detail, but at the same time things are entirely comprehensive. Occasionally incidents in the development are not wholly plausible, but he gets over them rather carefully and without drawing attention to the weak spots. There is no especially strong bid for suspense except a slight attempt in the climax when it looks as though the girl and her father are destined to perish in the explosion of the munition plant in which they are trapped by the villain.

Fires and explosions are popular forms of thrills in recent pictures. This one varies slightly from the others in that it is a powder plant that supplies the thrills. The explosion of rockets and sky pieces of different kinds give the picture a fairly spectacular finish and it has been rather well handled.

The story doesn't give Mayo a vehicle as good as some of the others he has had recently, nor does it require a great deal of him, but it will undoubtedly please his admirers. The supporting cast is adequate though not unusual. Helen Ferguson is not an especially attractive lead for Mayo. Charles Clary is the villain and Melbourne McDowell is the only other of importance.

Story: Bruce Henderson, manager of the powder and fire-works plant of Danby & Son, is in love with Danby's daughter, Lucille. Danby discharges Bruce after an argument and Lucille leaves with him. They are married. Later they quarrel and part. Lucille goes back to her father, while Bruce takes the downward path. Eventually he learns that Mower, who took his place with Danby, is substituting materials and robbing Danby. Disguised, Bruce gets a job in the Danby plant, exposes Mower, is injured in an explosion but saves Danby and Lucille. The reconciliation follows.

Will Suit the Average Crowd and Star's Admirers

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For the average audience this will prove thoroughly satisfying, and if they like Frank Mayo you can count on it pleasing them. Talk about the explosion for the climax, and you might secure a trailer that includes some shots of this. Undoubtedly they would be sufficiently interested to come back for the rest of it. The title displayed with stills of the fire will probably be enough to give them an idea of what it is all about or catchlines such as "Have you a bad temper? It may lead you into a lot of trouble. See what happens to Frank Mayo as a quick tempered employee in a munition plant." Mention Mayo's recent attractions and use his name with the posters available for this attraction.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Sudden prosperity of Hebrew tailor nearly costs him the love of his wife but his friends save her for him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......6,000 feet

There have been other Hebrew comedy dramas similar to "Solomon in Society" but this one only skims over the elements of human interest and comedy found in the others. There is less strength to the situations and less elaboration. In this instance the poor East Side tailor does not struggle for prosperity. It comes quite by accident and he has no unfaithful children to worry him but the apparent loss of his wife's love is used for the chief heart interest touch and the sacrifice of the kindly tailor who is willing to make it possible for her to secure a divorce, may create the sympathetic effect intended. It is not strong, however, possibly because it has not been properly approached from a directorial standpoint.

The humorous business is derived through Solomon's inability to shake off his East Side manners after his entrance into society. He keeps his spoon in his cup while drinking, reads a Yiddish newspaper and commits other breaches of etiquette that are supposed to contribute laughs. They are not always successful, inasmuch as the sort of society represented isn't itself altogether proper in its behavior. For the average audience the picture may offer a satisfying entertainment because they will likely accept the vein of humor and slight pathos that it contains without criticizing the weight of the material but where they are at all critical it will be difficult to please them.

William H. Strauss, as the kindly Jew, gives a first rate characterization that is both convincing and sympathetic. In fact it is his performance that will carry the picture over and where the audience is right for this sort of atmosphere, his work will be sure to please them.

Lawrence Windom provides an adequate production and the direction, on the whole, is satisfactory but not unusual. He doesn't always handle the players to the best advantage. Besides Strauss there is Brenda Moore, as his wife, Nancy Deaver, the girl who brings about a reconciliation and Fred Jones, the Greenwich Village he-vamp.

Story: I. Solomon meets with great success in business but he cannot cope with the society into which his wealth brings him. Gradually he notices his wife's attentions to Orlando. Believing that Rosie wants a divorce Solomon agrees to provide the necessary evidence. How Mary Bell, a movie actress, brings about the reconciliation offers some fair excitement.

Will Do For Certain Audiences or Where They Are Not Too Critical

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't a great deal to promise for this one unless you have a crowd that you know is especially right for this sort of a picture. A Hebrew clientele undoubtedly will be thoroughly well pleased with Solomon and his business ventures so that if you think it will appeal to them, then there is sufficient reason for an effort to put it over.

It may also do for an average crowd that isn't critical. They will find some amusement in it and the characterization of William H. Strauss, which is rather typical, will undoubtedly prove interesting. The title is a poor one and won't mean very much without some explanatory catchlines or accompanying announcements. There are no names well enough known to use except Strauss, who may be remembered.
Very Bright

With all sections of the country making notable strides in the return to normal conditions, and with the situation in every line of business strengthening almost daily, the outlook for the picture industry is brighter than at any time since the year 1921. It is the opinion of the majority of those of us who have knowledge of the plans of producers, the quality of productions being projected, cannot but have confidence that the industry will continue to advance and to win its sphere of influence appropriately.

Every day is given to the high character and substantial nature of the offerings that have marked the opening of the fall season of 1922 will be maintained in 1923, and that the awakened conditions in the agricultural, commercial and industrial fields shall we enjoy our full measure of the general prosperity.

ARTHUR S. KANE.

Sees Bright Outlook

The chap with lots of money at stake in any business who looks for anything other than "better times ahead" comes pretty close to being crazy. Why be licked before you start! This is probably the reason that all statements as to the future are optimistic.

Looking forward to another twelve-month period at this particular time, however, those who have watched the rising and falling barometer in the picture business can prove conclusively that all the dark clouds which have been floating around and threatening to break cannot help but have silver linings.

While picture productions made within the past six months have been so much better than those made in the same season of 1921, there are many indications before that there is simply no comparison. The popularity of the property made photoplay being never questioned. This means that the industry and the business has made more and more strength as the day goes on. The general business conditions have been for a long time. It's been hard to sell shoes, hats and collar buttons—and quite naturally it has been hard to sell motion pictures. The entertainment from every corner of the country comes the positive statement that general business conditions are improving, not slowly, but rapidly. We'll soon be back on an even keel and when we are, the superior merit of the product we are turning out is bound to put the motion picture business in better shape than it has been at any time since its inception.

L. J. SELTZNECK.

Steady Improvement

The film business for 1923 should parallel the trend of general business conditions toward normal. As an indication of the many prophecies in this respect is that there will be no business boom but a steady improvement in the general prosperity. Normal mark and probably above normal during 1923.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Couldn't Be Better

The outlook for 1923 couldn't be better. For one thing the outside business is bright. For another, men, organizations, and policies within this business were never grounded on more solid foundations, such evident good faith, such encouraging ambition to really deliver the goods.

ROBERT E. WELCH.

Moving Picture World.

Not Optimistic

Just ordinary, and possible slump.

E. V. RICHARDS.

Gets Worse

Worse than 1922.

WM. A. BRADY.

Back to Normal

I believe that the picture industry will recover from the after-war depression as rapidly as any other industry in the country. I believe that 1923 will see the industry not only back to normal, but going forward not only on a normal rate, but in the main work of the country but a factor in other channels of American life.

C. C. PETTIJOHN.

Bright

The outlook for 1923 is in my mind very bright.

I recently have compiled not less than 167 of the country's leading producers furnish the proper vehicles I am certain 1923 will be a banner year for the Motion Picture Industry.

JAMES R. GRAINGER.

Hammons' Serious Thought

The outlook for 1923 is bright. One of our representatives, citizens, as loyal to the major portion of the country from coast to coast and everywhere that found the motion picture business had turned the corner and was back on the road in the direction of normal business. I must emphasize my personal belief that exhibitors everywhere are neglecting a vital factor, when they fail to keep their whole show.

One of the greatest merchandisers the country remembers was Marshall Field of Chicago. He made it a business to meet the needs of every other business in every city of the Union. His policy was not to buy or sell articles, but to display that article and to talk about it in his newspaper advertising only associated with kindred goods.

For example, if he were featuring a golf suit, he would also display and talk about other golf accessories, such as golf stockings, golf clubs and other merchandise which was kindred to his feature.

Field well knew that many people would see the golf suit but not be interested because they already had golf suits, but the kindred merchandising that was made available an article—golf suits—to people who required them, but to those who already had a suit be sold other merchandise.

Exhibitors are in exactly the same position. To merchandise has been for a long time. It has been hard to sell shoes, hats and collar buttons—and quite naturally it has been hard to sell motion pictures. The entertainment from every corner of the country comes the positive statement that general business conditions are improving, not slowly, but rapidly. We'll soon be back on an even keel and when we are, the superior merit of the product we are turning out is bound to put the motion picture business in better shape than it has been at any time since its inception.

EARL W. HAMMONS.

Many Problems Yet to Solve

I believe that the year 1923 is going to show considerable improvement over last six months of this year. There is a considerable portion of the United States is still far from normal at the present time. Business can not be called excellent spots. It is going to take another year or two and a half for strictly agricultural territories to come back into their own.

I think the uncertainty of a very bad foreign condition has been somewhat lessened, a fact of small extent determine the rapidity with which the industry and agriculture businesses come back to what we might call a normal basis.

1923 is going to find us with many problems to solve, and these will not be solved except by closer relationship between all branches of the industry—the elimination of dirty politics, and an endeavor to get together on the things that are of mutual benefit or of mutual detriment to all of us.

I believe the thinking minds of the Industry are headed in that direction and both the distributor's side and the producer's and exhibitor's side.

Our progress as an industry during the next year will be determined by the extent of purpose displayed by those who are leaders in the business as far as the Industry itself is concerned within itself.

S. R. KENT.

Old Time Returning

We find exhibitors sprucing up and buying good pictures; we see a return of the old-time enthusiasm. No longer is there a detailed analysis of the condition of the country. It is generally conceded that the industry's prosperity wave is just starting to swell. The old bugaboo of the public losing its interest in the motion picture business has been broken down this past season. The country still likes the screen and I expect 1923 will see them back on the rails in full force.

JOSEPH SCHNITZER.

Expexts Many Good Pictures

I think that the outlook for 1923 is unusual, as it is my belief that there will be more really good pictures made this year than in the previous year and far more pictures with real box office value.

HARRY CRANDALL.

Best Since War Record

The outlook for 1923 is the best since the end of the war era of initiation. The industry is setting down into something like a stabilization. Quality pictures are steadily increasing in number. There is plenty of room for growth in all directions, but I do not believe the condition of the industry is getting better, not worse.

L. W. BOYNTON, Exhibitors Trade Review.

Brains First

For picture men with business brains—success and money.

ROBERT W. PRIEST.

From Chaos to Continuity

A survey of the motion picture industry during the past year will show the readjustment process that, since the war, has been necessary in every line of commercial endeavor. The sound business principles of commerce which are being adapted to are working hard on those who are unable to adjust to this changing process, but are elevating the industry to a plane where it can Rightly be classed with the most stable, most dignified industries of the country.

The public are clamoring for better pictures. The fact that there is a demand for these pictures is a safe guarantee that the demand will be met by the progressive producer who, through the cooperation of the exhibitor can now afford to spend what he thinks best on a story which is being made, and the public will be assured long runs, backed up by exploitation that will work for the producer and the exhibitor of the production.

The exhibitor and the cooperation of others who have been brought into the industry from the outside, are now working the industry into some conditions that are bound to reflect back with golden rays on the coffers of the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor.

MAX GRAF, Graf Prod.

Brighter Than Ever

1923, for our way of seeing things, should be better than ever. The cooperation of the motion picture industry; and the attendance in theaters for the pleasure of the movies is increasing so rapidly that there is reason why the upward trend should not continue in 1923, especially in view of the fact that the various labor situations have been settled and that going to the moving picture theaters has become more or less of a necessity and is no longer considered a luxury.

DEN BLUMENTHAL.

Up to the Industry

1923 will be what we make it. If we show good pictures the public will come, if not our business will be less. The greatest handicap for an exhibitor is the arbitrary sets of prices. Just as soon as the producers sell their pictures on the merit and not try to force them into pictures arbitrarily, just as soon as the exhibitor can select his own pictures from day to day, just as their needs are, we will get to a better basis. If the exhibitor will buy what he needs a large number of success re-leases will go off the market.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH.

Wonderful

Wonderful! Warner Brothers are going to make eighteen master productions. H. M. WARNER.

Looks Better

It undoubtedly looks better because of better business conditions generally. We can only cash in on the public more real value, not in money spent on productions but in a wise choice of what we produce.

Short Stuff

“Around the World in 18 Days”—Universal
Type of production .................................................. 12 episode serial

There is action aplenty in Universal’s latest serial, and the story is a more than usually plausible one for this type of production. It deals with the adventures of Phineas Fogg the 3rd, grandson of the famous globe trotter of Jules Verne fame, in his effort to go around the world in 18 days to get proxies from widely scattered stockholders of an international fuel company, which is headed by Fogg’s sweethearts father. Unless Fogg obtains the proxies in time, Brenton, the vice-president will seize control of the company at the next Board meeting which occurs on the 19th. It is then the first of the month. Brenton wagers Fogg $100,000 that he cannot make the trip in time. Laura La Plante and William Desmond, take the leading roles and accomplish some good serial work. The production has been directed by Reaves Eason from a story by the late George Bronson Howard. There is a good cast which includes William Welsh, W. P. DeVaul, Spottiswoode Aitken, and others.

The action takes place in the largest cities of the world, which in itself is interesting, and as speed is the main essential in the plot, it keeps your interest keyed high practically all the time.

“Dig Up”—Hal Roach—Pathé
Type of production .................................................. 2 reel comedy

Those who like Snub Pollard may find his latest offering entertaining, but he has been seen to much better advantage.

The gags are old stuff and while there are some who still laugh at a rent collector being thrown all over the lot by a gang of tough tenants, it is all in the way he is thrown that gets the laughs. “Dig Up” is amusing in spots. Snub is in love with the landlord’s daughter, Marie Mosquini. Her father plans to get rid of him by making him a rent collector in a tough section called “Paradine Flats,” where “Butch” McKill, Charles Stevenson, maims or murders collectors on sight. Snub visits “Butch” who hands him his card and shows him the door. Putting the card in his pocket, Snub after a scrimmage is knocked out and a policeman, finding him unconscious on the street, with the card in his pocket, takes him to the address on it. This is funny at first, but it is repeated too many times.

“The Educator”—Educational
Type of production .................................................. 1 reel comedy

Credit is due Lloyd Bacon, the director as well as Lloyd Hamilton, for creating something a little different in what without their efforts would have been an ordinary slap-stick comedy. As it stands it is one of the most amusing we have seen in a long time. Hamilton as the sissyfied professor is not a caricature of this type of schoolteacher; he is the schoolteacher. And that’s what makes it so funny. Arriving at the town of Angelville he sees a man being carried by in a stretcher and is informed that it is the last schoolteacher. Just then three more stretchers pass and he is told the men in them are all schoolteachers from Angelville. That’s the beginning, but the entire reel is so filled with laughs that it is one continuous chuckle. Running away from the mob at one point, he hides in a well only to be almost drowned in moonshine which revenue officers pour into it. Upon emerging, everyone in town that he passes sniffs the air and leave whatever they are doing to follow him. Don’t miss this one.

“Glad Rags”—Hunt Stromberg—Metro
Type of production .................................................. 2 reel comedy

Featuring Bull Montana, this comedy will undoubtedly be successful in getting the laughs by one means or another. “Frisco Flash,” a pugilist with a taste for culture, is employed by the head of the aristocratic Bannerman family to put his children under control. “Frisco” takes to luxury like a cat to cream and later re-enters the ring in spangled trunks and a ribbon girdle, meeting defeat on all sides. However, a knock-out blow from his opponent brings him to and he turns defeat into success before leaving the ring. Hughie Fay has directed and has managed to inject a good deal of humor. The supporting cast includes Betty Francis, Otis Harlan, Thomas O’Brien and others.

“The Frog and the Catfish”—Aesop Fable—Pathé
Type of production .................................................. 1 reel animated cartoon

Like a great majority of its predecessors, this Aesop Film Fable is clever and amusing, showing much ingenuity on the part of the artist. Depicting the troubles of Freddie Frog, whose lady love is carried away by a terrible Catfish, it will hold the attention and bring a reasonable amount of laughs.

“Ouch”—Cameo—Educational
Type of production .................................................. 1 reel comedy

There may be those in your audience whose sense of humor will be tickled by seeing a man suffer through an entire reel with a terrific toothache and who will enjoy seeing his efforts to pull out the tooth by every conceivable method, but it is doubtful if women in the audience will like it. Jimmie Adams is the sufferer and Virginia Vance the girl who won’t marry him until the tooth is out.

“Alladin Jr.”—Universal
Type of production .................................................. 2 reel comedy

This is another of the series in which Lewis Sargent is seen as the popular messenger boy. With several of the boys he reads the story of “Alladin and His Wonderful Lamp,” and forthwith he rubs every lamp he sees including street lights and automobile tail lamps. Walking along the street, the real lamp falls at his feet, thrown there by a lady who refuses to accept it as an anniversery present. What happens when the genie appears and gives him three wishes comprises the rest of the action, finally getting him married and unmarried again. And the final shot shows Sargent passing his hat among the boys for payment for telling them such a wopper. Nice, clean little comedy. Should prove mildly amusing.

Pathe Review No. 186
Type of production .................................................. 1 reel magazine

Some wonderful rope climbing at Chimney Rock, N. C. affords a thrill in the opening scenes of this issue. Not to be outdone, Florida natives show how they tame man-eating sharks. In a subject called “Living Paintings” the King of Beasts and his family are seen in different poses. Excellent camera work has been done in securing these shots. The Review closes with scenes from “The City of Watchers,” Bonifacio, Corsica, in Pathecolor.
Short Stuff

Pathe Review No. 1

Type of production.............................1 reel screen magazine

An effective "living painting" of sea gulls opens the reel employing the use of a picture frame to good advantage in showing up the beauty of the shots. Following this, Hy Mayer's Translaugh shows "Faces" of many kinds. Some cute shots of Japanese children come next. Another jump takes you to America and toe-dancing analysis while the colored bit is of scenes on Mediterranean shores.

“A Quiet Street”—Our Gang—Pathe

Type of production...........................2 reel kid and animal comedy

There is some exceedingly cute stuff in this “Our Gang” comedy, and if you have been showing the preceding pictures in this series your folks will be anxious to see this one. Little Mickey Daniels gets in a laugh at the very beginning when he gets another of the gang to pull his loose tooth. The kid ties a string to the tooth and the other end of it to his dog’s tail, but Mickey is afraid and when the dog starts to run, he runs with him, never letting the string get taut enough to pull the tooth. However, the dog chases a kitten and the tooth comes out when Mickey isn’t looking. They then start a show with the tooth as the main exhibit. Later the police are after “Red Mike.” The kids think they are the objects of the police activity and no matter where they run, they meet the cops, who of course pay no attention to them. It is very funny. Finally, to get away, the kids hide in a cell where “Red Mike” is hiding. Mike flies with the dog at his heels and the kids after him. After a mixup with dog, boys and police, the kids find themselves heroes instead of culprits.

“Watch Your Wife”—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production............................1 reel comedy

Paul Parrott in the role of a correspondence school detective tries hard to make this a winner. Those who like him may think he has succeeded. He is sent to the “alimony apartments to get $50 worth of scandal on Mrs. Smith.” How he does his sleuthing equipped with a mirror on a pole, and pillows glued to his feet, and the excitement he causes, comprise the action. It is a fair sample of broad, slap-stick humor.

A Small Town Derby—Century—Universal

Type of production.............................2 reel comedy

Al Herman has directed Johnny Fox and Maudie, the mule, in this two reeler, which has a fair chance of entertaining your folks. Johnny and Maudie attend a small town fair where Maudie drinks all the soda she can get. A pie-eating contest between five small boys will get a laugh as will the bit in which Johnny slaps a lion without looking, thinking it Maudie. A race between Maudie and a horse that has been treated to a drink of hard cider, brings the finish with pep.

“Under Suspicion”—Range Rider Series—Pathe

Type of production...........................2 reel western “Under Suspicion” is up to and possibly a bit ahead of the high standard being maintained in this series. Starring Leo Maloney, who this time has assisted Ford Beebe with the story and direction, it embodies two reels of good western stuff, full of pep and action, that will please those who like this type of entertainment. Maloney, a Texas Ranger, is working as a ranch hand in an effort to discover the root of the “dope” smuggling activity. In the course of events he is mistaken for the smuggler. There is a splendid running fight and a good deal of suspense before the arrival of the ranger chief and triumph for the hero.

Screen Snapshots No. 15—Pathe

Type of production............................1 reel fan magazine

This issue presents among other leading picture favorites, Hall Caine, English novelist, watching the filming of “The Christian” with Maurice Tourneur directing Mae Busch and Richard Dix in the scene. Nazimova and her husband, Charles Bryant, are seen on the beach and an “antique” bit that will surely get a laugh shows a scene in an old film in which Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling and Mabel Normand took part. In the closing scenes, Will H. Hayes is seen greeting Norma Talmadge, Buster Keaton, Conway Tearle, Jackie Coogan and others.
